Doug and Mary Retirement to Lead to U. A.—Paramount Merger by Schenck?

Author Holds Up M-G-M

Hollywood—M-G-M was anxious to produce a talker remake of "The Penalty" during the coming year, with Lon Chaney starred as formerly. Enthusiasm of Chaney and studio execs was at red hot temperature until it was discovered that the author, Gouvernor Morris, was holding the dialogue rights at a reported price of $60,000.

It is said that Goldwyn originally paid about $20,000 for the screen rights to the novel about ten years ago.

Members of Film Colony Keeping Judges on Jump

Hollywood—They're doing a lot of courting these days in the film colony, and it's beginning to look as if the judges won't get vacations.

Clifton A. Edwards, screen and radio entertainer known as "Ukulele Ike," who separated from his wife two years ago, wants a property settlement set aside and to enjoin her from disposing of $150,000 worth of the goods which he bestowed upon her at the altar.

Mrs. Faith Cole MacLean, wife of Douglas MacLean, comedian, is in Reno reputedly to establish a residence preparatory to filing suit for divorce. They've been married fifteen years.

Nils Asther, actor, and his former business manager, J. I. Angus, appeared in court to defend themselves against a suit for $600 filed by Louis E. Heifitz, who alleges that sum is due him for publicity work.

Harold Lloyd testified in Federal Court in the $1,000,000 infringement suit brought by the widow of the late H. C. Witwer, humorist. She charges that he plagiarized her husband's story, "The Emancipation of Rodney," in making "The Freshman."

Harry Langdon is still making daily trips to court in the suit of Thomas O'Brien, who is trying to collect $11,500 from the comedian for alleged alienation of his wife's affections.

Loew Switch to Fox Removes "Speculation"

Transfer of Loew theatre holdings to Fox Film "removes a considerable part" of the former's "speculative attraction," according to a Wall Street paper, which also points out that "Fox Theatres is not likely to show any substantial earnings this year."

Tiffany Execs Wrangling? H—No! All's Rosy

Tiffany executives are looking toward the new season through the proverbial rose-colored glasses, and despite reports, are not engaged in a hot tilt over policy and workings of the organization for 1930-31.

The same yarn had it that Phil Goldstone, production chief, had offered to buy the company outright, and this, too, was branded by the home office as "blah" and "bunk."

Hollywood "Find" Finds Sunrise a Fine Hour—But!

Hollywood—Catherine Moylan, who won the title of "Miss Universe" in the Galveston beauty contest which got her a contract with M-G-M, has been disillusioned already, at least insofar as working hours are concerned.

Miss Moylan came out here expecting to start work in late afternoon or early evening, enabling her to concentrate on morning beauty rests; but imagine her surprise when she was told that she and the sun must rise simultaneously, or else.

Musicians in Pit 6 Hours Daily, Yet Play No Music

Ottawa—An orchestra pit full of orchestra and not a bar of music. Sounds like a riddle, it is, but has this explanation: The musicians at B. F. Keith's are in the throes of a row with Joe Franklin, manager of the house, over wage scales. They demand full time for the summer and prefer to disregard the notice of "services no longer required" handed to them when vaudeville was cut out for the summer.

Fairbanks Eager to Quit; Conflicts With Joe May Change Mary's Mind

Originating in Hollywood and talked about guardedly in New York is the following unconfirmed story about the status, present and future, of United Artists:

That Mary Pickford and Doug Fairbanks, culminating what are perhaps the longest as well as the most successful careers of any two individual performers in the business, have determined to retire, thereby placing complete, active control of the company which they helped to found 12 years ago in the hands of Joe Schenck.

That Schenck will then attempt to work out a deal swinging U. A. into one of the two big company pools toward which the industry is rapidly gravitating. The hunch is that the company around which United will rally is Paramount.

Two More Each, Say They

Officially, both Pickford and Fairbanks declare they hold contracts with United Artists calling for delivery of two more starring vehicles each. At their rate of production, this would keep them actively in production for two more years.

Fairbanks, who has just made a deal with Schenck to appear with Bebe Daniels in "Reaching for the Moon," told Motion Picture News in Hollywood that he would like to retire, that Mary refuses to listen to any such ideas and that she proposes to produce and star for several years more. Doug added that their joint investment in United Artists and residual value in the pictures he and Mary have made would make it obligatory for them to continue for some time. In the meantime, Fairbanks has let out a few members of his production staff until, he says, he is ready to start a picture of his own.

Insiders who purport to be familiar with the United Artists situation declare Mary and Schenck, while openly in accord, have had their differences in matters of management and operation. They trace the condition to a desire on Mary's part to dominate the organization and, if that failed to work out, to keep the control sufficiently split to prevent Schenck or any other individual from becoming the sole power on the throne.

Preparing for Merger

If developments bear out the rumor that Mary is ready to quit, the inference placed on the move is that she is willing to step far enough into the background to permit

LEVEL HEADS ROUND OUT A SQUARE DEAL

THEY sweated and they toiled. Out of the 5-5-5 conferences—squabbles notwithstanding—will emerge a new standard contract if the exhibitors of the nation ratify it. It is this writer's opinion that the approval necessary to make the instrument operative should be forthcoming. The faster, the better.

After all, distributors, bulwarked by the security of their theatre holdings, are cracking the whip. The trade knows, sometimes to its sorrow, that they are in a position to do pretty much as they please. So it is in the matter of contracts. Yet, conferring and battling with Abram Myers, a new draft is being evolved.

Myers has done well in protecting the independents' interests and, while whatever agreement formulating from the meeting will fall far short of the ultimate in buyer-seller pacts, in concept it will be squarer and more equitable than any of its predecessors. Consequently, it rates support.

Sit and Hold Tight

THE jury is still out. And will be for some little time. Therefore, exhibitors, don't get excited about who owns what in the patent fight now raging on several fronts.

De Forest claims one thing and may be right. Western Electric insists its calm remains unruffled. That, too, may be correct. The point for the showman to remember is that his principal job is to keep the box-office flooded with dollars. Which means cobwebs out of his brain and full attention to the many immediate problems at hand. That's a man-sized job these days.

Right Under Their Very Noses

RIGHT here in New York, Paramount Publix, strong plank in the Hays structure, has daily been demonstrating that which the much-advertised advertising code urges not to do.

The theatre is the Rivoli; the picture, "The Bad One," and the display a graphic lesson in choice anatomy-wrestling between Dolores Del Rio and Eddie Lowe.

Yet the purity complex is whipped into a froth and dished out for the newspapers to print and for the ever-watchful reform element to make capital of.

It's amazing how silly this business can be.

One Mind Production

THE Hollywood type of genius: a lone, solitary figure controlling the manufacture of anywhere from thirty to seventy pictures a year. Watching them from the purchase of raw material through the factory and so eventually into distribution.

Little reason production is stereotyped and dull. Little wonder the public is choking in the mastication process. An impossible set-up, yet it persists because the leaders of the business persistently avoid the vision that leads to the light. A change in the system is vitally necessary. Not next year. Today.

The Cowardly Way

DISTASTEFUL stories are reaching New York concerning the tactics used by at least one big chain in annexing new theatres. Gag rule of the most virulent type is the procedure.

The independent exhibitor is being coaxed, then cajoled and finally threatened. He is being told he has to give up—at the chain's price; that if he doesn't, he won't get pictures; that the buyer will build if he can't buy.

And in Washington

FODDER for the official critics of the picture business in Washington. A perfect case of the giant attempting to swallow the pygmy and an excuse to unloose an entirely new flood of agitation against this industry.

As unwarranted as it is stupid, this is the type of business tactics which can engender nothing but hostility and wreak nothing but havoc on the heads of an industry that should know better.

KANN

What's Putting the Skids on Grosses? Bankers Are Preparing to Ask Leaders

Nothing But the Truth

Hollywood—Discovered, an actor who doesn't mind being farmed out to another producer for considerably more than his contracted agreement calls for, without receiving a penny of the boss producer's profit.

Yep, they say that Lew Ayres, said to be in $200 a week class, brought $2,500 per week from Warners, who paid Universal that sum weekly for Ayres' services on a borrowing arrangement. And they say that Lew was tickled to death. Well, maybe.

What a Racket Censors Pull on Portland Indies!

Portland, Ore.—There's always something new in censorship. The latest wrinkle allows pictures to be shown in downtown first runs and bars them from subsequent stands.

The Allied Exhibitors of the Northwest raised havoc in a letter to Mayor Baker. The latter, himself a showman of the good old days before censors and narrow-backed bluenoses, agreed that the independents were fully justified and told them that he would have the city council call the censors "on the mat" for their unfair actions.

The freak practice is a result of censors being sold the idea by downtown houses to await public opinion at the first showing before sharpening the shears, which gives the first runs on the main stem spicy dishes and the indies plates of hash.

Canada Holdouts Holding The Bag in Publix Sale

Montreal—Holders of Famous Players Canadian common who failed to turn in their shares for Paramount Publix stock, following purchase of the Canadian chain by the Zukor organization, are in a sad way.

No trading in the old shares has been reported for some time and in brokerage circles, the belief prevails that the stock can no longer be unloaded.

Paramount now has considerable of F. P. common in its possession, but a number of shares are still outstanding. It looks as if they will remain that way.

Paramount, recently listed on the stock exchange here, is very active, selling currently around 55, or 15 points under the listed price of 70 at which the issue was admitted to trading on May 26.

Jack Oakie's Kin Dies

Kansas City—Mrs. Harriet Jump, 85, grandmother of Jack Oakie, is dead at her home here.

Some Queries, Pertinent and Perhaps Impertinent, Are Heading Industry's Way

Wall Street bankers who have their money invested in the picture industry are asking themselves some questions. A little later on those same questions, plus others which may prove extremely embarassing, will be dumped into the laps of the executives of several leading companies accompanied by a three-lettered word that spells "Why?"

Last year, when talkers were still a box-office novelty, earnings jumped skyward. This year, the bottom has been dented, if not punctured; receipts are off even for the summer and the bankers are on the trail of the reason or reasons why.

After the Lowdown

The financial giants are of the opinion that sound has resulted in a vastly improved entertainment medium. If that is so, they argue, why should business be off this year as against last. The dope, percolating through Times Square from downtown, is that the bankers don't know themselves, but propose to have the executives, whose organizations they are financing, answer the moot question for them.

They have some ideas. One of them concerns the calibre of production, for word has seeped downtown that pictures, in general, are afflicted with too much of the sameness to persistently bring in the public.

Another revolves around showmanship and the whole question of whether or not current regimes are sufficiently strong in manpower to keep their business institutions going at a proper level in profits.

In the meantime, the impression prevails the bankers will be sufficiently chary about new financing until they can reassure themselves that everything is under control.

Paralysis Takes Another Sock at L. A. Exhibitors

Los Angeles—A light outbreak of infantile paralysis in the county of Los Angeles now adds to the woes of local theatre operators. The health department, stating need for great care to prevent general spread of the isolated cases now current, has issued warnings to parents against allowing children to attend large assemblies. This naturally includes theatres, with houses suffering considerably, especially in the neighborhoods.

The unusual number of cases, listed at 60 during the past few weeks, resulted in school authorities calling off graduation exercises in all grammar schools.

No Secret Now

Several years ago Rupert Julian finished the direction of "Merry Go Round" for Universal, after von Stroheim had started the picture. At the time, it was reported that Julian demanded he get no directorial credit if he took over the picture—but when it was completed and proved a success, Rupert dusted off the old horn to broadcast his accomplishments. Now Julian has been signed again by Universal to direct the talker remake of "Merry Go Round," and this time he can take all bows for the production without having Von in the background.

Garbage Cans or No Garbage Cans, "We Want Dough"

This is the time o' year when chains go to work on advertising budgets for their theatres, an operation which usually results in more than one headache—at the home office and in managers' headquarters.

Managers of houses controlled by one of the biggest chains in the country this week received their new 1930-31 figures, which are made up according to the district office's record of the fixed advertising charges against the theatres, plus what is considered a "reasonable figure to be spent as the managers see fit." And, along with the meticulously laid out budget plan appeared this neat little note:

"Your advertising budgets are here!

"Box office results will be the gauge. Whether you spend your budget money on screaming heralds or oil paintings on garbage cans means nothing to us—if the results show at the box-office."

Brutally frank.

Query Why Films Were Not Included in Survey

Washington—Somewhere in the shuffle, motion pictures in particular and amusements at large were left out of the reckoning when Julius H. Barnes, chairman of the National Business Survey Conference, made his report on conditions in 37 important industries.

The report covered May and, in some instances, the first five months of the year. The range of industries ran from electric railroads to shipbuilding, but not a line about pictures.

Doug Receives Tax Rebate

Los Angeles—Board of tax appeals at Washington has notified Douglas Fairbanks that it has granted his tax appeal, which automatically turns back to Doug $385,035 for an overassessment in 1917.

The Insiders' Outlook

RKO is washing up as fast as possible on the franchise plan entered into with Allied States Ass'n, according to the railbirds. There is to be no sudden dropping of the axe, the company figuring exhibitors have the franchise sewed up for five years if they want to hold out and insist that it is carried out.

The gag now is said to be a quiet campaign to secure cancellation. The company is willing to make concessions on the current output to secure release. Franchise holders, wise to the racket, are reported as insisting upon a contract for this year's product as the price of tearing up the franchise. If the company refuses to lay it on the line, so The Insiders hear, the exhib assumes an indifferent air and says in effect, "Let's go through with the franchise agreement."

Remember Chicago?

That franchise enterprise on the part of RKO has been somewhat of a burden from the start, according to dopesters. It will be recalled that the RKO sales force found itself on a sleigh ride when the subject was first presented them at Chicago.

At that time, Lee Marcus, distribution chief, came to the Windy City with a rider which asked the franchise holder to endorse arbitration and to abstain from any attacks upon the Hays organization. It seems that something had happened between Hays and Hiram Brown subsequently to the enthusiastic reception given the plan some time before by the big moguls of RKO. Presented to the Allied group at Chicago, Marcus' rider was given the haha, whereupon he is said to have given the franchise plan a severe lacing before the RKO sales force.

There followed a communication by Abe Myers, Allied chieftain, to David Sarnoff, and the latter is declared to have given prompt and firm instructions to Marcus to go through with the plan as scheduled. This placed Marcus in the predicament of having to resell the franchise plan, after previously unselling his men on it.

Enthusiasm

The RKO force, so it goes, has blinked considerably, wondered what it was all about, and then went home undecided upon just what to do. The natural result would have been apathy in peddling the franchises, and that is exactly what is reported to have taken place. At least RKO did not evidence any enthusiasm over the barnstorming campaign to sell them, as did Tiffany. Now the company is reported pulling up stakes, definitely swinging over to the other side of the fence, for it doesn't take a lot of observation to know that other distributors were plenty peeved over that franchise arrangement.

Possibly some of the first runs that RKO and Tiffany didn't get have a bearing on this. Mebbe so.

Misery Note

WHEN the auditors finished and mopped their perspiring brows, a certain national chain discovered, with a groan, that its loss last week was exactly $480,000.

The week before, the same chain broke even. Two of its first rank executives haven't gotten over the remarkable achievement yet.

And that was over two weeks ago.

When Brains Reel

Hot weather is no time to start a crusade, but this particular Insider has a pet aversion that he's got to get off his chest, regardless of the season.

The other day, in looking through a dictionary (not for adjectives) he came across this definition:

"Selfish or unfair utilization."

And the industry is guilty of it every day.

That sounds like muckraking, but the word defined thusly is exploitation. It also means "to profit illegitimately" and "to draw an illegitimate profit from."

Common usage of the word in this business has given it a lily-white meaning, but Noah Webster differs—and he's the final authority.

If we can get a coupla converts we'll start the crusade against exploiting the word exploitation. We'll even go so far as to suggest the word "promotion" in its place.

Neckers and the B. O.

"People are getting tired of talkers," is the cryptic manner in which a prominent exhibitor leader sums up what he says is one of the principal reasons for the present state of theatre business. Independents, he says, are being killed off at a rapid rate because of the reaction he declares has set in and, being unable to stand the gag of dwindling box office receipts, are being forced to throw up the sponge.

The sacrifice of action in dialogue pictures he ascribes to the feeling on talkers which he declares exists. Patrons also are finding that talkers impose restrictions which they resent. If they carry on any kind of conversation, he declares, "an usher taps them on the shoulder and warns them to desist or take the air." Talkers also have put a crimp in necking in the theatre, he states, "and whether we like it or not, neckers have an important bearing on box office receipts, which are dropping due to the loss of this business."

Every Knock a Boost

A knock, alleged (of course) by the Hays association on a picture evidently is considered a boost out Minneapolis way, judging by the way "White Cargo" is knocking 'em over this week. Played at the Shubert, stock house, which is off the picture house street, and unrefrigerated, the film is clicking big despite the opposition of the Byrd film at Century and Will Rogers in person with "So This Is London."

The theatre is playing up the claim that the picture was banned by Hays as screen material. Newspaper critics are not so hot for the film, but independents recall that they weren't for "Ingagi" either, although that film, declared frowned on by the Hays office, seems to be hitting in the Northwest sector.

What price knocks now?

The Reason Why

A w. k. press agent about town, harassed and verbally mauled by the eccentricities of the man who pays his salary check, talking about Empeenews:

"Know what I like about your sheet?" he said to this Insider.

"No. What?" was the quavering reply.

"Fact that you say in print all the things about this l——y company I work for, but can't afford to say."

Exhibitors Expected To Show Speed in Ratifying "Moral Arbitration" Contract

Different

Atlantic City—"There is a different attitude," was the way one prominent 5-5-5 conferee characterized meetings on the new contract as against the sessions at Chicago two years ago. "At that time," he said, "it was all antagonism, and there was 16 days of fighting tooth and nail. The new deliberations, however, are being characterized by a spirit of fairness and a desire to work for the common good. The contract should reflect this new spirit."

Disputes Slated For New Board Of Conciliation

Atlantic City — Proposition made by Abram Myers that arbitrators be permitted to go outside the terms of the contract in determining the equity of a case was rejected by Sidney R. Kent just before the noon adjournment on Wednesday.

During the recess a compromise plan was prepared to the effect that where a majority of the arbitrators agreed that there were exceptional phases in any case where the contract terms stood in the way of complete adjustment that they recommend to a central court in New York a review of the matter. This court would be composed of two distributors and two exhibitors and a possible fifth member selected as required from outside the industry. Its decision would be final.

Myers said that the language of the substitute was ambiguous. Here a heated discussion took place between Hess and Myers.

At this point one of the bigger distributors sent in word from New York that it would not agree to any proposition which would admit of consideration of matters outside the contract, as that would put the business in the hands of the arbitrators.

During the morning session it was agreed that in arbitrations the members of the board be selected from two panels of ten each with two from each side and that if these arbitrators cannot agree a fifth is to be selected from outside the industry.

A system of compensating arbitrators was agreed upon. Complainants, not members of exhibitor organizations, will be obliged to use the arbitration system without the participation of organization arbitrators, the loser paying the fifth arbitrator's expense.

The final work of the meeting was an agreement to create a conciliation board to adjudicate exceptional cases. This board will be composed of representatives of distributors and exhibitors and on such cases its decision will be final. When a case is before an arbitration board and presents aspects outside the contract provisions, it may either be sent to this conciliation board or automatically go to this board for settlement.

5-5-5 Hurdles Jams and U. S. Contempt Bugaboo In Drafting Pact

Its speedy ratification by 98 per cent of the nation's exhibitors predicted by its sponsors, draft of the new standard license agreement has been completed and soon will be ready for submission to the rank and file of theatre owners. The new agreement will go into effect as soon as ratified and will be retroactive to apply to 1930-31 season contracts.

The new contract, which will establish a voluntary system of arbitration in the industry, virtually was completed Wednesday when representatives of the distributors, the M.P.T.O.A., Allied States Ass'n. and affiliated exhibitors came to agreement upon controversial terms, which had been held over from the conferences of sub-committees of the various groups. The only clause left open is that which seeks to warrant the theatre has paid its music tax. A study of producers' recording contract is to be made to determine phraseology of this point.

Some of the Benefits

Major benefits secured in the new contract by each group are:

Distributors—Return of a system of arbitration.

Unaffiliated exhibitors—Privilege of five per cent cancellation on blocks of 20 without payment for films excluded.

Affiliated exhibitors—Ban on advertising of pictures by subsequent run before completion of showing at prior run, unless subsequent follows prior run house by 15 days or less.

Proceeding warily lest they violate any of the provisions of the Thacher decree alleging a conspiracy in the compulsory arbitration system which the court outlawed, committee members hurdled difficulties and disagreements which at times threatened to break up the conference, to emerge with a proposed standard agreement.

All exhibitors of the United States are to be asked to accept the new agreement, but will not be compelled to do so. If they do not wish to accept the new form, they will be sold pictures on the various individual forms being used today by the respective companies.

Arbitration Optional

No exhibitor will be bound to accept arbitration. If they elect to adopt the standard form, they will have the option of agreeing to or crossing out the arbitration agreement. The distributor is to have a similar option.

Repartee

Atlantic City—First runs are more ethical in their advertising than subsequent runs, declared Ed Schiller of Loew's at the 5-5-5 confab.

"Sure," replies Al Steffes, Northwest exhibition leader, "there are fewer of them."

Wants Indictments

Washington—Indictment of all participants in the 5-5-5 conferences held this week at Atlantic City has been demanded of the Dept. of Justice by Frank J. Rembusch, Indiana exhibitor, according to information received by Motion Picture News. His complaint to the department contends, it is understood, that the conference violates the Thacher decree, which ruled the arbitration system in the industry illegal. Officials of the department decline to comment on the Rembusch demand, for complaints to the department are not made public.

Way Cleared for Distributors to Obtain Deposits

Atlantic City—Fearful of violating any provisions of the Thacher decree restraining compulsory arbitration or any concerted effort which might have the effect of compulsory arbitration, the contract committee declined to consider a deposit clause for exhibitors who refuse to agree to arbitration. No mention of deposits will be made in the contract.

Exhibitor members of the committee, however, admit the right of the individual distributor to demand a deposit to insure fulfillment of contract, as is being done under the varied forms of contract which have been used since the arbitration system was outlawed. This system will be continued by distributors, acting individually and demanding deposits in individual cases as they see fit.

Distributors are enabled to write in a deposit clause in their individual contracts through the right given them by the contract committee to add clauses which shall not be inconsistent with the provisions of the standard license agreement.

Block System Demanded By Exhibs, Kent Avers

Atlantic City—Exhibitors want pictures sold under the block booking system and wouldn't let distributors sell them any other way, according to Sidney Kent. Of the 1,250 accounts sold on the new Paramount contract, only five have declined to contract for the unnamed 10 pictures on the program, he said. Paramount gave exhibitors the option of taking or refusing the pictures which were not listed in the announcement. Kent declared that five per cent of the nation's exhibitors would not support any action against the block booking system.

Arbitration by "Moral" Mode Is 5-5-5 Solution

Atlantic City—Moral arbitration in the industry, agreed to by the 5-5-5 conferences and embodied in the new standard license agreement, will be conducted as an experiment to determine its effectiveness.

"We are willing to at least try voluntary arbitration, and if it's no good we'll junk it," Sidney Kent, sponsor and chairman of the contract conferences, said.

The system provides for a board of four members in each key city, two to be chosen by the distributors and two by the exhibitor, and the four to select a fifth arbitrator in case of deadlock. Preference of the Allied States Ass'n group for a 1-1-1 system provided a near deadlock Tuesday, which was broken on Wednesday, with the board of four members agreement. Distributors opposed the 1-1-1 system as presenting danger of professional arbitrators, pointing out that the third member would decide practically all cases, as the other two would be in effect advocates of their respective litigants.

Theatre Voting Unit Plan Gets Biechele Praise

Atlantic City—Revision of memberships of the Kansas and western Missouri exhibitor unit to make the theatre the unit of voting and the holder of membership rather than the exhibitor will greatly strengthen and otherwise benefit the organization, declares R. R. Biechele, veteran former president, who is an M. P. T. O. A. contract committee member.

The change of the organization's operating plan was made at the association's annual convention held recently at Topeka. The new policy assures the organization of the financial support of the chains, as well as makes available the services of chain managers, a number of whom are prominent in community and exhibitor affairs. Managers now are classed the same as independent exhibitors, so far as the organization is concerned.

Still a Nickel

Atlantic City—Texas still has a number of theatres which charge an admission of five cents for kids, according to Col. H. A. Cole, head of the Texas exhibitor unit. These houses are scaled at five and 15 cents, he says. He put up an argument for retention of the kid scale at the contract conferences, with result that the dime minimum applies only to adults.

Seek Dignified Checking Plan, Kent Declares

Atlantic City—Distributors are seeking to work out efficient machinery for the checking of percentage engagements, but are meeting with considerable difficulty in mapping a system which will prove satisfactory to them and to exhibitors, according to Sidney R. Kent.

The present system, he says, is "objectionable both ways," distributors having a hard time obtaining checkers who are honest, personable and who will keep secret the information received. Plan to employ expert accountants for the purpose struck a snag when the accountant firms declined to guarantee service the first three months of the year, when they are busy on annual audits of commercial firms. Distributors, Kent says, can not work on a nine-month schedule, but will employ accountants whenever possible and practical.

A dignified plan of checking, which will meet the approval of distributors and exhibitors is sought, according to Kent, who declares a common sense handling of the problem is essential. He declares exhibitors justified in their protests against evils of the present system, particularly the divulging of information and conduct and appearance of some checkers.

The new contract is to carry a warranty by distributors that the information received by checkers is not to be divulged except to the distributors. Violations will be handled by arbitration.

Universal, it is said, has abandoned plans to employ the Burns Detective Agency to check its percentage runs. Exhibitors were reported resentful of such a set-up.

Warners, 1st Nat., Block Ousting Of Score Charges

Atlantic City—Score charges, right or wrong, are a matter of company policy and cannot be eliminated by an industry contract. If exhibitors want to "get somewhere" in their campaign to eliminate score charges, they should make representations to each company direct. Score charges are gradually dwindling and dying out, so that the matter may be expected to right itself.

These were the conclusions made by the contract committee in passing over the controversial question. Exhibitors, affiliated and unaffiliated, denounced the segregation of score charges as unfair, but admitted that the refusal of Warners and First National to abandon the score charge, collected by Vitaphone, blocked other distributors in seeking universal abolition of the charge.

"Leave Warners and First National out of the contract if they won't co-operate on this," was the suggestion made by W. A. Steffes of Minneapolis. No action was taken in the matter, the exhibitors indicating they may ask each company for a declaration of company policy on the subject of music scores.

Contract "Trade" Skeleton Rattles In Confab Closet

Atlantic City—That "trade" on arbitration made by the contract committee at Chicago proved something of a skeleton in the closet which rattled ominously at the 5-5-5 conferences, precipitating heated discussion on the subject.

Members of the Allied group denied they had endorsed the old arbitration system at the Trade Practice Conference, stating that they endorsed "an," not "the," arbitration system as a fair trade practice. At the Chicago meeting, the exhibitors pointed out, they agreed to a retention of the arbitration system in the contract in return for proposed financing of exhibitor organizations by distributors. This plan never was carried out. The subject led to heated discussion between H. M. Richey, Michigan, and Gabriel L. Hess, the latter at one point calling Richey a liar. Abram F. Myers, Allied head, who at the time was chairman of the Trade Practice Conference, denied he had advised the exhibitor group in its deliberations on the contract.

Exhibitors to Know When Films Ready Under Plan

Atlantic City—Exhibitors will know just when they may play a picture under the new contract, which specifies that a picture must be dated, played or paid for within 90 days after availability. After that, time elapsed eats into the theatre's protection time, but in no case, in the absence of a playing arrangement, is the time limit to exceed 120 days.

Miller Wants Overloading Code

Atlantic City—"We have a production code and an advertising code and other codes are being framed. Why not a code of buying and selling to eliminate the practice of overloading the little fellow through the all or none policy, while allowing the chains to pick their product?" That was the declaration of Jack Miller, Chicago, during the contract meetings. "Forcing clucks on the little fellow is unethical."

Miller insisted that in cities where an affiliated chain operates, the subsequent runs be relieved of company pictures which its own theatres do not play.

"If they are so lousy your own houses won't play them, why force them on us?" he demanded of distributors. No action was taken on his demand.

Unethical Ads by Subsequent Runs Are Outlawed

Atlantic City—Suburban houses have the right to try to keep people in their neighborhoods, just as first runs have the right to try to bring them downtown, provided advertising used is ethical and fair.

Subsequent runs must not advertise, except in the theatre, pictures being shown by a prior run, unless the prior run's protection is 15 days or less. This fixing of a time limit is included in a clause of the new contract. Violation calls for arbitration action or cancellation of the contract. Exhibitors are not precluded from advertising product they have bought, but are not to do so unethically.

The fight on time in which a subsequent run may advertise a coming attraction during a prior engagement for a time threatened to deadlock the contract meetings, with the affiliated and unaffiliated exhibitors at odds on the subject. The affiliated, through E. A. Schiller, contended the first run is entitled to advertising protection, and the independents insisting that the 15-day leeway was essential to conduct of their business.

The chief difficulty was the handling of penalties for exhibitors who decline arbitration, but this was solved when the cancellation proviso was made subordinate to arbitration rules where they apply. The solution was suggested by Abram F. Myers after hours of discussion which consumed a large portion of the first two days' meetings.

The clause hits particularly at the advertising of films by subsequent runs calling attention to the lower admissions to be charged, when such advertising is used before the end of the prior run.

Overbuilding and Zoning Referred To Arbitrators

Atlantic City—Zoning and over-building are matters for arbitration boards to consider, so will not be embodied or disposed of in the new contract, the 5-5-5 conference decided in passing up these subjects after brief discussion.

The only principal point at issue between distributors and the Allied group is the question of a national appeal board to arbitrate disputes on the two subjects. Otherwise, the machinery sugested is being set up throughout the country, Gabriel L. Hess pointed out. Zoning agreements already have been made at Los Angeles, Detroit and Kansas City.

Both Hess and S. R. Kent denied any bad faith on the part of distributors in going ahead with zoning, while the subject was pending before the adjourned conference meetings, stating that the step was necessary in getting the new selling season under way.

Check and Double Check

Atlantic City—Something new in checking percentage runs has been introduced in Michigan, according to H. M. Richey. One checker is employed as an auditor to keep track of the number of tickets sold, the other as a spotter to keep the checker honest.

Portland Two Bit Houses Need Help But Chains Balk

Portland—Although consensus of opinion discloses a belief that 25 cent houses should be given more consideration, chain representatives here are holding out for a 56 day clearance, while independents and distributors demand a 45 day limit on protection. The members of each are reporting back to their groups in an effort to reach agreement on zoning of this territory.

Thirty exhibitors and distributors meeting here named a committee of three each from independents, chains and distributors. The meeting patterned its proposed schedule in part after the Los Angeles plan, as exclusively published by Motion Picture News. V. B. Kenworthy, Albany, Ore., exhibitor, was chairman of the meeting.

Seattle—No meeting on zoning has been scheduled here.

Jersey Exhibitors Plan Appeal for U. S. Aid

Atlantic City—New Jersey exhibitors intend to go through with their fight to secure Federal relief from what they term the unreasonable protection given circuits of the state, they emphasized at their convention here instructing officials to proceed. The matter is to be laid before government officials and the Federal grand jury. The convention here accepted Joseph M. Seider's determination to withdraw as president and elected "Sig" Samuelson to the post and as a director of Allied States Ass'n. Other officers are: Peters Adams and Sam Warbalow, vice-presidents; Frank Warren, treasurer; Henry Nelson, secretary; Thornton Kelly, alternate to Samuelson on Allied board.

5% Cancellation Privilege Won By Independents

Atlantic City—Waiver by Col. E. A. Schiller of Loew's and Sam Dembow of Publix of their demand that all exhibitors be treated alike in the matter of eliminations paved the way for a five per cent cancellation privilege without payment for exhibitors whose average rental is $250 or less.

His action climaxed a fight on the subject which for a time threatened either the withdrawal of the cancellation clause in all contracts or breakdown of the conference.

The independents had begun to suspect that an act was being staged, probably for the purpose of eliminating any cancellations. A straight five per cent cancellation on all contracts for blocks of 20 pictures or more had been agreed to tentatively on Monday, but on Tuesday Sidney Kent announced that distributors in New York, while wanting to help the small exhibitor, were averse to a straight cancellation clause for all theatres. The position was that the larger houses' buying power made up the difference. The suggestion was to apply the clause on contracts for theatres whose average rental is $150 or less.

Schiller Drops Objection

Schiller charged this was unfair discrimination against the larger exhibitors, but after argument and the raising of the ante to houses whose average rental is $250, waived his objections.

The original clause was adopted as a compromise after independent exhibitors had asked for a 10 per cent elimination privilege, claiming it essential to operation of small theatres. They declared the selectivity granted to big houses and circuits should be extended to them, rather than "competition shut off" through all-or-none sales policies.

Under terms of the clause, the exhibitor pays for the pictures cancelled and the amount is rebated when the contract is completed.

Boleslavsky Switches

Hollywood—Securing release of his term contract with Pathe, Richard Boleslavsky has signed with Columbia to direct for that organization. His first assignment will be direction of "The Return of the Lone Wolf," which will feature Bert Lytell.

Cancellation Privilege Ignored

Atlantic City—Few exhibitors took advantage of the cancellation clause in the standard contract, sales managers point out. Under terms of the contract, the exhibitor was privileged to cancel ten per cent of the pictures on the contract, by paying one-half the rental of films cancelled, provided he bought the entire output offered by the distributor.

Not ten pictures were cancelled last year by Paramount accounts under terms of the contract, and M-G-M and United Artists had few cancellations, it was stated.

Exhibitors countered with the declaration "the little fellow" couldn't afford to pay the 50 per cent film rental in order to shelve pictures and charged that some salesmen sold only 51 pictures included in blocks of 52, in order to deprive the exhibitor of his cancellation privilege.

Inside Stuff on The Five-Fivers' Big Conference

Atlantic City.

SIDNEY KENT was in the pink, so far as humor was concerned, and got off a number of wisecracks. Once when the argument over unethical advertising was at its height, he warned the boys it still was a meeting and not a dog fight. He and Jack Miller had a number of tilts, all good-natured, of course.

Abe Myers presented a summery appearance decked out in the best Palm Beach manner. He remained quite cool throughout the meetings.

M. A. Lightman surely put up plenty of battle for the rights of the little fellow. M. A.'s favorite brand is O. P. (Other People's) cigarettes.

That matter of advertising by subsequent runs while pictures are playing a prior run proved a hard nut to crack and precipitated an argument between Ed Schiller of Loew's and "Big Buck" Steffes of Minneapolis.

Up to that time, Al had surprised every one by remaining so quiet. "I believe he's turning out to be a lawyer," was the way one confreree put it.

The sessions showed real speed Monday morning, disposing of 17 pages of contract provisions. Monday afternoon, however, a snag was hit on unethical advertising, and after a four-hour discussion Kent suggested the gang cool off and sleep on the subject, bringing it up again Tuesday.

Phil (Pathe) Reisman's company hasn't any theatres and certainly would profit if exhibitors won their fight to eliminate all pictures shelved by affiliated theatres. However, he saw the impracticability of it and fought the matter from the standpoint of industry good.

Felix Feist was on his toes whenever a controversial point arose, and usually had some really constructive advice to offer for solution of the problem at hand.

There was real tension when the argument started over the "trade" made on the standard contract at the Chicago sessions, H. M. (Michigan) Richey and Gabriel L. Hess got into a real argument as to whether exhibitors endorsed arbitration at the time, so much so that it was decided to send to New York for the minutes of the contract meetings to determine who was right.

"If we're going to make speeches, I'm going to make one," was Hess' rejoinder when it was suggested that the conference was getting off the subject and feeling becoming bitter.

"We'd better be careful or we'll be telling what we think of each other," Kent observed, and Jack Miller called it a "sleigh ride" to get him off the subject of cancellations. "We don't buy pictures with guns in Chicago," was another of Jack's sallies.

Allied got big hearted and offered to compromise on a 10 per cent elimination without payment, but this was clowned down.

Herman Blum of Baltimore said he wanted a contract fair enough so that exhibitors "won't have to run out on it." Gabriel Hess then asked him to cite what was unfair in the old contract, but some "Why go into all that?" rejoinders ended that.

Jay Emanuel, publisher of "The Exhibitor" and other regionals, attended as an M. P. T. O. A. committee member. Jay had been waiting eight years to demonstrate Atlantic City hospitality. He commutes between the shore resort and Philadelphia.

Col. Cole of Texas was late in arriving, but he soon was in the discussions. It was 102 degrees when he left Texas, he said.

Aaron Saperstein of Chicago was not a delegate, but he attended all sessions.

Al Lichtman's humor was very much in evidence. "Do you want money for your pictures or will you play percentage" he wanted to know from Felix Feist. At another point he suggested a clause protecting distributors in closed situations.

"Dick" Biechele drove in from Kansas City. He's enthusiastic over the prospects of relief from the strenuous organization work since his retirement as president of the Kansas and western Missouri exhibitor unit. He'd been president so long that every one figured it as Biechele's association.

Nate Yamins is a real expert on the subject of contracts. And he kept his fingers crossed fearing that any minute he would be called to the phone and be told one of his theatres are on fire.

Sam Dembow of Publix was an interested observer, but every now and then had a suggestion to make on the contract.

Jack Harwood of Cleveland is a new member of the M. P. T. O. A. committee. He replaced Frank Walker, who withdrew when Publix bought the Comerford circuit. Frank arrived Tuesday to serve as advisor to the M. P. T. O. A. group at Lightman's request.

Felix Feist's pet expression when he doesn't like a particular contract provisions, "It's just another hat clause."

Al Boyd of Philadelphia sat in on the Tuesday afternoon session and appeared to get quite a kick out of it.

As a Tom Thumb golfer, Al. Lichtman is a great sales manager. Phil Reisman got a big kick out of a game with the United Artists' sales chief.

"We still have a lot of exhibitors who aren't the best business men in the world," Jack Miller declared at one point in the discussions.

"What are their addresses" was Al Lichtman's quick query.

Maybe She's Right?

One of New York's better known film execs, in an attempt to get in touch with someone participating at the 5-5-5 conference at Atlantic City this week, called the Hays office to ascertain the hotel at which the distributor - exhibitor representatives were meeting.

And imagine his surprise when told that they didn't know "there was a meeting."

"All Quiet" Openings

Universal reports that its war picture, "All Quiet on the Western Front," opened in three cities Saturday—Toronto, Vancouver and Newark. The Vancouver house did $3,509 on the opening day.

The procedure is this: The contract clause is stricken out and initialed by the exhibitor and the application forwarded to the distributor. If the distributor declines arbitration with the particular exhibitor the same procedure is followed.

Consists of Two Forms

The new contract consists of two forms: a master contract, containing 26 standard provisions, which is to be furnished all exhibitors, and a short form, in which will be incorporated the standard provisions, playing arrangement and other details peculiar to the individual transaction.

Cancellation by the distributor of his contract with a defaulting exhibitor or vice versa are the only penalties provided for under the new arbitration system.

Rentals 7 Days in Advance

The new contract calls for the payment of rentals seven days in advance unless other arrangement is made with the home office, limits to 90 days the time in which a picture may be dated, specifies prior runs if these are made a condition of the sale, bans unethical advertising by subsequent runs and limits them to advertising films before completion of prior run to cases where the playdate is 15 days or less behind the prior run, sets a minimum adult admission of ten cents, permits exhibitors up to schedule to play pictures out of order of release providing they date or pay for the remaining pictures on the contract within 30 days; defines exhibitors' and distributors' rights as concerns substitutions, prohibits sale, leasing or giving away of accessories, prohibits the exhibitor to cut any films but newsreels and warrants the producer using no advertising in pictures for which compensation has been received.

Defaults on Percentage

In case of default on percentage runs, the exhibitor must pay liquidated damages equal to the stipulated percentage of his average day's business for the 30 days preceding the run and if an exhibitor pulls off a percentage picture before the end of the stipulated run, he must pay as damages 75 per cent of his receipts on the last day he played the picture.

The contract also contains clauses similar to that of the old standard contract covering: warranty as to form, cancellation for religious or racial offense, schedule of licensing and exhibition, provision for percentage payments and personnel and methods of the checking system to be used; delivery, exhibition, return, loss or damage of prints, system of selecting and designating playdates, warranty on reissues, schedule of protection and run, taxes, roadshows, unreleased pictures, default through causes beyond control and acceptance of application.

Discs the "Out" If Courts Sustain Claim Schlesinger Owns Film Method

Ries Sound-Film Patent is Basic, Claimed

General Talking Pictures claims the Ries patent is the only basic patent governing recording and reproduction by the sound-on-film method. This is the patent which Judge Hugh M. Morris has determined is the property of the Schlesinger interests.

The patent is listed as No. 1,607,480 in the United States Patent Office, was applied for on May 21, 1913, and granted on November 16, 1926. The patent papers bear this reference:

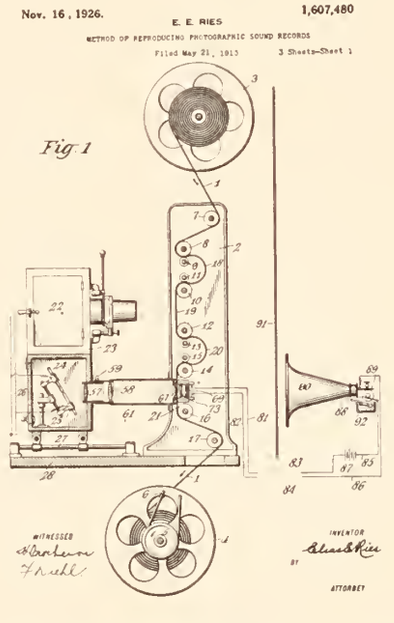
"Elias E. Ries of New York, N. Y., assignor, by Mesne Assignments to De Forest Phonofilm Corp., of New York, N. Y., a corporation of Delaware."

In view of its possible significance on the question of basic sound patents, the text is published herewith in full:



This invention relates to the method and apparatus for making photographic records of sound by causing the sounds that are to be recorded to produce varying electrical impulses in an electric circuit which in turn cause varying intensities of light for affecting a photographic film. And more particularly it relates to combined motion pictures and sound records photographed on the same film. Also to methods and apparatus for reproducing such sound records or combined motion pictures and sound records.

In carrying my invention into effect I produce a record in the form of a continuous photographic band or stripe of uniform width and of varyig degrees of density in the direction of its length corresponding to sound waves impressed upon a diaphragm which cause corresponding varying impulses in an electric circuit. This record is produced by moving the photographic film behind an apertured screen having preferably a very narrow slit aperture with the film in such relation thereto that the area of exposure will be limited to the area of the slit or aperture, and the light rays being so focused upon the screen that the aperture will be flooded with light and affect the sensitive surface of the film uniformly over the exposed area; the purpose of limiting the area of exposure to the area of the slit aperture being to prevent diffusion of light rays beyond the direct image of the aperture. The photographic film at the point where it passes behind the apertured screen moves continuously at a uniform speed, so that when the light remains constant there will result a continuous band of uniform width and density throughout, but as the intensity of the light rays vary in accordance with the varying impulses in the circuit produced by the sound waves impressed on the receiving diaphragm, the density of the band will vary in the direction of movement of the film to a greater or lesser degree than the normal. In other words, when the light remains constant the density of the exposed area will be the mean density, and as the diaphragm vibrates due to sound waves impressed thereon and producing the varying electrical impulses in the circuit, this density will increase to maximum and then decrease to minimum and back to mean density for each complete vibration or cycle. This, owing to the rapidity of the vibrations, results in a record having the appearance of successive lines or stripes extending crosswise of the record band, the lines (in a negative) shading gradually from mean to maximum and then through the mean to minimum and back again to man density, giving the appearance of waves throughout the length of the record band, and the lines or points of greatest density indicating the crests and the points of least density the hollows of sound waves corresponding to the vibrations of the diaphragm.

To reproduce such a record, I employ a method (which is the subject matter of the present application) in which light rays of constant luminosity are projected through an apertured screen similar to the screen employed in making the record, and the record film is moved constantly at a uniform speed in such relation to the aperture, that only an area equal to the area of the aperture will be exposed to the light rays, and the light rays passing through the record film of varying opacity will be projected upon a light sensitive cell or plate, such as selenium. This cell is connected in an electric circuit connected with a sound reproducing device or telephone, and in accordance with the variations in light rays passing through the record, the light sensitive cell will produce variations in the resistance or cause varying impulses in said circuit to actuate said sound reproducing device or telephone.

feed variety, and then through the sound reproducing apparatus where the film moves constantly. The film may be fed downwardly from the upper reel 3 to the lower reel 4, the latter being provided with the usual "take-up" devices and friction drive pulley 5 with its belt 6, receiving its motion from some uniformly moving portion of the apparatus as usual, or if desired for long productions from some independent motor (not shown). Differential speed control is maintained as usual to insure the proper taking up of the lower portion of the film at a uniform speed irrespective of the varying diameter of the reel.

In taking motion pictures a series of rapid exposures of successive spaces on the film are necessary, usually at the rate of sixteen per second, and with intermittent feed machines this speed cannot be materially increased without damaging the film or losing the light required for successful photography. This period of exposure for each picture space is one-half of this sixteenth of a second, more or less, and the film must remain stationary during exposure. To impress a sound record upon this part of the film while it is subjected to such intermittent action is of course impracticable for obvious reasons. Furthermore during the periods of rest many frequencies of sound waves would be superimposed and blot each other out. More-

Wrangle Over Basic Patents Waxes Hotter—Gen'l Talking and W. E. at Odds

Wholesale swing of the industry to discs may prove the "out" if higher courts sustain the claims of M. A. Schlesinger that he is entitled to damages by virtue of his ownership of the Ries patent, alleged by him to control sound-on-film recording and reproduction.

One conclusion is certain. The tangle over basic patents will wend its way into the Supreme Court of the United States before the issue is determined.

Described as shedding the first light on where control of the situation involving millions of dollars may rest, a decision, handed down late last week by Federal Judge Hugh M. Morris, in Wilmington, Del., vests in General Talking Pictures Corporation ownership of the Ries device, claimed by Schlesinger as the one basic patent of the many which figure in sound-on-film recording and reproduction.

Opinion in the trade is divided over the significance of the decree. In Schlesinger's mind, no doubt apparently exists. Speaking for General Talking Pictures this week, he took the stand without qualifications of any nature that the key to the entire situation now rests in his hands as a result of the establishment of his title to the Ries patent.

W. E. Not Perturbed

On the other hand, Western Electric, in several statements, assumes the attitude there is nothing to get excited about. Notice of appeal has been filed in the United States District Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, which sits in Philadelphia, While no further inkling is divulged as to the company's plans, it is regarded as a foregone conclusion that the battle will be carried through successive steps until the litigation finally reaches the Supreme Court of the land.

Schlesinger claims the Ries patent is vital and that the sound-on-film method of recording and reproduction is not possible without the principle of the light beam coinciding with the slit through which the rays pass to the sound track. This, he avers, is the Ries patent.

The Wilmington decision concerned itself with reproduction only, he stated. His plan on a definition by law of recording rights is not set at the minute, but Schlesinger is of the opinion that the decision handed down will prove sufficiently binding to cover recording as well.

Moving on Fox Action

The recording slant is involved in the long-pending action of De Forest Phonofilm against the Fox-Case Corporation. This suit was held in abeyance by agreement of attorneys, but now that the Wilmington case has been disposed of, Schlesinger says he is ready to go ahead.

General Talking Pictures, an outgrowth of De Forest Phonofilm, takes it for granted

Did Edison Invent Pictures? Big Row Reaches Boiling Point, but Cools Off

Authorities Can't Agree on Subject, But Admit That Wizard Helped a Lot

A tilt over the origin of motion pictures, as now used in this country, approached the boiling point this week, only to be cooled off by action of the New York Sun in refusing to become the stamping grounds for the battle after having been drawn into the fray through publication of articles questioning Thomas A. Edison's participation in the invention of motion pictures.

Veterans in the business hurled charges thick and fast. Some emphatically denied that Edison was responsible in any form for laboratory development of motion pictures, stating that the "electrical wizard" was only entitled to credit for furthering their commercial usages. Others rushed to Edison's defense, giving him full credit for the inventive phases.

This phase of the controversy was brought to a sudden close with publication of a lengthy article from Edison's biographer and former patent attorney, Frank L. Dyer, who was also at one time president of the Motion Picture Patents Co.

Did Edison Invent Pictures?

Reasons of space are assigned by the editorial officials of The Sun for thus terminating the discussion, but the question as to whether Edison did or did not "invent the motion picture" has been so long a moot subject for discussion within the industry that Motion Picture News sought further light upon it for the purposes of historic record.

Dyer, in his article, takes direct issue with Merritt Crawford, whose letter, alleging that Edison was not in any sense the "inventor of the motion picture," but who merely "popularized" it, was printed in Motion Picture News last week.

As a close associate and friend of Edison, Dyer's statements appear to have definite authority, although some think not entirely without bias. They certainly express the claims made by Edison's supporters.

The facts outlined by Crawford, on the other hand, also are entitled to consideration. As a member of the editorial staff of Motion Picture News many years ago and a writer identified with the industry for nearly a score of years, his researches into early picture history are known to many.

Pioneers All "Fell Short"

Dyer ridicules Crawford's assertions about Edison, however, and claims that Edison was not only "the first to suggest the principles involved in the modern motion picture camera" and the first to apply these principles practically in the construction of his camera apparatus, but that of all the earlier experimenters mentioned by Crawford, namely, Marey, Le Prince, Friese-Greene, Du Cos and Muybridge, "not one . . . utilized the correct principles first adopted by Edison," or "had the courage or vision to see" what Edison did. According to Dyer, they all "fell short of the goal or followed the wrong path," of which the modern motion picture was the ultimate result.

"The principles underlying the original Edison camera," states Dyer, "characterize all cameras, which have been used successfully since the year 1889, when the complete invention was reduced to practice by Edison."

Dyer scouts the importance of Judge Wallace's decision against the Edison camera patent in 1902, referred to by Crawford, and states that the "re-issue patent," obtained subsequent to that decision, was "sustained as valid, and until its expiration in 1914 the entire industry paid tribute thereunder to Edison in the form of royalties."

Against these definite statements by Dyer, Crawford casts another bombshell into the camp of the Edison supporters, which, by reason of the fact that The Sun has now closed its columns to further discussion of this chapter in picture history, Motion Picture News presents exclusively.

Crawford gives full credit to Edison for helping to make pictures commercially possible, by his researches and experiments, lending tremendous impetus to its early development, but he asserts again, emphatically, and states his authorities, that Edison not only originated nothing of importance in connection with the motion picture, but that his chief claim to consideration lies in the fact that he only copied and commercialized (though, it may be, he improved) the inventions of others.

Dyer Influenced by Friendship?

"Dyer's letter in defense of the claims made for Edison," says Crawford, "are only what should be expected from a fine and loyal friend such as he is.

"Mr. Dyer's remarks, however, make it necessary to bring out certain facts, hitherto not generally known, although every impartial student of film history has been fully aware of them for years past.

"In putting these facts on the record at this time I have no desire to detract at all from Edison's really great services to film's development. The industry owes him a great debt. But it is not in the field of invention.

"If Edison has become something of a legend in the picture business, this should not concern us in ascertaining the truth. Neither myths nor romance have to do with historic fact.

"And it is only with facts with which we should be interested.

"Dyer states that Edison was 'the first to suggest the principles of the modern motion picture camera,' and that 'not one' of the earlier experimenters 'utilized the correct principles first adopted by Edison.' He says that 'all cameras, which have been used successfully since the year 1889, when the complete invention was first reduced to practice by Edison,' embody these principles.

"These statements are all misleading, especially as to Edison being 'first.' Dr. Jules Etienne Marey, the great French physiologist, developed the apparatus for taking a series of photographs, using one lens from one position and a device for viewing them in animation, long before Edison did. The courts, as I shall later show, have determined that fact.

Edison and Marey Met in 1889

"During the Paris Exposition of 1889, Dr. Marey showed Edison, as a brother scientist, all the apparatus, which he used in taking and viewing his celebrated chrono-photographic pictures, which embody every principle of the modern cinema. The records of the Marey Institute, the daily newspapers of the time and other published accounts, which have never been denied, all testify to this meeting.

"Edison returned to America in the fall of 1889 and reduced to practice his complete invention of the motion picture camera, as Dyer says.

"The camera of William Friese-Greene, patented in England June 21, 1889, a detailed description of

Marey Honored In France

Beaune (Cote d'or), France.—High civic dignitaries and leaders in the French film industry this week observed the Marey Centenary Celebration, in honor of Jules Etienne Marey, inventor of present day cinematography, who was born in 1830 and died in 1904.

To Marey is attributed the invention of chronophotography which is the basis of the modern motion picture. He was a student of the analysis of movement, and gave no thought to the synthesis of motion.

Paramount, Fox Stage Show War Renews in Seattle

Seattle—With the return of Publix stage shows to the Seattle Paramount next week, the battle for superiority will be on again between that house and the Fox Fifth Avenue, where Fanchon and Marco stage units hold sway.

Up to the time that Publix shows discontinued here a couple of seasons ago, the Paramount and Fifth Avenue were in continual battle before the public, each utilizing much newspaper and bill board space to praise its stage presentations above those at the other theatre.

For the past few weeks, since the report that Publix shows were to play here again, the Fox Fifth Avenue has advertised "The One and Only Stage Revue in Seattle," and it is reported that it will again begin to use the slogan which it developed during the last period of battle, namely "There's a Bigger and Better Show at the Fox Fifth Avenue." One of these posters, posted directly opposite one of the Paramount's exit doors, greatly annoyed Publix officials here for many months during the time that the Publix stage shows formerly appeared here.

Electrics Deny Charge Of Radio Trust by Gov't

Wilmington, Del.—Four of the defendants including A. T. & T., Western Electric, General Motors and RCA, deny existence of the combination complained of by the government in its radio trust suit. Defendants likewise deny having, at any time, engaged in interstate commerce in radio communication or radio apparatus, although it is admitted that principal defendants own and control a large number of patents, but claim that in many cases patents overlap and therefore it is necessary to use many of them in combination to complete a satisfactory article.

The government action was filed by the Dept. of Justice.

Renews Doug's Option

Hollywood—Young Douglas Fairbanks will continue with First National, the company having exercised its long-term option.

Illinois Protection Plan Staggering Along Under Fire of Opposing Groups

Out July 12

The Showman section for July will appear in MOTION PICTURE NEWS for July 12. Replete, as usual, with articles of timely interest to showmen everywhere.

F. N. Gets Break At Publix Despite Zukor-W. B. Rift

That break between Adolph Zukor and Harry M. Warner will apparently have no effect on playing time for First National product in Publix theatres. At least, this is the indication from a number of meetings which Ned Depinet, F. N. general sales manager, is holding with Bill Saal of Publix.

Warner product, which nabbed preferred playing time—after Paramount—over the Publix string last season is out for 1930-31 with Fox now the favorite son. Warners, to counteract the Paramount-Fox booking contract, immediately veered to RKO. The inference has been that Warners and their First National affiliation will be completely out of the Publix line-up.

Independents Are Being Forced Out of Business?

Atlantic City—Twin City independent exhibitors are being forced out of business, due to general conditions and overhead, according to W. A. Steffes, general manager of the Northwest exhibitor unit, who says that unless relief is forthcoming, most independents of the two cities will close.

The exhibitors have issued an ultimatum to the operators, informing the latter that unless they recede from their two-men-in-the-booth demand, their services will not be required after July 5. The houses either will operate non-union or close if the ultimatum is not acceded to. The exhibitors have offered to employ one union operator and a non-union helper, but so far this offer has not been accepted, Steffes says.

Newman and Kramer Will Represent RKO in U. K.

London—Bearing out the forecast made several months ago in Motion Picture News, Joseph I. Schnitzer now states Radio will operate its own exchanges in England. Sol Newman, for some time RKO's representative here, will be managing director and Earl Kramer his assistant. The operating company will be known as Radio Pictures, Ltd. A sales staff has to be organized and exchanges opened.

While here Schnitzer said Radio planned to build no theatres in Europe, but would if such a step were necessary to secure adequate representation.

What Once Looked Like Quick Settlement Dims as Hooks Tear Into Agreement

Chicago—After a week of conference by the new rezoning committee for Chicago, appointed to apply the principles agreed upon by the original committees to individual cases, a settlement of both local and downstate protection problems is still doubtful. The Film Board of Trade reports minor progress on the part of the committee, but admits that plenty of points of dissension still remain unsolved.

A meeting of the committee on city rezoning was held Wednesday by volunteer representatives of local exchanges who entered the arena with new suggestions and offers of aid. A few of the committee members see some significance in this move, believing that it may be the means by which the entire matter may be settled. Their hope is based on a few good minds that, they believe, may be capable of effecting a compromise on troublesome situations which stand in the way of a settlement.

Situation Grows Confused

The skeptics, however, are frank in airing their belief that additional voices will only serve to add to the confusion that has reigned at the meetings since their inception four weeks ago. These hold out little hope of an early settlement, averring that the uncompromising attitudes of circuit and independent representatives make an agreement on major points of controversy impossible, or nearly so. The outsider's opinion here is that the conferences will accomplish little or nothing and that at their break-up the city and downstate situation will be essentially the same as always.

Sales Held Up

Meanwhile, salesmen who have been ready to go to work on new product for the past several weeks are still sitting idly at the exchanges hoping for either a settlement or an abandonment of the conferences. Exhibitors, hoping for a better break, are refusing to do business while the conferences continue.

What a Honey!

Hollywood — In appealing to film stars, players and others currently enjoying large salaries in the coast colony, representatives of the Thrift Store of the Motion Picture Relief Fund asked for donations of discarded or unwanted clothing, dresses, shoes, etc., that can be resold to the less fortunate in the industry for small sums.

One actress who is under term contract to a large producing company, and who has stepped forward mainly in filmusicals, was asked to aid the worthy cause. She autocratically replied, "I don't believe in charity," and ended the interview abruptly.

Who Knows?

That $3,000,000 suit filed by Congo Pictures against the Hays Office and members may have convinced a lot of people that someone pulled the gag out of "Ingagi."

Mystery Ads in Canada Causing Gossip; Fox Idea?

Toronto—Novel, say some, but mystifying to others is the display advertising copy appearing in Canadian newspapers, addressed to independent exhibitors, urging them not to sell out or become affiliated until they dig into the proposal which the copy states is theirs by writing.

Nothing in the copy indicates who is paying for the ads, but gossip along Film Row links Fox and N. L. Nathanson with the proposition.

Warners Handle Western N. Y. Houses from Batavia

Batavia, N. Y.—With the operating rights of the Dellinger, Family and LaFayette at Batavia formally acquired by the filing of transfers, Warners have opened a western New York zone headquarters to direct their theatres between Buffalo and Syracuse.

The office will be directed by John R. Osborne, former secretary and treasurer of the Genesee Theatrical Enterprises. The Batavia theatres recently acquired will be managed by Andrew Gibson, brought up from Hornell. James J. Kelly, manager of the LaFayette, will be transferred to Hornell. Nikitas D. Dipson, former manager of the Family, retains his office in the Family Theatre building, from which he will direct his houses in Elmira, N. Y., and Ohio.

Fur to Fly in Grigsby Suit Against RCA Group

Kansas City—A bitter fight is seen impending in the $30,000,000 triple damage suit filed by the Grigsby-Grunow Company of Chicago against RCA, General Electric and Westinghouse. The Chicago company charges the existence of a patent pool in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The action hinges around radio tubes.

694 Earphone Sets to Be Installed by Fox

Los Angeles—Sixty-four Fox West Coast houses will supply earphones to deaf patrons, a deal having been negotiated for 694 sets.

Exchanges Want L. A. Zoning Plan And Exhibs Say NO!! So Exhibs Win

Second Milwaukee Deadlock Halts Action Until Third Meeting

Milwaukee—Unless exchangemen and exhibitors in this territory work more harmoniously, Milwaukee will be without a new zoning plan indefinitely.

Exchanges favor the Los Angeles plan and the exhibs won't swallow it, so the matter stands just where it did before they got together to thrash out the problem.

After a three-day pow-wow ten days ago, the discussion was set aside until Monday, when it was hoped something tangible would develop. Continued differences of opinion as to what system should be followed caused another split and a second adjournment was called until July 7.

The exchange and theatre representatives are expected to work out a zoning plan for the entire state, which, to date, has not been zoned.

The big kicks emanate from the ranks of Milwaukee showmen with majority of state exhibitors standing quietly on the sidelines. Under the present arrangement, play dates of second runs in the various zones are antied out according to admissions. One of the chains, however, is slipping in playdates at its neighborhood stands ahead of the independents in the same zone who charge higher prices. Consequently, the rumpus.

Meyer Quits Universal To Join Skouras' Dept.

Milwaukee—Fred S. Meyer has left Universal and Milwaukee to accept an executive post in the Warner theatre department under Spyros Skouras. He has been in charge of the Laemmle theatre activities in this state for four years.

He joined the Laemmle Film Co. as salesman in 1910, staying with Universal until 1919, serving as theatre and exchange manager in Chicago, Minneapolis and Milwaukee. He operated a theatre in Hamilton, O., until 1926, when he again joined Universal.

Bernard J. Depkin has been placed in charge of Warner activities in Wisconsin, including erection of its new downtown theatre here. The circuit has recently acquired two more independent neighborhood houses in Milwaukee, including the Egyptian and Granada, located on the north and south side of the city respectively, giving them nine in Milwaukee.

Local theatremen tendered Meyer a farewell party prior to his departure.

Debate on Copyright Bill By House is Postponed

Washington—No further action on the Vestal bill (H.R.12549) to amend and consolidate the copyright bill will be taken until "a later date," the debate in the House having been postponed indefinitely. The measure would also allow the United States to enter the International Copyright Union.

Sol Scores a Knockout

Old man Sol again downs the mighty Hip for the count! New York's Hippodrome, a house with one of the most colorful careers in theatrical history—old and new—again finds it too hard to buck the sweltering heat. The house, seating 5,500, darkens on July 12 for the summer. When it opens early in the fall, RKO will stage one of the longest bills in the country: eight vaude acts, shorts and a feature.

which appears in the Scientific American Supplement, No. 746, April 19, 1890, also embodies every characteristic and essential principle of the modern motion picture camera. It may be mentioned here that Edison did not apply for his kinetographic camera patent until 1891.

"Nonetheless, as Dyer states, he may have 'reduced to practice' his 'complete invention' as early as 1889, waiting the two years permitted by the patent laws before making his application.

"The affidavit of Friese-Greene, a part of the court records in the case of the Motion Picture Patents Company vs. The Yankee Film Company et al., in equity, brought in the year 1910, is interesting in this connection, and has never been contradicted.

Friese-Greene's Affidavit

"The full affidavit appears in the Dec. 3, 1910, issue of Moving Picture News, the predecessor of Motion Picture News, on Pages 11, 12, 13 and 18, Vol. III, No. 49. Friese-Greene had come to America to testify in the struggle of the independents against the trust and his affidavit is a part of the permanent record of the court.

"Following is a brief quotation from his affidavit:

" 'When I had completed my 1889 camera and found the high degree of effectiveness and efficiency that was attainable by means of a long length of celluloid film, I again took up the idea of combining the projection of moving pictures with the accompaniment of a phonographic reproduction of suitable song or speech. I had had an Edison phonograph since 1887, as I have stated, and from such information as I was able then to gather, learned that great improvements had been made in the development of the phonograph, and it occurred to me that I would write Mr. Edison, advising him of the work I had done in the reproduction of moving pictures and describe the capacity of my camera in conjunction with a long length of celluloid film, and suggest to him the working out of a combination of his invention of the phonograph in conjunction with my invention of the animated picture camera and projector.

" 'Immediately, after turning over to my patent agents for filing, my patent application, which was filed by them in the British Patent Office, June 21, 1889, I wrote to Mr. Edison giving him a full description of my camera and projector and their details of construction. I am positive that this letter was mailed to Mr. Edison before July 1, 1889, and to the best of my recollection it was mailed at least a week or ten days before that date. . . . .'

"Friese-Greene goes into many details of his camera's construction, as he disclosed it to Edison, and continues:

" 'In reply to this communication I received from Mr. Edison's laboratory or works a letter of acknowledgment, which I shall produce in court. . . . requested that I send full drawings of my carema This letteretaoin shrdlu etaoin shrdlu shrdl etaoin to Edison. Pursuant to the request in this letter contained I sent to Mr. Edison by mail within a few days of the date of its receipt a set of working drawings of the camera, these drawings being substantially identical with the drawings shown in my British patent, No. 10,131 of 1889. . . .'

"I think that this about disposes of the statement that Edison was 'the first to suggest the principles involved in the modern motion picture camera.' The records apparently give him no better than third place, and even this is by no means certain.

"Dyer makes light of the decision I refered to, written by Judge Wallace, from which I shall hereafter quote, in expressing the unanimous opinion of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals (see Federal Reporter, No. 114, 1902, pages 926 to 939, Edison vs. American Mutoscope Co.) in denying to Edison all claims for originality or priority of invention on his camera patent.

"This decision was never appealed and the 'reissue patent' referred to by Dyer was little more than a 'design' patent, affecting no principle in the art. I do not believe it was ever adjudicated, although if Dyer can enlighten me on this point I shall appreciate it, as a matter of historic record.

"It was only one of the numerous patents put in the pool formed later by the Motion Picture Patents Co., in an effort to monopolize the youthful film industry. As such, it doubtless figured in many of the actions brought by the 'trust' to eliminate the independents, and also, as such, doubtless many weak-kneed individuals and companies 'paid a tribute thereunder to Edison in royalties' as Dyer avers. But not quite as late as 1914.

"The opinion of Judge Wallace, concurred in by Judges Townsend and Lacombe sitting with him, Dyer to the contrary, notwithstanding, constitutes the whole official and authentic record of Edison's contribution to the motion picture, as far as invention is concerned.

"The following excerpt from Judge Wallace's historic decision will be sufficient for the purposes of replying to Dyer:

(Extra Judge Wallace's decision, Edison vs. American Mutoscope Co., Federal Reporter, 114, 1902, Page 934):

" 'It is obvious that Mr. Edison was not a pioneer, in the large sense of the term, or in the more limited sense in which he would have been had he also invented the film. He was not the inventor of the film. He was not the first inventor of apparatus capable of reproducing suitable negatives, taken from practically a single point of view, in single line sequence upon a film like his, and embodying the same general means of rotating drums and shutters for bringing the sensitized surface across the lens, and exposing successive portions of it in rapid succession.

" 'DuCos anticipated him in this, notwithstanding he did not use the film. Neither was he the first inventor of apparatus capable of producing suitable negatives, and embodying a means for passing a sensitized surface across a single-lens camera at a high rate of speed, and with an intermittent motion, and for exposing successive portions of the surfaces during the periods of rest.

" 'His claim for such an apparatus was rejected by the Patent Office and he acquiesced in its rejection. He was anticipated in this by Marey, and Marey also anticipated him in photographing successive positions of the object in motion from the same point of view. . . .'

"To Edison must go the credit for perfecting the details of apparatus especially adapted for the employment of the film, as we know it today, but to do this, as Judge Wallace states, 'required but a moderate amount of mechanical ingenuity.' It was not invention. Also Edison by utilizing this film and perfecting the apparatus for using it, met all the conditions necessary for commercial success. But this again did not entitle him to a monopoly of all camera apparatus utilizing the film or to the credit and protection afforded the pioneer inventor.

"Edison's kinetoscope, undoubtedly, inspired many other inventors to contribute to the art, Lumiere, Paul and others, but it contributed no new principle to cinematic science.

"It certainly does not entitle him to be described in cinematographic history as the 'inventor of the motion picture.' "

West Readying "The Bat Whispers" for U. A.

Hollywood—Roland West's second talker production for United Artists, "The Bat Whispers," goes into rehearsals next week with Chester Morris in the featured role. Cast members selected to date include Una Merkel, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Ben Bard, Grace Hampton, Spencer Charters, Charles Dow Clark and Maude Eburne. "The Bat Whispers" is Roland West's adaptation of the recent Broadway play, "Whispers."

Presentations Essential As Added Draw to Bolster B. O., Publix Finds

Esk Me

"Why is it?" asked a prominent Wall Street trader, "that motion picture stocks rally so quickly after a slump?"

"They suffer less than many of the real blue chips during the slump," he said, "and when the period of depression is over, most picture issues jump higher than the loss."

Talkers at Neighborhoods Keep Fans from Class A Houses, Survey Shows

The lure of first run attractions in Class A theatres is no longer proving sufficiently magnetic to draw fans downtown and away from their neighborhood theatres.

Publix has discovered this to be one of the principal reasons for the failure of the all-sound program to maintain its level and is, therefore, returning to flesh-and-blood presentations as an added drawing card.

Talkers, the circuit has demonstrated to itself, make it possible for the same type of programs to be seen in the neighborhoods at lower prices provided the public is willing to wait until subsequent runs play the pictures. The public apparently has been waiting. So much so that today, 28 de luxe Publix theatres are playing presentations while more are to be added to the line-up.

In the Pacific Northwest, the units play Seattle, Portland and San Francisco. In the South, Dallas, San Antonio, New Orleans and Houston are among the links in the presentation chain. These have been recently added to the list of 28. The previous high level in the presentation circuit was keyed at 33 with indications at present that this figure will again be equalled, if not exceeded.

Dead Drunk?

Hollywood—It happened at one of those Hollywood parties, where they say an actor was indignantly denying that he had had just a wee bit too much to drink. "Why," said he, "when I am drunk nobody but my wife ever can detect it."

"Hm," said Glenn Tryon, "I believe you. Everybody thinks you're dead."

Discs the "Out" If Court Sustains Schlesinger Claims

that the excitement is over. So much so that Schlesinger is now talking about his company as the keystone for the entire business in so far as sound is concerned. He maintains that every producer recording via sound-on-film and every exhibitor reproducing via that method is liable to damages. Just to what extent, he states he doesn't know, but adds the final wash-up may extend far beyond cost of equipment and into the realms of profits accruing from percentage engagements.

The decision, to be reversed or sustained by higher courts as the case may be, covers the United States. How many theatres it embraces is difficult to compute since an undefined number is equipped for both disc and film methods of reproduction. The court decree has no bearing on disc reproduction and, if Schlesinger's claims are finally substantiated, would mean that the Warners, as largest users and principal champion of the disc, would be less liable than other major companies.

In so far as the ultimate outcome is concerned, it appears that the major companies will pass the buck to Western Electric and insist that "Erpi" fight the litigation to its conclusion. In its contract with exhibitors, "Erpi" protects the theatre man up to the limit of the contract price and does not go beyond that. If Schlesinger's claim that profits accruing from percentage engagements on talkers fall within the range of damage actions, it would follow the exhibitor might have a real burden to carry. However, this was regarded as highly improbable.

At any rate, Schlesinger has placed his cards on the table. He openly announces his intention of suing other equipment manufacturers, resting his claims entirely on the Ries patent.

How Western Electric feels about the situation is outlined in a brief statement issued over signature of J. J. Lyng, vice-president of "Erpi," who states:

"Western Electric's legal position in the field of sound pictures is based not upon a single patent, but upon a large group of patents which it controls. The Ries patent is not in any sense a basic patent and Judge Morris did not hold that it was. The effect of the decision of Judge Morris in favor of the Ries patent is simply to place it in line for adjudication by the higher court. In our opinion the Ries patent is invalid and Western Electric apparatus does not infringe upon it, but if eventually it should be held that the Ries patent is valid and is infringed, its use is in no wise essential to the successful operation of the Western Electric sound system.

"No exhibitor using Western Electric apparatus need have any anxiety as to the ability and intention of Electrical Research Products, Inc., fully to protect him in the uninterrupted use of his equipment."

The action was filed by General Talking and De Forest Phonofilm against the Stanley Company of America. Western Electric, by agreement of counsel, took over the defense since an "Erpi" reproducer was involved and the company held all of its licensed theatres were therefore implicated. Western Electric entered no patent claims during the trial in Wilmington.

Rogers' Deal with Radio Guarantees Circuit Runs

Charles R. Rogers' deal with Radio Pictures covers four pictures under a dual contract which assures the producer guaranteed playing time in R-K-O's Class A theatres.

Rogers is searching for material. Production will be centered on the Coast, studio to be selected.

Grind Teeth and Hear Music Is New Discovery

Ithaca, N. Y.—"Hearing through the teeth" is the revolutionary experiment demonstrated here at the home of Dr. Frederick Bedell, director of physics at Cornell University. A phonograph was played, the sounds from which were inaudible to the ears. The spectators placed in their mouths long pieces of wood with pencil-like points. The points were placed on a tiny metal disc on a round, cloth-covered ball, which concealed the mechanism. The disc was a receiver for the deaf, which transmitted the inaudible vibrations into the wood. By biting the other end of the stick, the listeners could hear, it is stated, two of them declaring the music sounded perfect.

The invention is designed for listening to talkers and radio programs, according to Dr. Bedell, who plans to install the receivers on the back of seats, with the straw-like sticks sold for a trifle to deaf patrons.

RCA Gets in Big Boost At Educational Confab

Columbus, O.—Continuous programs of sound pictures are being given at the annual Nat'l Education convention by RCA Photophone.

Twenty thousand delegates are in attendance, with more than one fourth of the assembly already visitors at the RCA theatre, where visual instructional films are screened.

Joseph Schenck Buried

Funeral services were held this week in New York for Joseph Schenck, member of the vaudeville team of Van and Schenck, who died in Detroit at the age of 38. Van and Schenck appeared in the M-G-M production, "They Learned About Women."

Norma to Paris

Norma Talmadge is enroute to Paris. She is traveling under an assumed name to shun publicity, declares her husband, Joseph M. Schenck, who denies rumors that she is going to the French capital to obtain a divorce.

Up-Trend in Equipment Quality Seen; Better Acoustics, Projectors on Way

S. M. P. E. Finds Field Veering Toward Higher Technical Standards

With the limitations originally imposed by talkers eliminated through diligence in production under pressure, the industry is forging ahead toward new and hitherto untouched levels in technical and scientific development. This is the conclusion drawn by the Committee on Progress of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in its full-length report covering the fall and winter of 1929-30. The text has just been made public.

The problems of acoustics in theatres and studios is being thoroughly investigated, the report shows. Improvements have been made in cameras, printers, processing machines and projectors. Attention is being turned toward the importance of film storage. Rear shutter projector assemblies have reduced fire hazards precipitated by the use of high intensity arc lights. These are some of the highlights pointed out by the committee.

VII. STATISTICS, PUBLICATIONS, AND NEW BOOKS

The S. M. P. E. Report

First installment of the report follows:

A—Films and Emulsions

Increased interest has been noted in the past six months in the subject of wide films. Of the widths proposed, 70 mm. and 65 mm. appear to have received the most consideration. The producing organizations fully appreciate the importance of the engineering problems involved in the introduction of wide film and are postponing definite action pending a decision of the sub-committee of the Standards Committee of this society, the personnel of which includes engineers from all the producers. A limited amount of production, however, has been undertaken on film 70 mm. wide. A feature, "Happy Days," and a newsreel were shown as a regular program, opening March 14th, at the Roxy on a screen 41½ feet by 22 feet.[1] Several other theatres are also equipped to handle this type of film and at least four feature pictures are said to be in progress.

The optical problems arising in the development of wide film have been considered by Rayton.[2] Howell and Dubray[3] discussed practical and artistic elements bearing on the selection of wide film standards. They proposed a three to five ratio of height to width, placement of the sound record to occur outside the sprocket holes, and rounded corners for the perforations. Jones[4] made an exhaustive analysis of the sizes of the paintings of one of the old masters, Rubens, and tabulated the rectangular proportions for different forms of composition. A rectangle having a width to height ratio of 1.618 is considered by many artists to be one of the best shapes for a pictorial composition. Gregory[5] has written on the early history of wide films.

Color, Outstanding Development

Sound motion pictures in color have come into still greater use and are regarded by several authorities as the most outstanding development of the year. Five processes have been exploited and the entry of a sixth process, both on standard 35 mm. film and wide film, has been announced.[6] Definite advances in optical systems, processing methods, and the experience that follows production problems on a large scale have all contributed to a substantial improvement in the quality of color pictures.

The bulk of the raw film being used is coated on nitrate stock, although the hazard resulting from improper and careless storage of this stock has been demonstrated forcibly by the results of a number of serious film fires during the year which destroyed many valuable negatives. A large English firm manufacturing a non-inflammable support is reported to have found difficulties in applying emulsions to the base and has decided to sell the uncoated product on the open market.[7] A raw film factory with a daily production capacity of 60,000 meters is reported to be in operation in Tiflis, Russia.[8]

About the usual large number of patents have been issued relating to cellulose acetate compositions, indicating continued attention of the manufacturers to this important development. In view of the limited interest in the details of these, reference to the patent numbers has been omitted from this report. The references can easily be found by consulting the issues of the "Monthly Abstract Bulletin," published by the Kodak Research Laboratories. A few patents have appeared dealing with methods and machinery used for roll coating of film support.[9] Protection has been granted the idea of incorporating a light sensitive material in a cellulose xanthate or viscose film base.[10]

Patents of interest dealing with emulsion manufacture describe a device for double coating a film support, the incorporation of a hygroscopic substance in an emulsion to accelerate subsequent development with gases or vapors, a process for coating an emulsion to equal thickness on uneven bases, and the addition of protein substances to emulsions to enhance sensitivity.[11]

Of particular interest is a German patent which disclosed a process of light sensitive emulsion manufactured without the use of silver salts.[12] Certain compounds capable of undergoing stereo-isomeric changes under light action are mixed with gelatin, collodion, or cellophane, and coated as a photographic layer. If one of the stereo-isomers is colored and the other is colorless, an image is produced immediately on exposure.

Study Characteristics of Film

The addition of a sound record on motion picture film in conjunction with the picture has increased the necessity for a more thorough understanding of the characteristics of film. Toward this end, Schmidt[13] has contributed a paper discussing the photographic relations of density, transparency, and contrast of negative and positive films having variable density sound records. At the Toronto meeting, Jones and Sandvik[14] dealt with the photographic characteristics of sound recording film giving the results of practical tests on several different emulsions. Sensitometric characteristics, resolving power, contraction, and growth of images were discussed. Conklin[15] has described the use of a set of transparencies which may be superimposed on a sensitometric (H. & D.) curve for rapid determination of the characteristics of the emulsion under investigation.

Patents relating to sound film emulsions dealt, among others, with the following methods: The preparation of a tinted film having a narrow uncolored strip along one side on which the sound record may be printed; several patents by Gaumont cover their method of making sound records reproducible only by ultra-violet rediation.[16]

The importance of pitch measurement in film perforation has been treated by Carson[17] in the Journal of this society. Several patents[18] have been taken out on methods of reinforcing the edges of film strips, on anti-static layers in film, and on edge printing.

B—Studios and Locations

The major portion of the motion picture studios in the United States had been equipped for sound recording by the end of 1929 and new studios built by the leading producers. The trend is toward large sound-proof structures that may be opened into one another for large exteriors, long shots, and reviews. Two huge sound stages have been completed in Hollywood recently by two producers. One of these stages is 150 feet wide by 500 feet long and five stories high; it is divided into four parts and when opened will house a set occupying

Advances in Optical Systems Credited with Aiding the Standard in Color

75,000 square feet. Overhead monorail systems facilitate the movement of sets.[19] The other stage has been conceived on equally gigantic proportions and comprises a theatre auditorium capable of seating 1,500 persons and a section which is also designed as a theatre stage; in size, 75 feet deep, 80 feet wide, and 120 feet high. This stage has been designed particularly for the production of lavish spectacles. It is equipped with a steel curtain weighing 65 tons, and each of its 12 floor sections is fitted with a hydraulic lift. A vertical steel track, 65 feet high, permits camera shots in synchronism with the rising stage and curtain.[20]

In order to standardize the quality of motion pictures and to eliminate matter from scenarios which would prove objectionable to the public, the Association of Motion Picture Producers and the Hays organization drew up and approved a production code.[21] In the immediate practical field, Pfitzner has considered the economics of studio management.[22] The requirements for the ideal sound studios have been discussed by Schultz.[23] The increased use made of incandescent lights has necessitated the installation of refrigeration plants in studios in connection with ventilation systems.[24] Ground vibration noises are claimed to be minimized by the use of "floating floors" resting on a base of sound absorbing material and not connected to the outside walls.[25]

A description has been published of a new sound studio located at Wembly, England.[26] Its largest stage is 120 feet by 90 feet in size. Floors are laid on felt runners with a layer of plastic bitumen under the boards. A novel feature of this studio is a tank fitted with a camera booth permitting underwater photography. The four new German studios at Neubabelsberg have been built in the form of a cross, all recording and monitoring being done at the center.[27] A number of French studios are now producing sound pictures, according to reports from France, notably those located at Joinville, Espinay, and Paris. One French studio operating at Courbevoce was destroyed by fire early in February.

New studios have been reported under construction near Moscow by Danashew, who stated that the largest containing five stages would have 175,000 cubic meters of space.[28]

Lenses and Shutters

The characteristics of a new f/2.7 80 mm. lens for soft focus effects were tested by Emmermann and Seeber[29] both for arc and incandescent lighting. Noulet[30] has described two methods for introducing aberration in lenses. The introduction of color motion pictures has made greater demands on the performance of lenses, particularly in the photographing of long shots. A novel lens device for securing wider pictures without the use of wide film is of interest.[31] It consists of two lenses held in a mount which screws on to the front of the camera. A lateral compression of the image is produced so that nearly three times as much image is included in the normal frame. The picture is then expanded to three times normal width on projection.

Patents dealing with lenses and shutters[32] have been noted relating to a method of producing relief effects by alternate exposures through a system of lenses and mirrors, a device for prevention of the picture getting off center, and an apparatus for simultaneously taking details of foreground and background. In the last named patent this is accomplished by oscillating mirrors placed behind a dual objective system in the camera.

Cameras and Accessories

Stull[33] described changes made in the Mitchell camera to adapt it for use with 70 mm. film. The shutter size is doubled, and the gears are cut differently to adapt them to the pitch of the perforations, which is stated to be 0.231 inch for 70 mm. film.

The French camera, "Eclair," was described by Eveleigh.[34] Its features are: lightness, a six lens turret, a direct vision tube sight, and an automatic fade. A new model of the Askania camera appeared which is equipped for single, normal, and ultra-rapid exposures.[35] The Castagna camera, manufactured in Vienna, is housed completely in an all-metal case. It is fitted with a four-lens turret, and the front may be swung open providing easy access to the gate. The shutter design is novel in that a fade may be adjusted to a definite number of crank turns from a minimum sector opening of five degrees to a maximum of 180 degrees.

Fear[36] designed a silent high-speed movement for Bell and Howell, and Mitchell cameras. Pilot pins, accurately fitted, lock the film while the shutter is open and an eccentric has been substituted for a cam for moving the film. More recently, the same inventor introduced a completely new silent camera which is stated to be adaptable quickly to color motion pictures, sound-on-film photography, and wide picture photography either on wide film or by the Fear process, which rotates the images through an angle of 90 degrees, placing the frames longitudinally on 35 mm. film.[37]

According to a well known director, the use of synchronous electrical camera drives, necessitated by simultaneous longshot and close-up exposures in sound motion picture work, has freed first cameramen from actual cranking and given them more time to consider pictorial composition.[38] Cowan[39] reported on a survey of camera and projection apertures in relation to sound-on-film pictures. A joint committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the American Society of Cinematographers, and the American Projection Society prepared a resolution on recommended practice for cameramen and projectionists. This resolution was recommended as standard practice by the Standards Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at the Toronto meeting in October, 1929. Essentially the resolution suggested that a rectangle 0.620 inch by 0.835 inch be marked on the ground glass of cameras and that an aperture size of 0.600 inch by 0.800 inch be adopted for sound-on-film projection.

Accounts have been published of cameramen's experiences in frigid countries, notably of the troubles encountered by Rear Admiral Byrd's Antarctic expedition.[40] Spring-driven cameras failed at —20° F. Lieberenz[41] was able to keep such cameras in operation even at —40° F. by cleaning the mechanism with gasoline and lubricating with a mixture of kerosene and bone oil.

New Camera Improvements

A viewing device known as the "Orthoviseur" was announced for use on Debrie cameras.[42] It is used for determining the field angle and focus of the particular objective to be used on the camera, namely, 35 mm., 50 mm., 75 mm., and 100 mm. An erect image is produced about 9 cm. by 12 cm. in size and not reversed left and right. A focussing lens giving an enlarged view on the focussing screen has also been made available for the Debrie camera. Smack[43] described the construction and properties of flexible drive shafts for motor-driven cameras. Chutes fitted between the sprocket and magazine assist in minimizing film buckling troubles, according to Henri-Robert.[44] Jonson[45] described a buckle-proof magazine designed for Mitchell cameras.

The added weight of sound-proof housings has resulted in the design of stronger tripods. One of these, called a "camera dolly," is constructed of telescoping steel parts attached to a triangular rubber tired traveling support.[46] Types of equipment and methods used for still photography in German studios were described by Lichtenstein.[47] The use of an amateur motion camera was considered valuable by a Hollywood cameraman as an inexpensive means for making trial shots on sets.[48]

Many improvements have been noted in camera design as shown by the large number of patents[49] issued, which, besides the usual modifications in claw pull-downs, shutters, magazines, deal with the use of derivatives of cellulose, such as acetyl cellulose for the manufacture of film spools; the obtaining of relief effects by movement of a camera round an eliptical or oval path during exposure; and electrical tension regulation for delivery or take-up reels.

An ultra-rapid camera known as the "Trommelapparat" employs a high frequency 30,000 volt arc for illumination intermittently flashed on the subject by means of a rotating sector. The film is wound on the inside of a cylinder which accommodates 100 turns of 40 frames each. Four thousand normal frames may be exposed per second, or 8,000, and 16,000 half or quarter normal frames, respectively, per second.[50]

Only two patents appeared dealing with improvements in motion study cameras.[51]

Exposure and Exposure Meters

A cameraman[52] recounted some of his experiences in making satisfactory exposures in the tropics. Yellow filters and panchromatic film were employed, exposures being made between 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. each day. Emmermann[53] described the properties of silk screens used before the camera lens for the production of diffused negatives. A light intensity meter used for the determination of the light values on motion picture sets, as well as light measurements in connection with printers and screen illumination, was described by McCoy.[54] The meter consists of a shielded photo-electric cell with a range of sensitivity of 100 to 3,000 foot candles, having a broad response covering the visible spectrum. A patent was issued relating to the design of an actinometer of the rotating wedge type.[55]

Does Playing Films Contrary to Release Date Violate Copyright? Court to Decide

Paging Schnozzle

Hollywood—Flo Ziegfeld, who knows a thing or two about feminine pulchritude, told the gang out here that "A good nose is the most important feature a girl can have."

Can you beat that! We have been hitting the high spots for two years with the most beautiful girl in the East, and never recognized beauty. She has a beak which extends just one-half inch below her chin.

Ore. Methodists To Support Bill For Gov't Control

Astoria, Ore.—Resolutions commending the agencies promoting the enforcement of the 18th amendment and rapping the picture industry were drafted by the committee on temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Oregon annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church.

The draft of the resolution pertaining to films reads:

"Whereas, the American motion picture is undermining the Christian influence of home and church, menacing law-abiding citizenship and misrepresenting the American life to the nations of the world; and

"Whereas repeated efforts to improve the moral standards of motion pictures by co-operation with the industry have failed to secure desired results;

"Therefore, be it resolved, that we co-operate with the Federal Motion Picture Council in America, in its effort to obtain the passage of the bill declaring the motion picture to be a public utility and providing for a federal motion picture commission to regulate the trade practices of the motion picture industry and to establish definite moral standards to be applied before the production of films which are to be licensed for interstate and international commerce, the expenses of the commission to be paid by the license fee of pictures."

Baltimore Daylight Time Goes to Fall Referendum

Baltimore—Daylight saving will be placed on the ballots at the coming general election in November, according to a ruling handed down by the attorney general. Thus the question which has agitated Baltimoreans for the past few months and which is now in effect in Baltimore on a "voluntary" basis with many people and organizations observing it, but all the picture theatres operating on standard time, excepting one, will have a referendum and the people will be able to vote on it.

Technicolor May Earn $5

Estimates place earnings of Technicolor for the current year in excess of $5 a share.

Distributors Ask Damages From Cincy Exhibitors In Unique Action

Cincinnati—Something entirely new in film procedure has been launched here with filing of suits alleging violation of the copyright law by an exhibitor for failure to observe release dates on films involved.

Moses Wilchens, Raymond G. Julius and Isaac Frankel are defendants in the unique action brought by Paramount, Universal, M-G-M and Educational. The Colonial and Ohio, which the defendants operate, allegedly violated the release dates stipulated by the distributors.

Damages of $6,250 and costs are involved in the action, because the defendants are suing under terms of the copyright law which stipulates damages of $250 for each violation. The suit covers 25 pictures. In addition to damages, the plaintiffs ask a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from any further alleged infringements of the complainants.

Gov't Taking Legal Steps To Stop Balto Song Plugs

Baltimore—With a view to taking legal action against those engaged in publishing and selling song sheets in Baltimore, O. Norman Forrest, Assistant U. S. District Attorney, says an investigation is being made now.

Forty Baltimoreans may find themselves liable to action for infringing the music copyright laws and indictments may be sought against them because it is reported that no royalties have been paid on the songs published in the sheets sold, each of which contains about 100 songs.

These sheets have been circulated by an organized body in Baltimore, it is claimed, and under the copyright laws, according to Forrest, each of the distributors, printers, peddlers and wholesalers of the sheets is liable to fine or imprisonment.

Fox Installs Earphones

Hollywood—Sixty-four of the Fox West Coast theatres will be equipped with earphones for the deaf. To equip these houses will require 694 sets.

Hoot Ropes Sally

Hollywood—Hoot Gibson and Sally Eilers, his leading woman in recent pictures, are now in Canada on location—for their honeymoon. They were married Friday night at Baker's Ranch, near Saugus, Calif., with 100 picture celebrities as wedding guests. Carmen Pantages was maid of honor and Marion Nixon, Mae Sunday and Marie Prevost were bridesmaids. Buster Collier was Hoot's best man. After the ceremony the newlyweds left for Banff, Canada.

French Swedes

Hollywood—When Warners start production on the film version of their Broadway musical comedy, "Fifty Million Frenchmen," the comedy team of Olsen and Johnson will have the featured leads. The team is under term contract for pictures to Warners, and recently appeared in "See Naples or Die." Lloyd Bacon has been assigned to direct "Fifty Million Frenchmen."

Copyright Bureau Warning Sounded By Ohio Leader

Columbus—The copyright protection bureau'll get you if you don't watch out is the substance of a warning to members sounded by P. J. Wood, emphasizing that no verbal agreement or consent for holding-over prints "is any protection to you."

The copyright bureau, maintained by distributors, is "very active gathering evidence against theatre owners who, intentionally or unintentionally, are holding over films beyond the number of days specified in their contracts." Get it in writing, summarizes his advice to members.

"Many theatre owners have engaged in the practice of holding over pictures for extra days upon the assurances of the salesman that it was perfectly all right with the exchange to do this. Please remember that if there was no objection to such a practice, the salesman would be willing to write it into the contract. In the future, if you are told by a salesman, or a booker, that you are at liberty to hold pictures an extra day or two, please immediately report to this office the name and connection of such person giving you this erroneous advice.

"Bear in mind that these 'hold-overs' constitute a violation of the copyright law and that the amount of damages asked by the Copyright Bureau is out of all proportion to the film rental involved. Do not think because your contract specifies $20 for a two-day run, and you hold the picture over for an additional day, that the payment of $10 to the exchange will be accepted in settlement.

"If you are now showing pictures beyond the number of days specified in your contract or 'confirmation of play dates' without the consent of the exchange, discontinue the practice immediately, otherwise you are bound to pay a heavy tribute for abrogating the 'run' provision of your contracts. This applies not only to features but to news reels and short subjects as well.

"Let me caution you once again—if the salesman won't write it in the contract, his verbal promises or assurances are insincere and of no weight whatsoever."

Four Bits Gets Whopping Shows On A.C. Boardwalk

Atlantic City—Competition with a vengeance is raging along the boardwalk of this resort. Just imagine these attractions for a 50 cents admission at the Steel Pier: "Journey's End," "Mamba," and "Anna Christie," seven acts of vaudeville, a minstrel show, high diving horses, automobiles looping the loop, a "human skyrocket," water circus, "dip of death" bicycle rider, man shot from cannon, acrobats, Hawaiian village, Hollywood exhibit, war relic exhibit, airplane exhibit and dancing.

The triple feature program, plus the other attractions, is bucking Warner shows at the first runs along the boardwalk. One other pier, the Million Dollar, presents first runs, but shows only one feature picture, together with its other pier attractions.

The consolidated net profit of the Stanley Company of America and subsidiaries (including extraordinary profit arising from the sale of investments) after all charges, for the 26 weeks ended March 1, 1930, was $2,285,705. Warners own in excess of 99 per cent of the capital stock of the Stanley Company.

Paramount Publix Shows Large Stockholder Gain

Paramount Publix stockholders on June 6, 1930, numbered 16,486, a new high record in the history of the company. On March 7, 1930, there were 13,731 stockholders, and in June, 1929, 9,855 stockholders.

Doug and Mary Retirement to Bring Merger?

Schenck to develop merger or amalgamation plans that might benefit the company's situation.

Should this develop and a closer alliance with Paramount than now exists become a fact, grouped in the one gigantic line-up of companies would be the Zukor organization, Fox, M-G-M and U. A. It is regarded as significant in some quarters that some time ago Paramount loaned $3,000,000 to Art Cinema, finance unit of the Schenck productions as well as of other units releasing through United.

The step would likewise be significant in the part it would play in realigning the industry's checker-board of major affiliations and might easily lead to closer relations between Warners and R-K-O than the booking deal closed a few days ago.

Schenck is in New York, but has proved difficult to reach either by telephone or otherwise. Several messages deposited with his secretary have remained unanswered.

Brooks, President 21 Times

Albany—Harry M. Brooks, of Troy, has been elected president of the operators' union of that city for the 21st consecutive time. This holds true of Al Lemay, financial secretary of the organization. Charles H. McCarthy was named vice-president; George L. Nugent as recording secretary, and John Ross, treasurer.

Del Ruth on Outside

Hollywood—Under the terms of his contract with Warners, Roy Del Ruth is permitted to make a picture a year for an outside organization. This year it looks like Paramount in the East.

Summer Heat Slips K. O. To Baltimore Biz

Baltimore — Hot weather in June knocked theatre business here for a goal. Part of this may have been due to the daylight saving time observed by many persons and industries in the city. But the slump has been felt principally by those theatres that have refused to conform their time schedules to meet the requirements of the daylighters.

Investigation into the residential house situation reveals the same conditions. Those houses that have changed their hours to suit the daylighters as well as the standard timers appear to be getting along just as well and, in some instances, better than they did previous to the daylight saving period in the summer.

Those, however, who have refused to make any concessions to daylighters seem to be losing somewhat but the consensus of opinion appears to be that the change to daylight saving has not drastically cut into the summer business of neighborhood houses.

Exhibitors Optimistic

Generally speaking, film conditions are on the up and up. This is evidenced by the faith certain exhibitors have in the future, shown by their contemplated building operations.

The Palace, operated by Gaertner Brothers, and the Patterson, a Durkee house, have been closed and while the former is to be extensively remodeled to reopen with only the projection and sound equipment retained, the Patterson is to be torn down and rebuilt as an entirely new house.

Walter Pacy is having his McHenry in South Baltimore enlarged by 350 seats and there is a possibility that the Ideal, Hampden, owned by Julius Goodman, and the Astor, owned by a company of which Robert Kanter is president, may be reconstructed to increase the capacity.

Fox Organizes Unit to Make Spanish Versions

Hollywood—With its own staff of writers, directors and technicians, Fox's new Spanish department will commence production immediately. The unit will concentrate on all Spanish talkers, with John Stone, formerly in charge of silent and synchronized work, in control.

"One Mad Kiss" starts the new policy. It stars Don Jose Mojica.

over sound recording apparatus applied to the film at its point of exposure for picture taking would interfere with the field of view. Nevertheless synchronism in recording and reproducing the pictures and sounds (with due allowance for the difference in the speed of light and sound waves) is necessary for the best results. This is accomplished both in the recording and reproducing apparatus in the following manner.

The film travels in succesion over the guide roller 7, positively driven feed sprocket 8, guide roller 9, upper intermittent sprocket 10 and its guide roller 11, down between the lower intermittent feed sprocket 12 and its guide roller 13, positively driven sprocket 14 and its guide roller 15, thence under the guide roller 16 and over the roller 17 to the receiving reel 4. This feed mechanism forms the loops 18 and 20, the feed sprockets drawing the film from the upper reel, and the sprockets 10 and 12 feeding it intermittently past the lens system at 19, after which the roller 14 and reel 4 cause the film section 21 to pass through the sound reproducing apparatus (or the recording apparatus) at a uniform constant speed. The loops 18 and 20 may be of a length usually employed in motion picture cameras or projecting machines. The usual shutter and other mechanism commonly employed in cameras or projecting machines will be employed, but for simplicity of illustration such parts are omitted.

There are thus two sections of film, spaced apart a fixed distance, one for intermittent exposure in taking or reproducing motion pictures, and the other for continuous exposure in making or reproducing sound records. The pictures and sounds are recorded or reproduced concurrently, and if film sections 19 and 21 in the reproducing machine are spaced or timed the same as in the recording apparatus the pictures and sounds will be in synchronism when reproduced. Varying the relative positions of film sections 19 and 21, or varying the timing of the two exposures will result in varying the synchronism to compensate for the difference between the speed of light and sound waves, so that they both may be so transmitted over considerable distances as to arrive at the selected point in unison. The flat film section 19 is opposite the picture-illuminating section, 22, of the lamp-house 23, and in line with the usual picture-projecting lens and shutter (if one be used) which may be mounted on the frame 2. The lower vertical film section, 21, is opposite the lower section, 24, of the lamp house which, as herein illustrated for convenience of description, is shown as containing an arc lamp, 25, fed from the lighting circuit 26, or any other suitable source. As will be seen, the lamp house 23 is mounted adjustably on guide rails, 27, mounted on the base or stand 28, that carries the entire projecting apparatus.

The lower vertical film section, 21, as well as that portion of the film 1 below the positively-driven sprocket 14 (unlike the upper section 19 and its loops 18 and 20, which are affected by the intermittent-feed mechanism) will travel at a continuous and uniform speed, since the take-up device 5 causes this portion of the film to be wound up on reel 6 under a slight tension as rapidly as the teeth of the steadily revolving sprocket 14 release it. It is this lower section, 21, therefore, which is removed a distance of approximately not more than three picture spaces from section 19, or a total time-interval of about one-fifth (1/5) of a second, (which time interval is susceptible of still further reducation if more than 16 pictures are exhibited per second, that I employ for the reproduction of the sound record that has previously been impressed upon the film along with the pictures. However, I have been able to devise means hereinafter more fully described, whereby even this minute and practically negligible discrepancy in time may be effectively, completely and automatically eliminated.

I prefer for various reasons, in carrying out my invention, to impress such sound waves upon the film in the form of a translucent photographic record. (see Figs. 8 to 12 inclusive,) in which the waves are represented, when developed, by a ribbon or band of varying degrees of translucency represented in the drawings by a series of dots or shaded lines, the parts of the band representing sounds usually merging one into another in continuous succession in the direction of the length of the film. Such a record held to the light, presents a substantially straight band made up of a succession of lights and shadows, in which the alternations of light and shade and the distance between them correspond with and represent the pitch or frequency of the original sound waves, while the depth or intensity of the shading, or the relative degrees of translucency, correspond with and represent their amplitude.

All degrees of light and shade corresponding to the simplest or most complex sound waves may, by properly adjusted and regulated conditions, be accurately recorded.

Fig. 6 shows the sound recording arrangement. In practice it is combined with the camera which may be of any suitable type. The film feeding mechanism may be similar to that shown in Fig. 1 and is not shown in this figure. In the chamber 30 is located any suitable light 31, such for example as an arc light or an incandescent light of any suitable kind capable of having its luminosity varied at the speed of the variations of sound waves. This chamber is provided with a tube, 32, containing a lens, 33, and an adjustable cap-piece, 34, having a raised central portion, 35, pierced with either a narrow slit, 36, as shown in Fig. 3 or a small round or square pin-hole opening 36' such as shown in Fig. 4, corresponding with light openings of like character that are used in the projecting apparatus illustrated in Figs. 1 and 2.

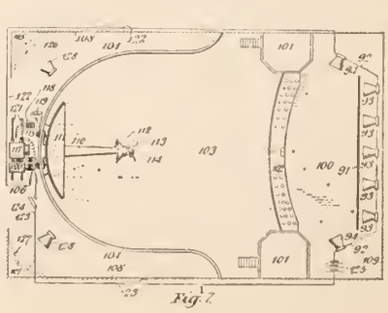
in Fig. 6 is shown a standard 37, containing an adjustable sliding rod 38, that may be extended and turned in any position and if desired may be locked in such position by wing-nut 39. The upper end of rod 38 has a swivel-joint into which is clamped a telephone-transmitter or microphone 40, which is provided with a large tapering horn or megaphone, 41, designed and adapted to collect the atmospheric sound waves and to direct and focus them upon the diaphragm of the transmitter 40. The minimum height of the horn 41, when the device illustrated in this figure is used in connection with a portable motion-picture camera, is preferably such that the entire camera mechanism, including the chamber 30, containing the photophonic recording appliances, may be mounted as a single, self-contained unit below the line of swing of said horn. The mounting of the horn 41 directly upon the camera apparatus is not essential, as the standard 37, the transmitter 40 and sound-receiving horn 41, may be located at convenient points either near the camera or at any desired distance.

The transmitter 40, whether mounted on the apparatus or located at a distance therefrom, is in electrical connection through the circuit or line wires, 48, 49, 42, and primary winding, 43, of an induction-coil whose secondary winding, 44, is in series with a condenser, 45, and with the terminals of the lamp 31, as shown. The terminals of the lamp 31, are likewise independently connected, in the usual manner, by means of the circuit wires shown, with a suitable source of direct current 46, and rheostat 47.



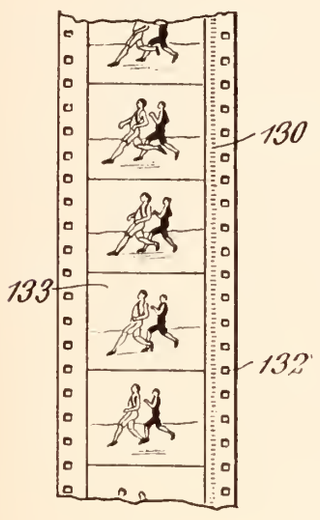
In front of the cap 34, is shown the moving film, 1, traveling downwardly in close proximity to the raised portion 35, so that the portion of its surface intended for the record passes by the light opening 36. This section of the film, indicated by the numeral 21, corresponds with the lower vertical film section 21 in Figs. 1 and 2. It will of course be understood, that the sensitive film 1 in Fig. 6 is completely inclosed and protected from extraneous light by the camera box in which it moves, and that the edge portion or portions of the film on which the photographic record is to be received are shielded from the light and are thus left unexposed during the transit of the film behind the shutter-opening of the picture-taking lens.

The operation of the sound-recording apparatus just described is as follows: Electric energy from the source of direct current 46, passing through rheostat 47 by which its intensity is suitably controlled, travels across the carbons of the lamp 31, forming an arc having the characteristics of a sensitive flame that burns with a steady light and at an approximately constant temperature and luminosity. An arc of this character is capable of being converted by a series of slight but rapid variations in the current supply, into what is known as singing or speaking arc, which is capable of setting up atmospheric vibrations that may be heard directly by the ear at a considerable distance from the arc.

Instead, however, of employing the arc to set up such audible vibrations, I enclose it within the sound-proof casing 30, and cause variation in the strength of the current corresponding to sound waves to be set up. That is, I produce a series of corresponding variations in the intensity of the light emitted by the lamp, by and in accordance with the speech and other sound waves accompanying the scene or action, and simultaneously impressing the successive variations of intensity of the light upon the moving film in the form of a permanent record.

This result I accomplish in the following manner: The sound waves entering the horn 41 from a distant point are concentrated upon the diaphragm of the microphonic transmitter 40, vibrating the same to vary the resistance of the primary circuit containing the battery 42 and the primary coil 43. The latter induces undulatory or alternating currents of high tension corresponding in form and pitch with the sound waves impinging upon the diaphragm, in the secondary coil 44, which currents pass across the condenser 45 and affect the steady current flowing through the arc, 31, from the dynamo or other source 46. The direct current from this source cannot jump across the condenser 45 nor affect the induction coil 44, so that the net result of the variable current impressed upon the current traversing the lamp 31 is to increase and decrease the intensity of the light in accordance with the original sound waves. The light from the lamp 31, (whether this be an arc or incandescent lamp,) passes into the tube 32 and through the lens 33, which converges the rays over the small slit or opening 36 and at least some of them pass through the slit and strike the moving film 1, thus photographically impressing its sensitive surface with a sound record in the manner already explained. As soon as the film is developed, this record is ready for reproduction.

Instead of employing an arc lamp for recording purposes, as in Fig. 6, I find it equally expedient and more satisfactory to use for this purpose an ordinary tungsten or other metal-filament incandescent lamp, such as I have illustrated in Fig. 2, in which such a lamp is shown as arranged and utilized for reproducing purposes. It is well-known that the efficiency of an incandescent lamp, in terms of candle-power produced for a given consumption of current, is very greatly increased with very small increments of current after the lamp has already been raised to and is normally burning at, a relatively high intensity. Furthermore, its ctinic power under these conditions is likewise enhanced. It is these combined qualities that I find particularly useful and which I utilize in my process of converting sound waves into electric waves, electric waves into light waves, and light waves into chemical action upon the film, by the method and appliances already described with reference to Fig. 6.



Court Awards Rights to the Schlesingers

Moreover, in substituting incandescent lamp for the arc, the humming due to the rapid expansion and contraction of a heated gas, such as an arc flame, is substantially eliminated. In addition to this the entire superimposed alternating energy of the talking circuit, impressed upon the normally high candle-power lighting direct current, is effectively employed in alternately raising and lowering the normal candle power of the lamp. This variation, it will be seen, occurs in that part of the spectrum in which the slightest addition or subtraction of electrical energy (such as would be caused by a very small to and fro movement of the transmitter diaphragm,) will produce a considerable fluctuation in candle power and in its resultant actinic or photo-chemical action upon the film. Since the induction coil and condenser used by me cause the setting up of induced currents flowing alternately in opposite directions through the lamp filament, those currents that flow with the normal lamp current serve to reinforce it and augment the candle power, while those that flow against the normal lamp current oppose it and cause a diminution of the normal luminosity.

If this action took place while the filament were burning at a very low candle power, say a bright red, the effect of the superposed telephone current would scarcely be noticeable. But if the filament were burning at a brilliant white, or a bluish white incandescence, such superposition of the telephone current, I have found, will produce a very decided and sharply defined variation in candle power, a variation that is entirely too rapid to be perceptible to the eye, but which is quite strongly marked when produced upon a moving film. However, since by the use of my focusing lens I concentrate a considerable amount of light upon an exceedingly small surface, I find that it is not essential to overstrain the lamp-filament. The strength of the source of light and the photographic materials and speed of photography are adjusted to each other for this purpose in accordance with the well known practice in the photographic art. In fact, a very small tungsten filament lamp using an almost insignificant amount of current will more than suffice to produce a strong, well defined and powerful record, a record that is practically free from all scratching and other extraneous mechanical sounds inseparable from the use of ordinary phonographic records.

Coming now to the method and appliances I have devised for reproducing my sound records, reference is made to Fig. 2, which, with certain modifications, shows on a larger scale the sound reproducing apparatus illustrated in Fig. 1, and already partially described.

In Fig. 2, the light chmber, 51, (corresponding with 24 in Fig. 1,) contains a small tungsten or other suitable metal-filament incandescent lamp, 52. This lamp is supplied with direct current from a battery or other source 53. Behind the lamp is mounted a standard, 54, carrying an adjustable reflector 55, which may be secured upon the standard by thumb-screw 56. In front of the lamp, mounted in the wall of the lamp chamber, is a flanged cylinder, 57, which supports an adjustable lens tube provided with a lens, 58, and a rack and pinion, 59, for focussing the lens 58, the latter being shown as secured in its tube by a flanged clamping ring 60. This clamping ring is adapted to enter within a hood, 61, the two forming a light-tight and dust-proof connection between the light-chamber and that part of my sound-reproducing apparatus which co-operates with the film.

This last named apparatus, as shown, consists of a closed, box-like chamber having top and bottom walls 62, 63, two side walls (not shown,) and a rear wall, 64. The top and bottom walls are provided with slots 65, 66, through which the vertical section 21 of the developed film, 1, is free to pass, this section of the film extending between the two lower sprockets 14 and 16, as shown in Fig. 1. The front of the box is closed by the perforated plate 67, (see Figs. 3 and 4), which may if desired be held in position by a removable clamping frame 68 to facilitate changing the plate to form a wide or a narrow sound record.

Secured to the inner face of the rear wall 64, and preferably covering its entire surface, is a variable, electrical resistance, 69, adapted to be influenced in its conductivity when impinged upon by light. I may employ as such variable resistance a "selenium cell" of any desired or appropriate construction, but I prefer to use a selenium cell or grating, 69, of a special type that I have invented for this purpose, the design and construction of which is illustrated in detail in Fig. 5. This consists of two thin, interlaced sheet-metal stampings, 70 and 72, marked + and — respectively, the space between and around the uniformly spaced, interlaced prongs of which is completely filled with melted selenium, 71. Usually, if desired, a very thin layer of selenium may also be spread over the top surface of the grating 69, that is formed by the two conducting grids 70 and 72. These grids terminate in a pair of binding posts, marked + and —, respectively, secured to the back of the rear wall 64.

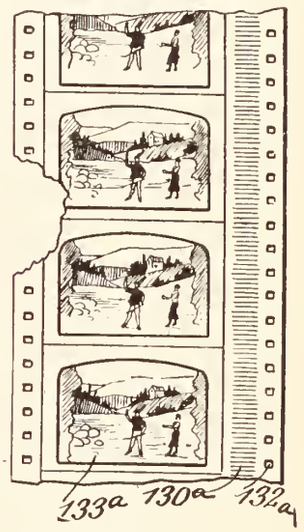
Within the chamber, suitably placed between the film section 21 and the variable resistance grating 69, is a small double-concave lens, 73, mounted upon a fixed support, 74, so that its focal axis is opposite the light-opening, 36 or 36', in the plate 67. Upon the shaft of the lower guide roll 16, which if desired may be in the form of a sprocket wheel, I place a small belt 75, arranged to drive a centrifugal governor 76, whose disc, 77, is adapted to raise and lower a lever 78, so as to make or break the circuit of battery 53.

The purpose and function of this governor, 76, and its associated parts, as will be apparent, is automatically to open the circuit of battery, 53, and thus to extinguish the lamp 52, if for any reason the speed of the film 1 is unduly reduced, or when the projecting machine comes to a stop, or again during the starting up of the same from a position of rest until it has gained its minimum or normal operative speed. In this manner, I eliminate all possibility of accidently overheating or burning the film by reason of any prolonged focusing of the light from the lamp 52, upon any given spot on the same. I will say, in passing, that I may also use the same governor to extinguish the picture-projecting lamp, particularly if this be of the high candle-power incandescent type which under certain operating conditions I find it feasible to suhstitute for the arc, and thereby dispense with the usual fire-shutters now generally employed. The use of this automatic lamp extinguishing safety device will serve, incidentally, to insure a more correct and uniform operation of the projecting apparatus on the part of the attendant.

The operation of the remaining devices described with reference to Fig. 2 are as follows. The rearwardly extending light-rays from the incandescent lamp 52, impinge upon the reflector 55, which in some cases I may make in the form of a parabolic reflector having the lamp, 52, in the focus thereof. From this reflector they are projected against the lens 59, as indicated by the arrows. The forwardly extending rays from the lamp filament are in like manner directly projected upon the same lens, being added to those coming from the reflector 55. The lens 59 concentrates and brings the combined rays thus falling upon it to a focus directly upon that given spot of my sound record, usually located near one edge of the translucent film-section 21, (as indicated more clearly in Figs. 8, 9 and 10,) which at the moment is passing behind the narrow slit or light-opening 36. It will thus be evident that this spot, which may represent, say a portion of a single sound wave, is very highly illuminated, and that the amount of light transmitted through the film at this spot will depend directly upon its relative degree of translucency, which changes rapidly from moment to moment with each succeeding wave that passes the slit. The light rays pass, preferably through a small double-concave lens 73, which is placed close to the film causing them to diverge and to spread preferably over the whole of the large area of my selenium grating 69, as shown by the dotted lines. By this novel means I produce a wide and uniformly distributed variation in the electrical resistance of the selenium between the + and — grids, 70 and 71, which variation will be in substantially direct proportion to the varying intensity of the distributed light.



It may be mentioned here that in reproducing my photophonic sound records, it is not essential to have the emulsion side of the translucent film face the light rays coming from the lamp 52. It suffices merely to transmit the convergent rays at the desired focal intensity through the film so that the plane of the photographically developed sound-record surface will intersect and pass through the concentrated light rays. I prefer to place my sound-reproducing lamp 52, together with its light concentrating and projecting system, on the opposite side of the film from that shown in the drawings, thus reversing the position, with reference to the film 1 at the point 21, of the lamp 52 and the selenium grating 69. Moreover, in the reproduction of my photographic sound records, unlike the reproduction of an ordinary photograph, the sound is the same whether it is reproduced from a negative or a positive print.

On referring to Fig. 1, the manner in which the variation in the electrical resistance of the grating 69 is utilized in the present application of my invention, will now be made clear. To the + and — binding posts of the selenium grating 69, are attached the conducting wires 81 and 82. These wires extend, let us assume, from a picture-projecting booth located on or above the balcony of a theater,—in which booth the entire projection apparatus shown at the left hand portion of Fig. 1 is placed—to the stage of the same theatre. The location of this stage is represented at the right-hand portion of Fig. 1 by the talking-picture screen, 91, and the sound-reproducing horn 90, of my photophonoscope.

The dotted lines 83, 84, represent a continuation of the conducting wires 81, 82, and are run from the aforesaid balcony and joined to the remaining circuit wires, 85, 86, located on the stage, a primary battery, 87, being included at any convenient point in the sound reproducing circuit. Ordinarily, I may connect the wires 85 and 86 directly with one or more telephone receivers placed on the stage, generally behind the screen 91, and in this case the battery 87 is alone sufficient, without any additional appliances, to cause an absolutely pure reproduction of the photographed voice-record, by virtue of the changing resistance of the selenium grating 69, and the automatic corresponding increase and decrease of the current which the battery 87 sends through the telephone or telephones.

However, in order to increase the volume of the reproduced sound, especially when my apparatus is used in large auditoriums, I preferably introduce in this circuit any suitable amplifying device or devices, by which speech may be intensified to fill the entire auditorium. I have illustrated as one type of such amplifying device that I find useful for this purpose, a loud-speaking electrochemical telephone receiver of a well-known type, to the terminals of which the wires 85 and 86 are connected. This apparatus consists essentially of a diaphragm of relatively large diameter, which I place within the base of the megaphone, 90, said diaphragm having a flexible, spring-pressed metallic arm, preferably of palladium, 89, extending from the center thereof and bearing upon the surface of a uniformly driven rotating cylinder, 88, preferably of compressed chalk, that is kept in a moistened condition by any suitable means, as by an occasional wetting of its surface about once or twice a week, from the liquid-containing receptacle 92. With the shaft of cylinder 88, one of the wires leading from the battery, 87, is in electrical contact, the other wire being connected with the arm 89. In some cases I may also introduce an induction coil in this circuit to augment the effect. The passage of a variable current between the moistened cylinder and the arm, by its electrolytic action, effects a corresponding and very pronounced variation in the mechanical friction between the two surfaces. In this manner, oscillations of large amplitude are produced in the diaphragm, in exact accordance with the density of the photographic sound record on the film, 1. The effect of these oscillations upon the column of air contained within the megaphone, 90, is such as to still further augment the volume of sound emitted, so that it becomes possible with this arrangement of the various parts of my apparatus, audibly to reproduce and amplify the sound record on the film to such an extent, if necessary, that the reproduced speech, vocal, instrumental and other sounds will be louder and carry farther than the original sound vibrations themselves.

Although I have herein shown and described one specific type of sound-amplifying apparatus, I desire it understood that I do not limit myself to this type, as I may employ any other form of telephonic relay or other sound amplifying devices.

It will now be clear how the original atmospheric sound waves incidental to a given act or scene are automatically converted into light waves, the light waves into a chemical sound record upon the film, and which, together with a similar record of the series of pictures of the scene taken therewith upon the same film, are developed to form a photographic negative, and how this combined picture and sound record may subsequently be transferred, by photoprinting in the usual manner, upon any desired number of positive films. It will further be clear how the voice or other sound record, by merely passing either the negative or a positive film through the reproducing machine in the usual manner, is again automatically and instantaneously converted into light waves, the light waves into electric current waves and the electrical waves either into electro-magnetic waves that operate the diaphragms of one or more telephone receivers by which they are directly again converted into sound waves, or into electro-chemical or other equivalent waves or impulses by which they are amplified, and the amplified waves finally converted into reinforced sound waves that are a reproduction of the original sound waves, free from all superimposed or extraneous disturbing influences.

Notwithstanding the slight difference in displacement between the picture-section 19, and the sound-record section 21, of the film 1, it is possible to project both the picture and the sound corresponding therewith so that they will reach the observer simultaneously and in synchronism. I will now describe one or two methods by which I accomplish this in operating my picture taking and projecting apparatus.

Let us assume that the distance between the screen and the average center of the total number of auditors, as generally distributed throughout the floor and galleries of a large play-house, to be say, 115 feet. The light from the picture reaches the eyes of the auditor at that distance instantaneously, while owing to its lesser speed, the sound would lag behind approximately one-tenth of a second. Of course, it will be realized that this has always been the case in auditoriums, in which the voice of a speaker or singer lags more or less as heard by the auditor, (according to the latter's distance from the stage,) behind the lip motion accompanying the utterance. Consequently, if this can be rectified by talking pictures a decided gain will have been accomplished over the actual performance.

Now, it has been mentioned that, both in my camera and in my reproducing machine, speech is impressed and reproduced, respectively, at some distance on the film below that of the corresponding picture, this overlapping of the two records amounting as was stated, to a time interval, if measured along the length of the film, of approximately one-fifth of a second. But inasmuch as the picture and voice sections, 19 and 21, of the film, are simultaneously exposed at their respective optical centers, both in taking and reproducing the combined record, this apparent displacement is automatically neutralized, and the voice and its picture are normally in as perfect synchronism as if they were both impressed alongside of each other on the film section 19. It still remains, however, to compensate for the slight difference between the speed of the light and sound waves.

It will now become apparent that, in the taking of my picture, it is not essential that the receiving horn, 41, (Fig. 6) be removed to the distance of the average auditor, but it may be placed much nearer the stage than the camera and the voice transmitted to the latter electrically at the same speed as light. The photographic record of this voice will thus be impressed upon the traveling film so as to overtake the photographic record of its corresponding motion-picture, especially since the former is susceptible of being impressed on the negative film at a point several pictures in advance of the latter, as will presently appear. In reproducing from the positive film, the voice record is likewise electrically transmitted from the projecting machine to the stage (as well as to any other desired points in the auditorium), at which it is telephonically reconverted into sound, in advance of the projection of its picture. By thus thansmitting sound waves electrically in both directions, at the speed of light, in the manner described, both the sound and the picture may reach the middle of audience simultaneously.

Any desired amount of such phase-displacement along the film, or inter-compensation between the light and sound record, may be given to suit different conditions that may arise, and the same film record may be adjusted to suit such different conditions so as to produce synchronism whether the sound waves are transmitted electrically or by the intervening atmosphere. For example, in taking talking-pictures I may and preferably do normally lengthen the lower loop, 20, to the extent of two, three, or more additional pictures, in which case the sound record can be made to overtake the corresponding scene record to a still greater extent. In exhibiting reproductions of this film in auditoriums of different sizes, all the operator need then do is, in threading up his projecting machine, to adjust the length of this loop to the size of the exhibition hall, or to the average distance that the reproduced sound will have to travel, in order to secure registration between the picture and its sound in the auditorium. By the use of this simple and effective expedient, it becomes immaterial whether the voice record is taken at a point closer to the scene than the picture record or at the same distance. It will thus be seen that my system is sufficiently flexible to lend itself to the proper taking and reproduction of every conceivable kind of subjects and under the most diverse conditions, with the assurance that either natural or absolute registration between the sound and its picture, whichever may be preferred, be secured and maintained.

Referring now to Fig. 7, this represents a plan view of part of a theater or opera house, in which performances for my talking-pictures may be staged and in which such pictures may likewise be reproduced. In this figure, 100 represents the stage; 101, the proscenium boxes in front of the wings; 102, the space reserved for the orchestra; 103, the space occupied, below the stage level, by the orchestra seats; 104, the first or second balcony circle; 106, the space behind or over the balcony circle for the picture taking and projecting apparatus; 105 and 107, reserved spaces in the respective corners of the balcony; 108, the side walls of the auditorium; and 109, the rear or stage wall of the same.

Fixed to the front wall of the balcony, at the center thereof and in a position where it will not interfere with the view of the stage, I provide a concave sound-collecting board, 111, secured to said wall by a bracket arm, 110, which extends forward and supports near its outer extremity and in such a position as to be directly in the focus of said sound-collecting board, a wide-mouthed microphone-transmitter, 112. Wires 113 and 114 run from the transmitter terminals, back along the arm 110 to insulated binding posts 115 and 116, which connect by means of the transmitter circuit wires shown, with the sound-recording appliances of the picture-taking camera, 117. Included in this circuit is shown the transmitter battery 118, and a switch, 119, for opening the battery circuit when the camera is not in use, or when a sound record is not to be made. The mechanism of this camera and its associated sound-recording appliances, are substantially the same as already described with reference to Fig. 6, etc.

Alongside of the camera, 117, is located the talking-picture projecting machine, 120, which is similar to that described with reference to Figs. 1 and 2. Both these machines are mounted together upon a pair of guide rails, 121, upon which they can alternately be moved into and out of their respective operative positions. From the terminal posts of the selenium grating of the projecting machine 120, are brought out the circuit wires, 122, 123, which run back to the stage as shown. A switch, 124, together with a battery 125, is also included in this circuit to enable the operator to open the battery circuit and then cut out the talking or sound reproducing instruments when these are not required. In some cases, I may also include a suitable induction coil, (not shown) in the sound reproducing circuit. Behind the screen 91, which is dropped across the stage, 100, when reproduction is going on, I arrange a series of loud-speaking telephone receivers 93, and also supplement these with additional receivers 94, which are located at the sides of the stage near the wings. These receivers, as shown, are all connected up in series by means of the wire 92, although in some cases I may, and generally prefer, to connect them in parallel circuit. In lieu of these receivers, which I have here represented as an enlarged form of the usual magneto type, I may substitute receivers of a relay or other amplifying type, such, for example, as I have illustrated in and described with respect to Fig. 1. The receivers, 93, may for convenience be mounted on a drop frame that can be lowered into position from the flies when the screen 91 is in use, while the wing receivers, 94, may be permanently attached to the proscenium arch, the framework of the boxes, 101, or other suitable point at the sides of the stage.

The operation of these devices, shown in Fig. 7, is as follows:—Let it be assumed that a grand opera, with full orchestra, and staged with all necessary scenic effects, is to be given, and is to be taken by the camera, 117, for the purpose of making a photophonoscope film record of the same. The position of the singers in the cast, as distributed over the stage, 100, are indicated by the cross marks, (+) while the instruments of the orchestra, 102, are represented by the small circles (o). As will be seen, the sound-collecting board, 111, with the transmitter, 112, at its focus, is directly in front of both, and at a distance from the stage that will bring the sound-reflecting surface of the collecting board at a fairly approximate average distance of the entire audience from the performers.

Three important features connected with this part of my invention will now at once become apparent. First, the sound collecting area of the surface presented to the stage by the board 111, is many hundreds of times greater than that of a pair of human ears, and that practically the whole of this magnified sound-volume is reflected and concentrated upon a single and exceedingly sensitive mechanical ear, comprising the microphone-transmitter, 112. Second, the form and location of the concave board or "sound mirror," 111, is such as will cause it to collect and to reflect into the transmitter, 112, in segregated form, vocal and instrumental sounds, overtones, consonant sounds, etc., emanating from every part of the stage and orchestra, however widely separated the singers and instruments may be, as indicated by the dotted lines and arrows showing the direction of the direct and reflected sound waves. Third, that this arrangement entirely avoids the necessity of compactly grouping the singers and musicians, as has heretofore been the practice in the production of phonograph and gramophone records in order that as much sound as possible might enter the phonograph horn, and also that it removes the necessity for placing the horn so close to the singers as to be in the way of photographing them. Furthermore, it eliminates the limitations hitherto placed upon such singers in the matter of having to face the phonograph while singing into it as well as restricting their freedom of movement, both of which, or either alone, might prove fatal to the reproduction in the form of talking pictures of an operatic or dramatic performance.

With my apparatus the singers or actors are not restricted in their actions nor are they confined to a narrow area. In fact, the largest stage or arena may be covered, not only as to the sound record, but also as to the picture record. This will be manifest from an inspection of Fig. 7, in which the camera, 117, is shown at about the average distance of the audience from the stage so that, without the necessity of employing a wide-angle lens with its unavoidable distortion effects, a natural effect will be given to the view, not only of the stage settings, but of the singers and orchestral artists, the sound of whose voices and instruments, respectively, are likewise recorded, along with their accompanying motions, upon the film.

It will be evident, moreover, from an inspection of Fig. 7, that the concentrated intensity of the sound waves acting upon the diaphragm of the transmitter, 112, will cause correspondingly powerful variations in the intensity of the beam of light falling upon the sound-recording portion of the film as it passes through the camera, and that this record will act more strongly upon the sound-reproducing appliances and thus be heard with greater clearness by the audience.

To still further increase the accuracy and sensitiveness of my transmitters and to reduce to a minimum the distortion of original characteristics of sound waves in making voice-records, I may in certain cases employ my "liquid" or "capillary" type of microphone transmitters, described in U. S. Letters Patent Nos. 777,808 and 871,737, granted me on December 20, 1904, and November 19, 1907, respectively.

The intensity of a sound of normal strength, varies inversely as the square of its distance from the ear, or in this case, from the sound-collecting board 111. In other words, a voice at the front center of the stage would affect the transmitter, 112, more strongly than the same voice would if removed to the side or rear of the stage. Now, just as the trained human ear is capable of distinguishing between and of individualizing the sounds of the separate instruments of a large orchestra, and as a less carefully trained ear is capable of detectiug and separating the combined individual voices of a quartet or sextette, and of following a single voice moving forward or across the stage, so these various composite sounds will impress themselves in the direct ratio of their varying individual qualities and intensities, upon my microphone-transmitter, and by it be faithfully recorded upon the film in the manner already described.

When my film record is reproduced, as by shifting the projecting machine, 120, shown in Fig. 7, into its central or operative position, and closing the switch, 124, the machine being set in operation, the animated picture portraying the scene and the cast are thrown upon the screen 91. Concurrently therewith the photographic sound record on the film is reproduced in the circuit wires 122, 123, and 92, in which latter are included the loud-speaking telephone receivers, 93, extending across the stage behind the screen, 91, and the telephone receivers, 94, in front of the screen at the extreme sides of the stage and which are pointed diagonally forward in a manner that will project the sounds therefrom onto the stage and into the auditorium without interception by the screen, 91. All of these receivers, being simultaneously influenced by the same electric current, operate in perfect unison, and distribute the reproduced sounds directly upon the stage, along the length of the screen, and into the auditorium, where it is heard by the audience and by it automatically referred to the proper character represented upon the screen.

By this arrangement of my telephone-receivers, I am enabled still further to localize upon the screen the voice of any individual singer. This arrangement will enable me to heighten the effect of a solo number, as a spot-light is now used to bring an actor or singer into greater prominence, by wiring up the telephone through a commutating switch, by which the entire seven receivers shown are normally included in the circuit but are arranged so that a brush or switch-arm may be manipulated to cut in any particular one or more of these receivers alone, which are selected according to the position of the soloist upon the screen, and, which also permits any movement of such character across the screen to be followed up telephonically in the same manner by a corresponding movement of the brush or arm, along the commutator sections or switch points. Similarly, a duet may be directly emphasized, if or while the two characters are widely separated, by the inclusion of a second receiver at the proper point on the screen. By the methods and apparatus just described, I am enabled to reproduce and present the voices and actions of a complete opera or drama with practically the same lifelike realism and thoroughness as the original performance.

The two reserved spaces 105 and 107, before mentioned, which are preferably located in opposite corners of an upper balcony where sufficient unobstructed space is available may be utilized, if required, for the placing against the walls forming said corners, of substitute or additional sound boards, 126 and 127, similar to the board 111, when either still greater sound gathering power, or special effects in recording or in reproducing the sounds, may be desired. The space available at these points, generally quite large, thereby permits of the installation of sound-reflecting boards of much larger area at the proper angle to face the stage. Where these additional boards, 126, 127, are to be employed for recording purposes, however, it would not always be desirable to so utilize them without first cutting out of circuit the board 111, unless all three were located at substantially equidistant points from the center of the stage. Nor would it be desirable, except in smaller size theatres, where this would prove useful, to locate sound-collecting boards in these remote corners, 105, 107. For example, in a very large or deep theater in which a stage performance is to be taken, the distance of these corners from the stage would be so great as to cause an appreciable delay in the sound waves reaching them, which might result in causing the sound-record to lag too far behind its picture, and to overcome which would require an unduly large loop.

However, such auxiliary boards, 126, 127, may be utilized in their alternative capacity, as will presently be explained, for sound-reproducing purposes, when remotely located in large public auditoriums and other gathering places, such as opera houses, convention hal's and the like,—wherein it is now extremely difficult or impossible to hear the voice of even a loud-speaker in distant galleries and other parts of the building,—and the arrangement indicated will be found highly effective and useful. In this application of auxiliary boards, I substitute for the transmitter 112, and place at the focus of my concave boards, a loud-speaking telephone receiver, 128, similar to those represented by the numerals 93 and 94, and directly included in the same circuit therewith, as by cutting them into the wires 122 and 123. The more or less concentrated sounds issuing from the funnels of these receivers are masked by the reversed position of these funnels with respect to the audience, thereby preventing all direct interference with the principal sounds coming from the vicinity of the screen, 91. Instead, they are projected by the funnels rearwardly, directly on to the sound-reflecting surfaces of the boards 126 and 127. These boards thus reverse the preceding operation and distribute the sounds, at a suitably diminished strength among that usually large part or section of the audience sitting at and near the rear seats and corners 105, 107, and in the upper balconies. It will therefore be seen that by means of such simultaneous and instantaneous telephonic transmission and a judicious distribution of my sound-dispersing boards, 126, 127, I am enabled clearly and audibly to project sound records, if desired, to every part of a large auditorium, so that they not only can be distinctly heard in the remotest nook and corner of the same, but in a manner that will at the same time avoid interference by echoes in halls whose acoustic properties are such as would otherwise produce them.

It will furthermore be evident that, I may also interpose or "plug in" any number of ordinary telephone receivers in my reproducing circuit, which may be used individually, by such auditors as desire them, to listen to the sound-record impressed upon the film, while viewing the picture on the screen relating thereto. I may also state here that I do not restrict or limit myself, in the use of these particular features of my invention, to the electrical distribution of sounds, through an auditorium by means of such sound-collecting and dispersing boards, or by telephones used in connection therewith from a previously formed "sound-record," but that these are likewise applicable to and intended to be used by me for the transmission and more effective distribution within the limits of an auditorium or any other place of public assembly, such for example, as an out-door mass meeting, of the voice of the actual speaker or speakers who are addressing the assemblage.

Sound-collecting boards and transmitters can be placed at selected points about the enclosure when making picture and sound records of out-door events, so that records of sounds originating at these points may be impressed separately or collectively upon the film. If instead, it be preferred to preserve the more natural effect or distance of the various sounds of applause, etc., I use either a single large sound-collecting board, preferably placed just above the roof of the grand stand with my transmitter at the focus, or employ two or more similar smaller boards likewise mounted near each other at the selected location, and having their respective microphone-transmitters electrically connected in parallel or series in the photophonic sound-recording circuit forming part of my camera equipment. Many novel effects may thus be produced.

Referring now to Figs. 8 to 12, inclusive, I have therein shown various typical forms of my film. In Figs. 3 and 10, the sound-record indicated by the numerals 130 and 130[a], may extend or run in a vertical direction at one side of the film, a space being reserved for this record between the right-hand sprocket perforations 132 or 132[a], and the series of pictures, 133 or 133[a]. In Fig. 11, the pictures, 133, are shown as running horizontally, and the sound-record as extending in a horizontal direction below the same. The film in Fig. 9 is provided with a plurality of sound-records, two of these, 130[c] and 130[d], extending along the edges of the film outside of the left and right hand sprocket holes 131[c] and 132[c] respectively. This location permits the use of the existing standard size of motion-picture films without diminution of the size of the pictures, and also shows how photographic sound-records may be impressed upon those portions of the film not at present utilized. These sound records may be of any desired width, varying all the way from a fine line, as indicated in Fig. 9, to a narrow ribbon or band, as in Fig. 10, according to the size of the light-opening in the recording cap 34 of Fig. 6.

Fig. 10 shows an extra wide film useful in taking and reproducing performances on a large scale, in which the entire stage, either with or without its proscenium arch as a frame for the setting, may be shown. This film also has an extra wide space for my sound-record, in order to give it ample capacity for the reception and proper reproduction of the powerful sound vibrations of a large chorus and orchestra as well as for reducing the average light intensity when desired to attain the degree best adapted to photographing sound.

The purpose of the arrangement in Fig. 11 is to minimize the objectionable flickering of the ordinary film and the reduction of illumination caused by the use of a shutter, and thus to bring about a superior picture as well as sound reproduction.

In Fig. 9 I have shown means by which the left and right hand sound-records, 130[c] and 130[d], may at will be reproduced separately, jointly, or cut out altogether. Two light-tight reproducing tubes, 135 and 135, each of the general type of that shown in Fig. 2, and corresponding with the hood, section, 61, in that figure, are provided with small light-openings, 36, that register with their respective sound records. A manually-operated slide, 136, provided with a series of notches, 137, that co-operate with a spring detent, 138, fastened at one end to the outside of right-hand reproducing tube 135, passes through suitable guide slots in the walls of the tubes 135, and 135. The slide 136 is provided with two elongated exposure slots, 139, through which light from the lamp may pass and enter the aperture or apertures 36, when either or both are exposed, and thus cause the audible reproduction of either or both of said records, according to the position of the slide 136 as indicated by the scale shown at the right hand end thereof. It will likewise be obvious that by this arrangement either one or both of the sound records, 130[c], 130[d], carried by the film 1, can be reproduced without at the same time reproducing the accompanying picture record 133, by the simple expedient of screening or cutting off the light from the picture projecting lamp, and also that any one or more of a number of parallel sound-records contained on my talking films may be separately or jointly reproduced, as desired, by a proper disposition of the exposure openings in the slide 136, or its equivalent.

When my films are provided with but a single sound-record, as shown for example, in connection with the type of picture represented in Fig. 8, such sound record need not necessarily be one produced by the voice nor one directly related to the characters portrayed. It may instead, consist of some instrumental or orchestral selection appropriate to the act or scene represented by the pictures. In this and other pantomime representations, the appropriate musical selection is a matter of choice and would be merely incidental and serve to add to the effectiveness of the subject exhibited, without necessarily being in synchronism therewith.

To facilitate the reproduction of multiple sound-records, the tubes, 135, are preferably given a slight lateral adjustment, by which the light-openings, 36, may be shifted into alignment with the desired record. In a camera designed for the simultaneous taking of a plurality of individual sound records, a corresponding number of lamps, or sources of light may be employed, and these lamps and their associated projecting lens-tubes are located beneath one another with their centers slightly displaced in a direction transverse to the direction of travel of the film.

The various records on the film may just as readily be reproduced simultaneously in one or more languages to different sections of the auditorium reserved for those understanding the respective languages.

I do not claim herein the recording method or the method of producing combined motion picture and sound records as that part of my invention is the subject matter of divisional application Serial No. 630,197, filed April 6, 1923 (Patent No. 1,473,976, dated November 13, 1923); nor do I claim herein the recording apparatus as that part of my invention is the subject matter of divisional application Serial No. 637,365, filed May 7, 1923; nor do I claim herein the reproducing apparatus as that part of my invention is the subject matter of divisional application Serial No. 633,907, filed April 23, 1923; nor do I claim herein the photographic record per se as that part of my invention is the subject matter of divisional application Serial No. 633,908, filed April 23, 1923; nor do I claim herein the method and installation for producing and for reproducing records in large auditoriums or out-door places as that part of my invention is the subject matter of divisional application Serial No. 633,909, filed April 23, 1923.

Having thus described my invention I claim as new and desire to secure by Letters Patent:—

1. The method of reproducing a sonorous action previously recorded on a photographic film as a band the translucency of which varies along the length thereof with the amplitudes of air vibrations corresponding to the original sonorous action; which method consists in moving the photographic film behind a screen having a small aperture in alignment with the record band, projecting a beam of light of constant intensity through such aperture, restricting the area of the record band exposed to such light to the area of said aperture, and interposing a light-sensitive electric resistance material in an electric circuit, to intercept the light transmitted through the film, whereby the variations in translucency of the photographic record will produce corresponding variations in said electric circuit.

2. The method of sound reproduction which consists in transmitting light of substantially constant intensity through a highly restricted aperture and spreading the transmitted light over a light sensitive electric resistance of relatively large area in an electric circuit, while interposing seriatim in the path of such light successive parts of a sound record, the translucency of which at successively interposed parts corresponds to the successive density and attenuation of the air vibrations accompanying the original sonorous action, restricting the area of exposure of such record as it moves through the beam of light to the area of said aperture, and causing the variations produced in said electric circuit through the variations in translucency of said sound record to be impressed upon a sound amplifying device.

3. The method of sound reproduction, which consists in transmitting light of substantially constant intensity through a highly restricted aperture and spreading the transmitted beam of light over a light sensitive electric resistance of relatively large area in an electric circuit, while moving a sound record, the translucency of which varies with the direction of movement thereof in accordance with the density and attenuation of the air vibrations accompanying the original sonorous action, through said beam of light, and limiting the area of exposure of such record to the area of said aperture, whereby the variations in translucency of the photographic record will produce corresponding variations in said electric circuit.

4. The method of sound reproduction which consists in passing light of substantially constant intensity through a small window aperture in a screen and spreading the emerging transmitted light substantially uniformly over a light sensitive electric resistance of relatively large area in a telephonic circuit, while introducing a light absorbing medium adjacent the aperture, varying in translucency in accordance with the amplitudes of air vibrations accompanying the original sonorous action, and restricting the area of exposure of such medium to the area of said aperture.

5. The method of sound reproduction which consists in focusing light of substantially constant intensity or candle power through a small window aperture in a fixed screen upon a contiguous moving sound record having translucencies which vary as successive portions thereof are exposed to the light in accordance with the amplitude of air vibrations accompanying the original sonorous action, restricting the area of exposure of the sound record to the area of the aperture, and spreading the residual light transmitted through the record upon a light sensitive resistance material having relatively large cross-section in an electric circuit.

Interest Runs High

Interest in the long awaited sound patents decision of Judge Hugh M. Morris, who determined that the Ries patent is the property of Schlesingers, has been running high in certain quarters, particularly in the technical field, inasmuch as the Schlesingers contend that the patent is the only basic patent governing sound-on-film recording and reproducing.

St. Louis Exhibs Asking Fox, Loew to Cut Out Cuts

St. Louis—Exhibitors in this territory, according to the M. P. T. O. of eastern Missouri and southern Illinois, are excited and disturbed over price cuts and are endeavoring to persuade Fox and Loew's to restore the former scale at their St. Louis houses.

The slash has raised havoc with business in neighborhood houses, the organization claims, admitting, on the other hand, that the reduction shot attendance at both the Fox house and Loew's State to record proportions.

Resolutions have been passed and wires sent to Harley L. Clarke, Nicholas M. Schenck, Charles C. Pettijohn and Gabriel L. Hess, seeking their influence to restore old prices.

Fox Organizes Unit to Make Spanish Versions

Hollywood—With its own staff of writers, directors and technicians, Fox's new Spanish department will commence production immediately. The unit will concentrate on all Spanish talkers, with John Stone, formerly in charge of silent and synchronized work, in control.

"One Mad Kiss" starts the new policy. It stars Don Jose Mojica.

Morris in Charge

E. H. ("Buddy") Morris, following resignation of Jay Witmark, is in temporary charge of M. Witmark & Sons, one of the Warner music subsidiaries.

New Advertising Code Gives Thrill To Newspaperman

When the Hays organization sent to the metropolitan press copies of the advertising code adopted last week, Howard Cushman, feature writer for the World, chortled with glee, rushed to his typewriter and banged out the following news story of the event:

"Here's the news, folks—news packed with 1,000 thrills! What lovin'—what a man! The hottest show in . . . . Wait a minute—we're getting all mixed up. It's that movie page we've been reading.

"What this story started to chronicle was that the press agents of all the big movie companies have gone and adopted a code of advertising ethics—you know, like their bosses under Will Hays adopted their own code of sweetness and light a short time ago—and from now on it looks as though the movie stories and the ads will be as dull reading as the financial advertising in the Wall Street Journal.

The code, which will apply to press books, newspaper advertising, trailers, outdoor display, novelty distribution and all other forms of motion picture exploitation, will be based on 'truth, honesty and integrity.' (The quotes are the press agent's who sent out this announcement from the office of the Will Hays organization, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.)

It Looks Unanimous

"All the big member producers of that organization—Fox, Radio, Loew, Metro, Paramount, Pathe, Warner, Tiffany, et al—have signed the pledge, so it looks unanimous. The new code was accompanied by a letter from Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Hays organization.

"Besides the trinity of truth, honesty and integrity, the twelve commandments of the code call for 'good taste as the guiding rule of motion picture advertising' that illustrations and text shall faithfully represent the pictures themselves, that there shall be no false or misleading statements, either directly or implied by type arrangements or by distorted quotations. Then the code declares against the ridiculing of religion or the illustration of a character in clerical garb in any but a respectful manner. The history, institutions and nationals of all countries shall be represented with fairness.

Vulgarity? Never Again!

"Profanity and vulgarity shall be avoided. (We'll tell 'The Cock-Eyed World' it shall!) Officers of the law shall not be pictured so as to undermine their authority, while specific details of crime, inciting imitation, are taboo. So is the use of liquor in American life 'except for the necessities of characterization and plot' (whatever that means). Nudity with meretricious purposes and salacious postures are out, and the advertising must not capitalize court actions relating to the censoring of pictures.

"Ho, hum! It just seems as though we can't go on now without being able to see pictures of movie queens cooking flapjacks for their husbands, film flappers signing testimonials and ghost stories and all the other delightful by-products of movie press agentry. It just seems that we can't give it all up. It has even been suggested that we won't have to. Any bets?"

The Mystery Man

It happened on a Hollywood lot. They were making a picture and the director noticed a strange man on the set. He was a short, stocky man, had a beard, and, to hear Sid Skolsky, of the N. Y. News tell it, was dressed entirely in black. To complete this odd appearance he wore a square black derby.

The director had seen him about for several days. He was afraid to speak to him, thinking he might be the representative of the eastern backers. There's no sense insulting the people who are paying your salary.

After five days of this, an assistant director shouted: "Mr. Housenwaser!" The mysterious man attired in black walked to the microphone. The assistant director held a card before the camera which read: "Cut insert—Cat." Then Mr. Housenwaser whispered: "Meow—Meow" into the mike. The director felt relieved. So this was the famous Mr. Housenwaser who receives $50 a day to make sounds like animals!

Twin City Union Fight May Close Forty Theatres

Minneapolis—Whether some 40 odd houses of the Twin Cities will close or go non-union after Saturday is being awaited with considerable interest here. These independent houses declare they can not exist if they agree to employ two operators as demanded by the union.

Theatres here a few years ago went on a non-union basis in a squabble with operators. They were regarded as victors after a strike lasting several weeks, which was marked by bombings and the throwing of stench liquids.

While Publix is not concerned in the present dispute, it is considered likely that operators will be called out in the circuits and in Orpheum houses if the matter reaches the strike stage.

Biechele Seeks Rest; Was Kans.-Mo. Chief 6 Years

Kansas City—R. R. Biechele, who has just finished his sixth sucessive term as president of the Kansas and Western Missouri MPTO, has at last shifted responsibility to the shoulders of a new president and has left for a vacation in the East. His successor is Earl Van Hyning, of Iola, Kans.

Oklahoma Deal Ends Squabble Over First Runs

Oklahoma City—The first run situation in this town has ceased being a "bottle neck" proposition insofar as Warner and First National product is concerned. The deal which gives Warners control of the six Midwest houses paves the way for heavy company representation along the main stem. Houses in the deal are the new Midwest, Orpheum, Empress, Liberty, Folly and Palace.

The deal, which becomes effective immediately, is a five-year lease with option to purchase at the end of that time. Warners insisted that the Midwest officials remain out of the Oklahoma theatre business for ten years, and the latter agreed.

Tiffany to Release U. K. Films Made by Gaumont

London—Tiffany's 1930-31 product will be distributed in England by Gaumont, thereby continuing the arrangement which has been in effect for several years.

The deal provides for joint production by the two companies in London with Tiffany distributing the pictures so made in the United States. The number has not been set.

Fox Theatres Staff in New Coast Bldg. on Studio Site

Los Angeles—Present site of Fox studio will house a new headquarters structure for all units of Fox Theatres and Fanchon and Marco, work commencing immediately on the first wing of the new building at Sunset and Western. The studios will be gradually moved to Movietone City, and by the first of the year, a whole city block will be devoted to theatre interests.

Katz to Talk

Kansas Exhibs Laying Plans to Tweak Bluenoses

Kansas City—Blue-noses in Kansas will be routed to a fare-ye-well if plans now formulating in exhibitor ranks take form, for the battle for an open Sunday is about to begin.

Enacted sixty years ago, exhibitor opinion throughout the state is that the Sunday closing law is antiquated and has outlived its purpose. The first blow in the conflict may be precipitated by theatre owners in a wide open Sunday all over the state by way of hurling the gauntlet of defiance in the face of the state attorney general.

A leader in the movement is Harry Moulton, manager of the theatre at Sabetha, where Sunday shows are being given. Local ministers there are moving against him, charging a defiance of the law.

Some Showmen Can't Keep Dough

Portland, Ore.—Not only do suburban exhibitors have a hard time getting money. It's difficult occasionally for them to hold on to it.

For instance, the other day a notorious gunman known as the "sock robber" because he uses such a "receptacle" in which to carry off his coin, shoved a diminutive gun through the cashier's cage at the Alameda here and demanded the "gate receipts."

Eva Morarity, cashier, pretended to faint and several minutes elapsed while she sparred for time. The robber became impatient, reached through the window, scooped $50 in silver into his "sock" and hurriedly departed. Not only do the suburban exhibitors have a hard time to get this amount, but they also have a harder time to hold on to it.

Cracks at "Ingagi" Have No Effect on Seattle Run

Seattle—In spite of "official bans" and wide "adverse" publicity heaped upon the much-discussed "Ingagi," that film has been piling up a big gross at John Danz's Columbia, where it is playing a second-run engagement. So big are the receipts that Manager Andy Gunnard is holding the picture over for a second week. All this in the face of the fact that the picture played three weeks to tremendous business at John Hamrick's local Blue Mouse during its first run engagement just a few weeks ago.

The Columbia management advertises the fact that it takes no part in the present controversy as to the authenticity of the scenes in the film, but merely invites the public to come and see for itself whether or not the picture is faked, as reported. The ads never fail to mention the fact that one of the much-discussed scenes shows "wild women consorting with gorillas."

And What a Flapper!

"I just got back from Europe, and I suppose you think I'm all tired out. Well, I'm not. I'm not. I'm a flapper, I insist, and almost tireless," Marie Dressler told a New York newshound who was sent to the Savoy-Plaza to find out how a film player feels at 58.

Miss Dressler told the reporter plenty, as evidenced by a six-column streamer reading:

"'I'm a Flapper,' Giggles Marie Dressler, Who, at 58, Danced Every Night in Europe."

Ministers Fight Sunday Shows; Citizens to Vote

Plant City, Fla.—The city commission has issued a call for a special election July 22 on the question of permitting Sunday shows, following the presentation of petitions bearing names of 38 percent of the registered voters.

Last summer the Capitol here notified the commission it could not successfully operate during the hot months unless permitted to show on Sunday. The commission was in favor of it and it was agreed that no opposition would be made, so plans to open were arranged. The churches, however, couldn't see it at all and threatened to have the manager arrested if he should open. Rather than provoke a fight, the manager decided to withdraw the Sunday opening, and the house was closed during the heated term. This year the theatre decided to have the proposition put to a vote and caused the petitions to be circulated.

'Dawn Patrol' in Winter Garden

Premiere of First National's "The Dawn Patrol," an aviation-war picture, will be staged July 10 at the Winter Garden, New York. F. N. expects a summer run there. Richard Barthelmess is the star, and the story is based on "The Flight Commander," by John Monk Saunders. There are no women in the cast, which includes Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Neil Hamilton, William Janney, James Finlayson, Clyde Cook, Gardner James and Frank McHugh.

Depinet, Sears Return From Three-Weeks' Trip

Ned E. Depinet and Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager and western sales manager, respectively, of First National, have returned from three weeks spent in the middle-west, west and south. In addition to conducting regional sales meetings in Chicago, San Francisco and New Orleans, they spent several days at the company studio.

Methodists Still Look Hopefully For "Reform"

West Palm Beach, Fla.—The Methodist Episcopal church, south, at its annual Florida conference here, adopted resolutions against most everything, including pictures. Regarding them the resolution reads:

"There is a growing conviction that the motion picture industry as now conducted constitutes a real menace to the home and all the moral foundation upon which our country rests. After eight years of failure to fulfill their promise to reform they now renew these promises and, while we hope these reformations will be forthcoming we frankly confess that we have little confidence in those who have so often broken their word. We urge our preachers and people to make a careful study of these influences and take whatever steps they deem necessary to correct them."

Lots of Words; Can't Use Them

Hollywood—The "don'ts" which hedge in and restrict production don't rest well on at least one writer here. Joseph Franklin Poland, who recently ditched studio politics by opening an office of his own as a writing base, is the squawker.

Wails Poland:

"Dialogue must be prepared with particular care that no words or phrases are employed which might offend some class or group. Sometimes words that are innocuous as far as one region is concerned, have a significance in other places that demand their omission altogether. The list of forbidden words and phrases is growing steadily."

Katz Invades Ottumwa And Walks Out Victor

Ottumwa, Ia.—Sam Katz has met Ottumwa and it is his.

The Empire Square and Strand Orpheum have been purchased by Publix from Stephen Braun who has been managing these houses for the past year. The theatres are reported to have been bought for $150,000. This is the first time that Publix has had a theatre in Ottumwa. This purchase carries control of the theatre business, with the two largest houses in Sam Katz's hands. Publix takes the houses over July 7.

Publix Invades Fox Domain; New Theatre for Plattsburg

Albany, N. Y.—Publix is edging into Fox territory. The company is to erect a new theatre at Plattsburg, N. Y., this summer. Harry Harris, of New York, representing Paramount, closed a deal, taking over the Plattsburg Theatre property as well as the adjoining church parsonage. It is understood construction will get under way at once.

Chi Likes Will; Pays $61,000 to Watch Him Chew

Chicago—The Chicago theatre was the standout in a week of generally improved business. This fair-haired child of Publix-B. & K. spent $9,000 to put Will Rogers on its stage for the week, and got back $61,000 (145%). "Lady of Scandal" (M-G-M) was the feature.

The Roosevelt, which opened with "Byrd at the South Pole" (Paramount), in mid-week, was another winner, taking $17,200 (160%) in its first four days. The critics ran out of adjectives for this one, so one of them (Frances Kurner-Tribune) out of helplessness gave it five stars. Four stars has been her maximum designation of picture merit heretofore. The Oriental, with "Floradora Girl" (M-G-M), bolstered with lavish display space in Hearst papers, managed $42,500 (100%). "Big Pond" (Paramount) gave the United Artists $23,000 (105%) in its first week and was held for a second. McVickers managed $27,700 (100%) in its first full week with "Arizona Kid" (Fox). The picture will be replaced at the end of its second week by "Big House" (M-G-M).

The Palace maintained a good pace with $23,500 (96%). "Not Damaged" (Fox) was the feature.

The Castle took $5,300 (175%) with "Lilies of the Field" (F. N.) in on a "pink" permit and getting a big play from the women. The picture will go another week and then be replaced by "Ingagi" (Indie), which has already done nine weeks here at the Garrick. Other Loop spots were normal or only slightly off, remarkable in view of the fact that competition was strong in the Loop during the week and abnormal heat prevailed for several days.

Weather: Fair; cool, hot, cool.

Opposition: "Lilies of the Field," Castle; "Lady of Scandal," stage show, Chicago; "Unguarded Girls," second week, men only, Garrimk; "Arizona Kid," McVickers; "Happy Days," second time in Loop, Monroe; "Florodora Girl," stage show, Oriental; "Divorcee," second time in Loop, Orpheum; "Not Damaged," vaudeville, Palace; "With Byrd at the South Pole," Roosevelt; "He Knew Women," vaudeville, State-Lake; "Big Pond," United Artists; "Midnite Mystery" Woods.

"LILIES OF THE FIELD" (F. N.)

CASTLE—(300), 60c, first week. Other attractions: Newsreel. Gross: $5,300. Rating: 175%. Picture in on a "pink" and getting a big femme play.

"LADY OF SCANDAL" (M-G-M)

CHICAGO—(3,940), 35c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: Stage show headed by Will Rogers; orchestra, comedy, newsreel, novelty short. Biggest figure for this house in plenty of months. Rogers collected nine grand, leaving house a neat profit. Gross: $61,000. Rating: 145%.

"UNGUARDED GIRLS" (Indie)

GARRICK—(1,259), 50c-75c, second week, men only. House takes "All Quiet on the Western Front" (U.), which had four nice weeks at McVickers recently. Picture goes in July 2 at pop prices. Gross ("Girls"): $5,800. Rating: 95%.

"ARIZONA KID" (Fox)

McVICKERS—(2,284), 35c-85c, first full week. Other attractions: Comedy, newsreel, musical short. "Big House" (M-G-M) replaces at end of this one's second week. Gross: $27,700. Rating: 100%.

Week's Balto Low To 'Journey's End' Grossing $3,180

Baltimore—Despite sticky, torrid weather combined with two heavy rains during the first four days of the week, the atmosphere cooled Thursday night and remained so for Friday and Saturday, helping business considerably.

The highspot for the week was Loew's Stanley with Nancy Carroll in "Devil's Holiday." This production was liked very much and grossed about $20,000, giving it a rating of 114%.

Loew's Parkway, with "Big Pond," did very well after having been shown downtown at Loew's Century. At the uptown theatre it took in $4,300, which gave it an estimated 98% rating.

"Courage," which was shown simultaneously at the Metropolitan uptown and at the Rivoli downtown, did not fare so well, but this was blamed on the terrifically hot weather and the day and date showing rather than on the picture.

The lowest business was done by "Journey's End," at the Auditorium, with a 50 cents to $1.50 price and two reserved shows daily except on Saturday, when four shows instead of two were given. The gross for the second week was $3,180, and the rating figured at 30%.

The drop of Loew's Century was figured due to the weakness of the Corinne picture, "Back Pay," combined with Collins and Peterson in "Step Lively," doing much of the same comic stuff they did at that theatre only a short time previously. Gross was figured at $18,000. Rating 86%.

Weather: Monday to Thursday, torrid heat and sticky with heavy rain Tuesday and Thursday nights, then clear and cool Friday and Saturday.

Panhandle Mail

Hollywood—Begging letters to screen stars are diversified in every idea except the appeal for money. In a single day Lon Chaney got in his mail an appeal for money to buy a piano, another asking him to start a man in the furniture business, one asking funds to organize a jazz band and one asking for enough money to enable her husband to buy a car, a new outfit, and have some left over so he wouldn't have to worry about a job!

"Big House" on S. R. O. in N. Y.; Grosses $18,137

"Big House," the M-G-M prison yarn depicting the Auburn break of several months ago, gave managers of many nearby Broadway houses cause for envy when it turned in the wow gross of $18,137 for five and a half days, a jump of eleven grand over the final week of "Rogue Song." It was the big thing on the street, playing to sell-outs at every performance.

Dressler-Moran team was a draw at the Capitol, sending the take at this house to $79,176, despite the terrific heat which continued until the last day of the week.

"All Quiet" continues at a fast clip, while "Journey's End" showed the strains of its final week at the Gaiety. "Dangerous Nan McGrew" failed to impress at the Paramount, where the comedy took only $55,700, $16,000 less than the previous week's figure at this house. The Byrd south pole film nearly doubled the figure of a week ago at the Rialto, taking $32,300, a splendid figure.

Fox Working on Plans For British Production

London—British production will occupy an important place in the plans of Fox, W. J. Hutchinson, London manager, stated upon his return from the company's convention in Hollywood. Preparations are being made for a definite start in September, he said.

"Follies" High In Boston on $23,500 Gross

Boston—With schools closed, the vacation exodus well under way, and with plenty of hot weather, Boston's downtown theatres felt a decided slump in grosses for the week. The only bright spot in the entire array was at Keith's Memorial, where "Fox Movietone Follies of 1930" went above 105% for a $23,500 gross.

Metropolitan, with "Social Lion," and Loew's State, with "Bad One," struggled up to 90% for $29,000 and $18,000 respectively, but the former inaugurated the grand lounge dancing policy to aid in gathering in the shekels at the box office.

Publix's new plan on its downtown houses of playing day and date shows three films in six houses, didn't come up to former weeks, but the drop in business was not much greater than the average drop in all Boston theatres for the week. In these groupings, Publix has put one uptown and one downtown house in two of the groups and in each of these has shown Warner releases this week for fair business. This has left the Beacon and Globe to be run day and date with "Light of Western Stars," a Paramount film, which showed light business.

Weather: Fair and warm.
Opposition: "Social Lion," Metropolitan with peppy revue and lounge dancing as innovation; "Bad One," Locw's State; "Lady of Scandal," Loew's Orpheum; "Notorious Affair, Keith-Albee; "Fox Movietone Follies of 1930," Keith Memorial; "Call of the West," Park; "All Quiet on the Western Front," fourth week, Majestic; "Shadow of the Law," playing day and date at Publix's Olympia and Uptown; "Man from Blankley's" playing day and date at Publix's Fenway and Modern; "Hold Everything," Publix's Scollay Square.

Will Outwits Wife

Chicago—Will Rogers' hastily-recruited polo team took it on the nose when it engaged a team led by John Hertz at Leona Farm polo field at Carey. Will did most of the scoring for his losing outfit and opened negotiations with Hertz for the pony he had straddled, claiming that his week at the Chicago had been undertaken only to gather in the price of a new nag, which his wife had refused him.

Chilled Weather Helps in 'Frisco; "Cargo" is High

San Francisco—Foggy, windy and cloudy weather sent patrons scurrying toward the box office windows of local houses, with majority of runs clicking around par, none over. "Midnite Shows," being plugged at five leading stands, are proving money makers and will be continued.

A 100% rating was rolled up by "White Cargo," "Isle of Lost Ships," "Big Pond" and "Strictly Modern," with "King of Jazz," "Sweethearts and Wives" and "Men Without Women" following closely.

Portland Plug Rockets "Level" To $14,000 Gross

Portland, Ore.—Through increased and city-wide service the Fox Broadway was enabled to hold the top position in grosses, and again served their patrons with an abundant and varied menu in all departments of the popular house. The week marked the return to Portland of Don Wilkins, master of ceremonies and who welcomed various women's clubs to the matinees where they enjoyed the modern electrically equipped kitchen, and then enjoyed another two and a half hours of diversified entertainment. Various city departments cooperated with Manager Floyd Maxwell and his staff in the Fanchon & Marco's "City Service" idea, plus considerable exploitation on the part of the Postal Telegraph. All of this, together with Victor McLaglen and strong supporting cast in "On the Level," brought the gross up to $14,000, and another 160%. Mpls. Houses on A Bread and Water Diet; All Spotty

Minneapolis—Despite frenzied ballyhoo and plenty of "sex appeal" stills in the lobbies, local theatres are hearing the voice of the wolf but a short distance away from the uniformed doorman.

The big dough of the week went to the Minnesota, which showed "Devil's Holiday" to a gross of $29,000, or an 80% rating. If the weather had not been so warm and the theatre so cool, this gross, it is said, would have been plenty leaner. The Orpheum, running "Runaway Bride," walked into the money column with a gross of $18,000. This gave the house a listing of 85%.

The two saddest stories of the week were the tales told by the State and Century b. o. reports. The State showed "Arizona Kid" to meager and uninterested audiences, grossing $16,100, or a rating of 60%. The Century pushed "Richest Man in the World," but didn't have enough power to put it over the line. The house grossed $6,520, which is 60%.

The Lyric registered 80% on "Show Girl in Hollywood," which grossed $2,900. The Aster romped home with a gross of $2,940, or 90%, on "The Girl in the Show."

Loew's Net for the Year Estimated Near $10

Loew's box office decline has not been sensational, despite seasonal depression, it is pointed out in an announcement which states that earnings for the quarter ended this month should show a good increase over the $2,963,076 reported in the similar period of 1929, equal after preferred dividends to $2.02 a share on the 1,355,129 shares of no par common stock. In the 28 weeks to March 14, the first half of the company's fiscal year, net income was $8,243,584, or $5.66 a share on 1,363,993 shares, a new high for that part of the year, comparing with $3.47 a share in the similar preceding period. The statement offered as a likely one the prospect that net income of Loew's for the full fiscal year to end August 31 will be around $10 a share after preferred dividends, as against a previous high record of $7.91 a share on 1,363,993 shares in the preceding twelvemonth. Extra dividend payments equal at least to the 75 cents paid last year are looked for after the close of the fiscal period. The extra in 1929 was declared in November.

"Big House" Packs 'em in On the Coast

Los angeles—Unusual advertising ballyhoo, in which the Hearst papers played no small part, drew unmanageable crowds to the doors of the Criterion in the first week's run of "Big House," the M-G-M prison yarn which beat 'em all to a frazzle with its gross of $23,500, a rating of 235%. This high was only excelled by the first weeks of "Anna Christie" and "Divorcee," both record breakers.

The heat, which sent thousands to the beaches and miniature golf courses and a light outbreak of infantile paralysis which resulted in a warning from health officers to keep children from large assemblies tended to make managers cry over lack of grosses.

British Leaders Seek Revision of Quota Law

London—No British picture shall be registered for quota as such unless a minimum amount has been spent on its production, at the rate of $750 per foot, with a maximum of $50,000, according to a proposed change of the Cinematograph Act of 1927, for which the Federation of British Industries and Cinematograph Exhibitors' Ass'n. are fighting.

Delegates of both bodies are working on the proposal with W. R. Smith, secretary of the board of trade.

Further recommendation was made requiring the author of a British picture to be a subject of the Kingdom, and it is suggested that the present clause providing that 75% of salaries shall be paid to British subjects shall be abolished.

The group stated that the breakdown of the quota law is a possibility and if this happened, foreign films would again monopolize 97% of British screens.

Opinions on Pictures

The Richest Man in the World

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Fine, Human Attraction

(Reviewed by Sherwin S. Kane)

THIS is a distinguished and often beautifully acted production. Situations which, with another cast, might have been ridiculous or trite at best are moving and intensely real. Credit for the unquestionable worth of the picture must go to Louis Mann who, with "The Richest Man in the World," makes his talking picture debut. It is a debut comparable only to that of George Arliss's in "Disraeli."

Direction, too, has played an important part in making an achievement of this picture. Sam Wood has exercised commendable restraint in the handling of sequences which might easily have overflowed into cheap hysterics. Instead the sequences remain startlingly real and human.

There are a few instances, it is true, when one is conscious of a let-down, a waning of interest which some minor cutting might have modified. Emphasizing this, however, are the emotional heights which the picture frequently attains.

The story itself is a theme that should be popular with any and all audiences. We have no doubt but that it fits perfectly and completely into that valuable category of pictures which go their way through word-of-mouth advertising. This one is deserving of that popular tribute.

"The Richest Man in the World" is the chronicle of the love of a German-American barber for his children. His riches are solely of the heart; his wealth, the love of his children, whom you first meet as youngsters in a progressive eastern town. You see lavished upon them a paternal affection that is as dignified as it is generous, tender as it is understanding. Adolf Wagenkampf's children are his life, and there is no sacrifice he would not make for their well-being or happiness.

On the point of investing his savings in a building and loan association in the rapidly growing town in which his barber shop is located, he is called upon to make one such sacrifice; the first of many. His savings are employed to send one of his sons, in poor health, to a sanitarium. His friend, Joe Higginson, the grocery clerk, launches the building and loan association without him, and as the town grows, it prospers, and Higginson becomes a power in the community while Wagenkampf remains a barber.

The children grow up. Another telling sacrifice is made to pay for the medical education of the eldest son. When he returns to a love other than that of his family—it is difficult for the ageing father to understand why it was necessary for a young doctor to "Americanize" his name. But he forces himself to understand, and mortgages his barber shop to obtain the money for his son to open an office and begin his medical practice. The son, secretly married, uses the money to buy a home for his bride.

The second son is inventive, and in pursuing his hobby accepts the sort of job that places the least demand on him. He becomes a collector for an electrical company. There is a shortage in his collections and, threatened with arrest, the father gives the last of his savings to make good the deficit. With this stigma upon him the youth is unable to obtain employment in his home city, and disappears.

The youngest daughter falls in love with the ne'er-do-well son of old Higginson. In a scene that might have been maudlin in less capable hands she confesses to her father of intimacy with young Higginson. He seeks out both father and son, asking marriage for his daughter, but is told the thing is out of the question because of the social inequality of the two families. In one of the most effective declamations the talking screen has yet given, Louis Mann denounces the principles that have supplanted human sympathy in the heart of his friend and wins the youth to his side.

Unable to obtain money from his son, now a practicing physician, the father sees Higginson foreclose on the shop. On a Christmas Eve, after having watched the authorities take possession of his business, he returns to his wife in the home from which all of the children have departed. But the younger son, an invention of his having proved a success, returns, and is followed by others of the family.

This ending, smacking as it does of the customary hokum, is elevated here, as in other sequences, to dignified and believable heights by the pure merit of the cast. Individual ability removes this as far from sloppy sentimentality as is finished acting removed from mere talent, while the ordinary qualities of the situation leave the achievement of the principals all the more to be marvelled at.

The story is relieved by touches of homely humor, so natural and human as to be certain of responsiveness in any audience. Settings are genuine and effective. The barber shop scenes are exact to the smallest detail, as are those in the old fashioned home of the Wagenkampfs.

The entire cast is superb, with Louis Mann outstanding. Elliott Nugent as Johnnie, the younger son; Robert Montgomery as the irresponsible Nick Higginson; Leila Hyams as Alma, the youngest daughter, and Francis X. Bushman, Jr., as Ludwig, the eldest son, are particularly deserving of mention. Henry Armetta, as Tony, the assistant barber, does a splendid characterization in an unimportant role. The juvenile cast, too, is well chosen.

There is no theme song.

Musical shorts are needed. Almost any type of light short, too, will work in well for a balanced program.

Paradise Island

(Tiffany—All Talker)

Very Weak

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

CHARACTERS bursting into song at unexpected moments add a certain element of surprise to this South Sea Island picture which is chiefly distinguished by the excellent comedy of Paul Hurst and the rather pleasant singing voice of Kenneth Harlan. The offering, however, has nothing more than average program rating for split-weeks and daily changes.

The story is as old as pictures, and unfortunately has been given no new twists to lift it out of the rut. Interest is maintained fairly well after the picture gets under way after a very slow start.

Marceline Day arrives on the island to marry her fiance, but finds that he has gone into debt heavily through gambling to Tom Santchi. The latter sees the girl's predicament, and tries to help her, figuring she will eventually fall for him instead of the fiance. Then Harlan puts in an appearance, wins back Wood's notes from Santchi and finally the girl.

There are two fights in the picture, the first one being of mighty poor calibre. An amusing twist to the second is provided by Hurst, who steps in to save the struggling dramatic episode with a burst of comedy.

"Paradise Island" offers little in the way of entertainment and will find its spot in the double bills, split weeks and daily changes.

Good shorts, with box office "names," needed here.

Juno and the Paycock

(Harold Auten—S. R.—All Talker)

Impressive

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

ONLY too seldom does old Johnny Bull send to our shores a production combining such fine dramatic sequences and splendid portrayals as those found in "Juno and the Paycock," a convincingly told story which colorfully reveals the burdensome trials and tribulations of a poverty stricken Irish family.

The strong flavor of Catholicism which all too obviously winds its way throughout the story may sound the deathknell of its value for straight picture entertainment, despite the fact that this trait of religion is a natural part of the scheme of things in most north-of-Ireland families. The narrow-back fanatics, particularly those in southern U. S., will probably turn thumbs down, vigorously condemning the production as a pro-Catholic plug. We suggest that you give this angle considerable thought before booking. It might save you from the loss of customers who find a mixture of intimate religion with picture making distasteful.

Otherwise, "Juno and the Paycock" offers convincing screenfare, and communities sympathetic toward the race and religion will receive it with open arms.

From the angle of production, there is little to be looked for. Masterful portrayals by the entire cast convince us that England has much of the human element so necessary in talkers, at least in this cast of eleven. The direction and photography are worthy of praise, and sound stacks up as favorably as any emanating from the studios of American producers. Although diction is clear, the English twang of most of the players make it appear obvious that there's very little of Ireland in their makeup. At times, the lingo is a bit hard to grasp, but generally no fault can be found with the dialogue.

Alfred Hitchcock's touch of naturalness in construction gives the picture a twist which is most human, effectively using that humorous vein of comedy which is usually found in those of Irish ancestry. Hitchcock, too, reaches touching dramatic depths in telling his story. He makes you "feel" depressing moments of sorrow, and then quickly follows with cause for joy.

Slapstick and a sound cartoon are best suited to this.

Bright Lights

(First National—All Talker)

Clicks, Despite Backstage Story

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

EVEN though the backstage angle has been worked unmercifully in talkers and the cycle is seemingly over, "Bright Lights" comes along to show that there is plenty of entertainment in a behind-the-scenes story.

"Bright Lights" is not a special insofar as box-office rating is concerned, but it is, nevertheless, a fine piece of program entertainment that will hold up in the week runs and split weeks.

The entire story is backstage, with a musical comedy production unfolding on the stage itself. Instead of going in for heavy dramatics in story development and interweaving song and dance numbers to slow up the story theme, the comedy angle is stressed, thereby obtaining a fast tempo that sustains interest from start to finish.

Dorothy Mackaill and Frank Fay carry the feature billing spots, and the balance of the cast is of high calibre. The two featured leads fit into their roles perfectly, and turn in excellent performances. Frank McHugh, newcomer from the stage, puts over a drunk reporter comedy part for outstanding attention. Tom Dugan and Daphne Pollard are teamed for laughs, with Eddie Nugent, Inez Courtney, Jean Bary and Virginia Sale in comedy support. Noah Beery is naturally the heavy, while James Murray is seen little playing a straight role.

Story opens with Mackaill, star of a Broadway show, announcing her forthcoming marriage to a scion of wealth. With comedy predominant, the yarn moves along where family objections might halt the nuptials. Through a clever newspaper interview, the rise of Mackaill is shown by cut-backs from burlesque, honky tonks, etc., to her present spot. Fay, who has been through the mill with the girl, is secretly in love with her, but gets tongue-tied when he tries to explain.

Noah Beery turns up in the audience, recognizes the girl and goes backstage to get even for a facial scar inflicted by Mackaill in a honky tonk years ago. Fay walks in on Beery and has Murray cover him while the show goes on. But Beery jumps Murray, there is a brief struggle, and Noah drops dead from a bullet fired by his own gun.

The story waxes dramatic at this point, lightened by deft handling of direction and treatment, with Fay protecting Mackaill against expose of her former life. Fade out absolves everyone of suspected murder, but full explanation is left to the audience. The yarn, an original credited to Humphrey Pearson, is by far the most entertaining backstage yarn turned out in many months. Direction by Michael Curtiz gives a fast tempo, plus plenty of entertainment. Song and dance numbers are staged, but are brief enough individually to maintain fast pace of the picture.

Dramatic sketches or cartoons should find a place here.

The Soul of a Thumb

Hollywood—How does your thumbprint sound?

As an experiment, Cecil B. DeMille recently had several of his "Dynamite" cast place their thumbprints on the "sound track" of this picture.

It is well-known that sound is reproduced by light forced through a narrow "sound track" on the film. Naturally the reproduction is governed by what is on the sound track. If an extraneous image, even as lightly printed as a thumb mark, appears on this strip, it will be reproduced as an extra "noise."

The results of the experiments were that the thumbprints of DeMille, Conrad Nagel, Kay Johnson and others all had just as distinct a "sound" personality as the prints themselves!

The Border Legion

(Paramount—All Talker)

Fine Western

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

COMBINING a fast tempo, interesting story, capable acting and eyeful backgrounds, "The Border Legion" is an ideal attraction for the week run houses and following program bookings.

The picture has fast action which is necessary to heighten interest in a western. Dialogue is not inserted to slow down the tempo, with a highly satisfactory piece of entertainment as the result.

The story concerns the experiences of Richard Arlen, a cowhand, who is thrown in with the bandit gang headed by Jack Holt. The latter befriends Arlen, after the boy is accused of a murder. Then the gang plan to raid the mining town and decision is made to capture Ethan Allan, prominent citizen of the town, so that he will divulge where the gold is stored. Instead, the captors bring back Fay Wray, Randall's daughter, who immediately recognizes Arlen.

Then Arlen decides to take care of the girl and guards her cabin during the night. Holt goes in to interview the girl and makes advances to her. Jack Gulden tries to shoot Holt, but Arlen saves the leader. During the melee, Arlen discovers Holt's intended attack on the girl, and turns on the leader. Overpowered, Arlen is led off to be tied up, but escapes.

He rides to town to get a posse to go after the girl, but leading citizens decide it is a trap so the outlaws can raid the gold safe. Arlen is placed under guard and Holt and his gang ride into the trap set for them by the citizens.

Again saving Holt's life, Arlen escapes and rides to the camp to rescue the girl, with Holt following. Gulden also escapes from the volley and starts back to the camp to capture the girl for himself. Holt intercepts him and is shot. Arlen gets Miss Wray off on a horse, when Gulden arrives. Holt, although wounded, takes a short cut to head Gulden off, with the pair riding hard towards each other for a pistol duel. Both fall dead, with Arlen and the girl riding back to town for the final fade.

Jack Holt is a natural for pictures with a western setting. Although spotted as a "heavy" and leader of the outlaw gang, Holt darn near captures the entire sympathy of an audience. He walks far and away with the acting honors. Arlen is satisfactory as the young cowhand, while Stanley Fields "villains" capably behind a heavy black beard. Eugene Pallette is strong in producing the majority of laughs.

Broad comedies and musicals might fit here.

Pardon My Gun

(Pathe—All Talker)

Weird Cowboy Musical

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

THERE'S about everything in "Pardon My Gun" except a trained seal and a baby elephant. Perhaps they can add those before the film is released for general theatre consumption. It is one of the weirdest westerns ever conceived—looking very much like what a bookkeeper's conception of a motion picture should be.

The kids will love it. It should get by great at junior matinees and will probably entertain a few adults if it is sprung on a double bill as an added attraction.

Sally Starr succeeds in appearing lovesick enough while George Duryea passes muster as a musical comedy cowboy. Mona Ray, the half-pint blues singer, practices considerable optical gymnastics and buzzes around throughout the picture in much the same fashion as an excited bumblebee. Lee Moran plays a comedy role as the simple cowboy—and manages to get across laughs. One of the highpoints of humor in this direction is caused by Moran polishing a cayute's feet with a manicure buffer. The horse objects and prods Moran with a hoof. You're supposed to laugh loudly.

The two main highlights in the picture are the barn dance which precedes some sort of annual relay race in which the father of the two girls and the employer of Duryea bets his roll on his own horses. The villain of the piece, played by Harry Woods, runs the adjoining ranch, wears approved mustachios and is the one who has the wager against the genial ranch owner.

Woods is in love with Sally and does all sorts of "dastardly" things to prevent Duryea winning the race, and incidentally the girl.

Abe Lyman's band, with Abe himself in cowboy costume, and all the orchestra members resembling what Fifth Avenue thinks a cowboy looks like are seen frequently.

During the barn dance the patrons are inflicted with all sorts of dire numbers inserted to entertain. Yodeling youths, some rather acceptable dancing, a song by Mona Ray, drum acrobatics by Lyman and a one-handed clarinet duet by one of the boys in the band.

Maybe the picture was supposed to be a satire on sound. Maybe it's to be a straight western, but whatever it is don't bank on anybody tearing down the doors to get in. Kids are your best bet.

Use good strong dramatic shorts with "draw" names.

Road to Paradise

(First National—All Talker)

Average Program Fare

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

CLEVER photography will arouse considerable interest in this dual role talker which stacks up as good program entertainment for the week bookings and split weeks. Although containing several highly improbable situations, the picture is deftly directed.

Loretta Young essays the parts of twin sisters and turns in a fine performance in a difficult spot. The story builds around her characterization of the sisters, one an heiress and the other raised by a pair of crooks. The twins had been separated when babies.

The crooks use Mary to help in robbing her rich sister's home. The latter returns to the house and is shot unexpectedly by Raymond Hatton, one of the crooks. Mary dresses Margaret in her clothes and dons Margaret's apparel and succeeds in convincing an inquisitive detective that she is Margaret, while the latter remains unconscious.

Hereditary psychic powers of both girls is brought into play for story development, with the identity of the two accomplished finally through a pair of lockets after the injured sister recovers. And Jack Mullhall, boy friend of Margaret, falls in love with Mary instead before the picture is finished. Mullhall has little chance for acting and merely walks in and out at intervals.

Unusual interest is provided by the dual role of Loretta Young, as this is one of the first instances of double-exposure photography and recording for sound pictures.

Raymond Hatton, George Barraud, Fred Kelsey and Purnell Pratt handle their parts well.

Cartoons and musical shorts will go well here.

Ridin' Law

(Big Four—Talker)

Just Fair

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

AS a vehicle for Jack Perrin's spectacular riding, this gets by; otherwise it's just a so-so western. It will appeal to the kids and outdoor fans who are not so concerned over story or production and acting values.

Perrin is long on riding, but short on acting ability. Rene Bordon is the heroine, who affects a Mexican accent, so called, as does Jack Mower. Yakima Canutt is a fair heavy and a rider of no mean ability. Fern Emmett and Ben Corbett offer some comedy relief which is not so hot. Olive Young's work stands out as the Chinese cigarette girl. Pete Morrison and Robert Walkers are others in the billing.

The story concerns a young cowboy who goes to Mexico to seek the slayer of his father. He falls into the clutches of a smuggling band, whose members suspect him of being a Federal agent, although he is obviously an American. He is saved by the ruse of a dancer. She proves to be a Federal agent, working with her brother to apprehend the gang. The cowboy helps them carry out their mission, finds his father's murderer and wins the girl.

You can promise your patrons some horsemanship feats by Perrin. Otherwise, just another talker western, with little new in the way of plot or treatment. Recorded by Power's Cinephone.

Produced by Biltmore Prod. Distributed by Big Four Film Corp. Directed by Harry Webb. Story by Carl Krusada. Adaptation and continuity not credited. Editor not credited. Release date, May 15, 1930. Length, 5,600 feet. Running time, 55 minutes.

Near the Rainbow's End

(Tiffany—All Talker)

Weak and Sloppy

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

THE height of feeble construction and so unconvincingly told that we hesitate to recommend it even to dyed-in-the-wool Western followers. Perhaps the very unsophisticated kiddie audience will give it a hand, but we are sure its entertainment value would cease there.

The cast, and this includes Bob Steele and Louise Lorraine, featured players, act without one iota of expression. Others are extremely sloppy in their performances, too. And while it may have been the fault of the projectionist, the mechanical factors help to tear down what little pleasing contributions are made by picturesque outdoor locations. The sound was inaudible in spots, and photography out of focus in others.

And from stories such as these, "Oh Lord, Deliver Us." A boy, a girl, the bad hombre and his gang of cattle rustlers, and you know the rest. Just a lot of blah, without any attempt being made to inject even a little bit of intelligence in unfolding the tale.

Use only with a supplementary feature and some strong short comedies.

Bright Eyes

(New Era—Synchronized)

Not Much To This

THIS is a silent picture, except for a couple of song numbers, which are apparently dubbed, for the singing does not synchronize with Miss Balfour's lip movement. Betty Balfour is pretty nearly the whole show, which isn't much. It has an implausible story and an indifferent cast, excepting M. Vibert, who plays the role of the Argentine millionaire. This British production is a pretty amateurish picture.

Betty is cast as a girl servant in the tap room of a Parisian cafe. She's sold on a waiter, but he can't see her. When he tells her he intends to visit her, she steals a bottle of champagne for his entertainment. He doesn't show up, and when the theft is discovered, she hides in the cafe. The guests arrive. A millionaire reveler insists her hiding under his table is part of her act and makes her sing a number. She is bounced, but recalled when the millionaire insists she join him. A borrowed dress is given her from the wardrobe of her rival for the waiter's attention. Then she proceeds to make her employer and her waiter boy friend unhappy. The latter decides he loves her and starts a fight. However, the millionaire patches up matters and the waiter proposes to Betty.

They certainly took a lot for granted in developing the story, and the singing numbers will hardly fool any one. It is reminiscent of some of the first synchronized films dumped on the market by American producers when the sound craze started.

You'll need plenty of strong support for this.

Tiresome

CHARLIE MURRAY is the star of this short and he's cast as a Scotchman who is running for mayor. His enemies frame him by having a girl pull a disrobing act in his shoe store, but eventually, after much uproar from the horns backstage, he gets the nomination. The story is too slim for two reels and it's been padded out with gags that miss fire and clutter up the slight tale with meaningless interruptions. Charlie himself is not so hot without his customary Jewish foil. He needs better material than this. Directed by William Watson. Running time, 19 minutes.

Will serve as balance for melodrama.

Audio Review, No. 26

Rates About 60%

THIS has its strong spots—and very weak ones, too. In the latter category are the sequences in "Musical America," in which Pathe cameramen caught a group of bathing girls on a boat landing strumming some jazz tunes. The voices are sour—and how! Supporting the same unit are Henry McBride, versatile amateur symphonist, and the Cincinnati male quartet, both bad.

"Sailor Take Care," the basso's delight, is set to music while the camera roams around Gibbs Hill, in Bermuda. The light house is strikingly screened from many angles.

Closing the reel we see some striking shots of the Temple Emanu-El synagogue in New York. Running time, 10 minutes.

Where novelty is needed use this, particularly with a light feature comedy.

Drifters

(Harold Auten—Synchronized)

Boresome

MADE by John Grierson, billed as an "eminent Scotch critic," its entire 4,000 feet are devoted to a fishing expedition, presumably off the coast of Scotland. Its only interesting feature shows the hauling of the fish-filled net aboard ship, and half a reel would have sufficed for that. Most of the footage reveals a bewildering succession of close-ups of such fascinating bits of action as smoke issuing from the stack and the rolling waves. Human interest is entirely lacking. Running time, 40 minutes.

Length too awkward for consideration.

Jazz Preferred

(Paramount—Talker)

Okay

A NOVEL short featuring Zelaya, billed as a celebrated South American pianist, but probably hailing from Brooklyn. Upon his entrance his studio is filled with young people reveling in jazz. Horrified, he commands them to stop; then sits at the piano and plays a classical selection. Soon a sexy little blonde diverts his mind and when a telephone call from a hot mama comes he becomes converted to jazz. Appeals through its novelty and fast tempo. Running time, 6 minutes.

Spot it into a heavy program.

A Hot Time In the Old Town Tonight

(Song Cartoon—Paramount)

Very Amusing

DARN clever, that Fleischer chap. Here he displays his ingenuity again by taking a well-known and well-worn song and turning it into a delightful bit of foolishness. It's all in the cartoon work and the clever twists Fleischer gives his treatment. Recommended for any program and any audience, the harder-boiled, the better. Running time, 6 mins.

With heavy or light feature, makes no difference. This stands on its own.

Short Subjects

Campus Favorites

(Pathe—Talker)

Okay

VAN BEUREN'S new Rice "Sportlight" is more musical than sporty, although predomination by college tunes takes little away from its entertainment value.

Favorites of campus glee clubs are sung while the teams battle hard for honors. There's a boat race at Cornell, a baseball tilt between Princeton and Yale, and a football squabble elsewhere. Fine stuff. Running time, 9 minutes.

Nice with a dramatic feature.

Man Hunter

(Universal—Silent)

Old Stuff

TED CARSON as the Royal "Mountie," Lotus Thompson as the girl and a bunch of stereotyped bad men carry on in the usual manner in this condensed western. Need more be said? J. Levigard directed again . Running time, 17 minutes.

Only for kids and Western fans.

Two Fresh Eggs

(Pathe—Talker)

Anything But Fresh

TINNY jazz orchestra, weak singers, poor dancers and a blah story combine to make this an unconvincing two reel musical comedy. Wholly lacking in originality, the film is of the same type which has more or less flooded the market ever since someone discovered a use for a photo electric cell.

Al St. John and Jimmy Aubrey supply the comedy, what little there is. They don't disappoint, but a heavier concentration of work from this team would have brightened up the subject considerably. Only one of the three dance numbers by the chorus clicks, the rest being pretty floppy. Monte Carter directed. He should forget it, and try again. Running time, about 20 minutes.

Don't depend upon this too much for laughs. If you use it for comedy relief, book a snappy cartoon.

Barnyard Concert

(Disney-Columbia—Sound)

Amusing

MICKEY MOUSE conducts an orchestra composed of various barnyard animals, the "Poet and Peasant" overture being played from start to finish. There are enough good gags in it to keep the chuckles going at a steady pace. Running time, 6 minutes.

Good where a program needs lightening.

Humanettes

(Radio—Talker)

Hash

FRANK NEWMAN, former Kansas City exhibitor, is credited with originating this novelty, consisting of actors' heads, poked through a black backdrop, being used with miniature forms in caricature style. It may be a novelty, but once is enough. The material supplied these "human marionettes" is awful stuff, and the gags creak with age. Benny Rubin is featured, but he couldn't get a laugh out of an audience that was aching to laugh. Directed by Leigh Jason. Running time, 8 minutes.

Run it with a strong bill.

A Peep on the Deep

(Radio—Talker)

Good

THE story is a cock-eyed affair, but Clark and McCullough, vaudeville favorites, keep the laughs coming at a rapid pace and demonstrate their box-office appeal in talker comedies. In this case, Clark is mistaken by the crew of an ocean-going yacht for the captain, and he commands the vessel on the trip around the world, making it in 35 days and thereby breaking a record of some kind. He and his partner are furnished with a lot of gags that would sound foolish in print, but get the roars. The title is based on the fact that Clark swallows an egg whole, and thereupon whenever he opens his mouth the chick inside the egg peeps. It's crazy, but funny. Directed by Mark Sandrich. Running time, 21 minutes.

Men Without Skirts

(Radio—Talker)

Fair

HERE is the first of the two-reel comedies starring George K. Arthur and Karl Dane, and while it is packed with production values, its humor misses fire. In fact, for a major portion of the footage Arthur and Dane appear so amateurish that one wonders how they ever were considered comedians. Later the tempo is stepped up, but the few laughs garnered are due to the old pants-dropping stuff. In one instance, a hand grenade drops into the seat of Dane's pants—pulled down by Arthur in fright. That's enough explanation of the level of the humor in it. In addition, there are some wisecracks that Noah told in the Ark. Yola D'Avril plays the feminine lead. The story centers about a couple of Yanks at the front in France, and the settings are impressive for a short subject. Directed by Lewis R. Foster. Running time, 21 minutes.

Will fit in with a society drama.

The Golf Specialist

(Radio—Talker)

Dandy

W. C. FIELDS clicks a lot of laughs in this amplification of the golf act he's used so many years on the stage. The action has been elaborated to a considerable extent, but it holds the attention throughout and keeps up a steady round of laughter. Fields' voice is ideal for talkers and his camera presence excellent. All types of audiences will enjoy it. Directed by Monte Brice. Running time, 23 minutes.

Use it to back up a weak feature.

Warners Squash Rumors About New Stock Offer

Warners will not offer new stock at $25 a share, contrary to rumors which have helped depress Warner stock in Wall Street circles. Another report had it that the dividend would be cut to $2, and this, too, has been dissipated.

Vaude Socked Midships in K.C.; Midland Cuts It Out

Kansas City—Loew's Midland has inaugurated a summer policy of eight weeks' duration which consists of straight picture programs, a price cut and Friday openings. Vaudeville has been eliminated for the time being, at least. The programs are to consist of feature, comedy, cartoon, news, and trailers. The Midland, which has a capacity of 4,000, formerly charged sixty cents top price, and is now to play to a forty cents top.

Since the Pantages cut out vaudeville some time ago, this makes the Mainstreet the last stronghold of vaudeville in Kansas City at the present time.

Thugs Nab $200; Pass Up $250 More; Now in Jail

Seattle—A short time after they held up three employees of the Embassy, second run house in the heart of the city's business district, two men were arrested and lodged in jail by the police. They have been identified by theatre employees.

The hold-up occurred early in the evening and the bandits obtained more than $200 in cash from the box-office, overlooking more than $250 in a sack on the floor.

Bankruptcy Closes Up Duffy Chain on Coast

First creditors' meeting has already been held and further action will be outlined at the next confab.

Houses in Loop Adopt New Policy Of Open Bookings

Radical changes in booking policies in Loop theatres have been noted recently.

The Fox Munroe, knocking down its admissions to a 25c-40c schedule with the inauguration of an open product policy, took the Universal picture, "Young Desire." It formerly used Fox second runs.

The RKO Woods took "The Richest Man in the World" (M-G-M) in mid-week, representing the first time in years a Cosmopolitan production has had a Loop opening in any but a B. & K. house. "Richest Man" is Louis Mann's first picture of the company's new product.

The other departure was noted at Warners' Orpheum, which took "The Divorcee" (M-G-M) for its third Loop week. This picture is playing in Chicago on a "pink" (adults only) permit. It did tremendous business in its first week at the Chicago (B. & K.) and showed its exceptional qualifications by being sent into the Oriental for a second Loop week, an unusual procedure here. B. & K. then gave it to the Paradise, Uptown and Tivoli theatres simultaneously. This week it is playing the Orpheum concurrently with B. & K.'s Riviera and Harding theatres.

With it, the Orpheum inaugurates a change in policy from a first to a second run house, and during a trial period of this policy will use everybody's product. If profitable, the policy may be permanently adopted, according to Max Schlott, manager.

Warner Golf Bugs to Get Chance to Swear

F. Neil.

This event will be followed on August 2 with a picnic outing at a location to be designated later.

KANE

When Was Regal Opened? Problem Is a Tax Puzzle

The building housing the Regal, B. & K.'s large south side colored show house, was permitted to escape paying more than $31,000 in 1928 taxes as a result of the erroneous exemption of the building by the board of assessors and the refusal of the board of review to take subsequent action in the matter, state tax commission auditors charge.

The building, which covers almost a square block, contains in addition to the theatre, a ballroom, department store and drug store.

The original appraisal of the property placed the full value of the land at $594,767, the assessed valuation being $220,066, and the full value of the building at $1,505,776, the assessed valuation being $557,138.

The owner, Harry M. Englestein, filed a complaint with the board of assessors last October. He claimed the building was not completed by April 1, 1928, and that the land value was excessive. Two hearings on the complaint were subsequently held, for the first of which the state's auditors were unable to find any record. It is supposed that at that hearing the building was ordered taken off the books for 1928. At the second hearing the land was reduced in assessed valuation from $220,066 to $156,314 on the argument by the owner that the land was vacant April 1, 1928, and therefore was not worth as much as if it had been improved.

The auditors charge that their investigation revealed that the building was completed and occupied in the fall of 1927, and quoted a community newspaper article announcing an inaugural performance on Thanksgiving Day, 1927.

Credit Rules and Contract Breaches Make Adoption of Deposits Certain

Mae Likes Byrd

Chicago—Mae Tinee, Chicago Tribune motion picture critic, has made a habit of bestowing asterisks on productions she reviews, four stars indicating to the world that the film thus honored was, in the infallible one's opinion, ace high. But Mae, or Frances, as her friends call her, couldn't find enough adjectives for "With Byrd at the South Pole," so she gave it five stars. It's the first time in history.

Olsen & Johnson, Oakie and Jessel, Chi Name Draws

The name draw battle in the Loop between Publix-B. & K. and R-K-O continues, with B. & K. announcing this week that Jack Oakie will appear in person on the stage of the Chicago for the week beginning July 11. Will Rogers just completed a week at the same theatre, constituting, it is said, his first personal appearance in any picture house. The Chicago grossed $62,000 during the week of Rogers' appearance, $9,000 of which went to the comedian, leaving the house a balance well above average.

George Jessel was R-K-O's name draw at the Palace during Rogers' engagement at the Chicago, while the R-K-O State-Lake headlined the comedy team, Olsen and Johnson, the same week. Other equally well known name draws are in prospect for both houses, R-K-O officials here state. B. & K. is also lining up some new drawing names for the Oriental, the circuit's other Loop presentation house.

The new competition between the circuits had its inception when the Palace switched from a two-a-day house to a vaude-film policy with name draws recently.

Women Dictate And Limit Kisses, Says Mrs. Winter

Mrs. Alice Ames Winter won votes for the Hays' organization in a talk delivered before members of the Woman's City Club here last week.

She spoke of the "length to which Hollywood producers have come to depend upon their women customers in matters of production guidance" and said that "women audiences dictate in matters of production taste, even determining the footage given to movie kisses."

The reaction of her audience was ample testimony of the value of Mrs. Winter to the producers' organization.

Gateway, Built For Sound, Gets Swank Opening

A mile-long parade of decorated automobiles stirred up the northwest side business district in advance of a pre-view opening of Publix-B. & K.'s new Gateway, the first of the circuit's houses to be built on principles dictated by sound reproduction considerations. The house's acoustics, according to local engineers, is as near perfection as has yet been reached by local theatres.

The Gateway also offers extensive free parking facilities to patrons, a second feature new to local theatres and one that will be copied in later Publix theatre construction here.

The pre-view opening was attended by neighborhood dignitaries, film and theatre men and picture critics of the local dailies. The latter were fed at the Hotel Sherman in advance of the performance and reciprocated handsomely with their best "theatre-opening-adjectives."

Baby Contest is Business Builder

A neighborhood baby contest is bringing them to the Portage Park theatre (Fox). Hundreds of youngsters have been entered in the preliminary events by their doting parents. The 25 best will be selected in the preliminaries, and from these final winners will be chosen by the audience. A first prize of $50 in cash has been posted, with numerous secondary prizes also to be awarded.

Shears for the "Arties"

The Cinema Art Theatre has adopted a policy of double features, and while the change may have been due to business depression 'tis said that the Chicago long hair trade is not what it used to be.

Bad Faith of Theatre Owners Reason, Exchangemen in Chicago State

Two factors, it is now apparent, will make demands for deposits a common occurrence here when local exchanges start to sell new product.

The first, as reported in Motion Picture News several weeks ago, is the unified interpretation of the new credit rulings made at a recent meeting of the Chicago Film Board of Trade. This interpretation, agreed to by all exchanges represented, calls for a demand for deposits from any and all exhibitors whose credit rating is the least bit doubtful. Any C. I. (credit inadequate) rating is certain to mean that a deposit will be asked for when the exhibitor so rated asks for a play date, local exchange men agreed.

Many Breaches in Contract

The second factor is the continued increase in the number of cases of contract breaches which exchanges have had to bring to court for settlement. A survey of all local exchanges conducted by Motion Picture News several months ago revealed that those having no contract cases in courts were the exception. A later survey reveals that court actions have been on the increase throughout the state in recent months, with the average number of cases pending in various courts at any one time ranging from three to ten.

Many of the exchanges here are bringing actions in the downstate courts which, they find, are appreciably less congested than the city courts, making for earlier hearings and quicker settlements. The courts, save in exceptional cases, invariably uphold the contract and find in favor of the exchange, film men here report.

Both factors, they say, will make certain an increasing demand for deposits in the future.

$1,000,000 House for Aurora

Aurora, Ill.—This town will have a million dollar picture house, planned on the site of the theatre which formerly served as the former Temple of Music at the Pan-America Exposition in Buffalo, in which President McKinley was wounded Sept. 6, 1901. The building was moved from Buffalo to Aurora in sections at the close of the exposition.

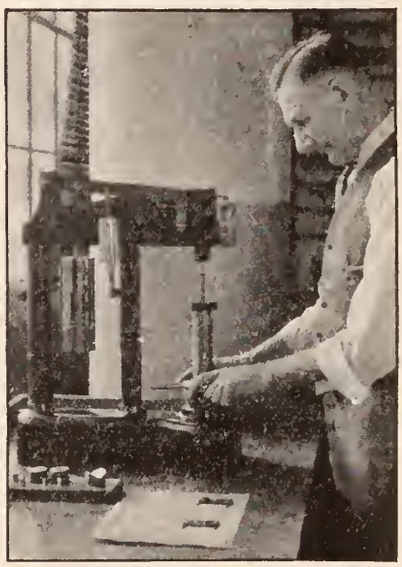
First Outdoor Talker in Europe Being Completed

Naples, Italy—With the completion this week of exterior scenes for "City of Song," Europe's first outdoor talker soon will be an accomplished fact, marking a definite repercussion of the American trend toward this type of production. The greater part of the production has been filmed with sound in authentic locations in Naples, Pompeii and Capri. Interiors will be filmed in London.

The production, which is an English-German bi-lingual, is being made by British Sound-Film Productions, Ufa, and a Tobis-Klangfilm subsidiary. The sound apparatus is a combination of BTP (De Forest) and Tobis.



The general director is Carmine Gallone, Italian director, who made "The Last Days of Pompeii." The associate director for the British version is Harcourt Templeton.

The chief feminine role in the German version is played by Brigitte Helm, lent by Ufa; her counterpart in the English version is Betty Stockfield.

Another Case of Hollywood Luck

Hollywood—Jeanette Loff secured her term contract with Universal as a result of a Multicolor screen test made for Pathe.

She was under stock contract to Pathe nearly a year ago, appearing infrequently in supporting casts. One day, Pathe wanted to have some tests of the Multicolor process made and Miss Loff was called because she was between pictures.

Some time later, Multicolor officials took the Pathe test over to Universal to show the quality of color that could be obtained via that process. Getting a slant at Jeanette Loff in the test, Universal found Pathe was not renewing her option and deal was made for a term contract with her. Then she was assigned a featured spot in the "King of Jazz."

Judgments of $5,000 For Injury in Theatre

Albany — Two judgments amounting to $5,000 have been returned against the Royal Theatre Corp., owning and operating the Royal, downtown house, as the result of injuries sustained by Mrs. Mary E. Getz, who fell into the orchestra pit in March, 1929. The woman obtained an award of $4,000 for injuries to her spine. She had asked for $25,000. Her husband, who had asked for $2,500 for loss of his wife's services and companionship, was awarded $1,000. The woman claimed that there was no railing about the pit and that she was under the impression she was stepping into a row of seats when she fell.

Albanu First Runs To Stay Open All Summer

Albany—Business is off at many of the first run theatres here and some of the houses are staging shows particularly for children in attempting to boost dwindling receipts. No houses will be closed, however, during the summer. Up until the last two or three weeks, business has been up to par, for summer months. The recent hot spell, however, brought a big slump and there is no evidence at present of returning business.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

A Day Off?

WE hit on a rather novel idea a short time ago when we selected letters and contributions to the tune of about fifty. These were divided into two groups. Half from apparently happy managers and half from those whose letters carried a sort of, well, you know what we mean, unhappy or disgruntled undercurrent.

To these groups we dispatched letters asking whether they had regular days off and also, whether they were going to get a vacation with pay this summer.

Here is the answer: almost every one of the "happy boys" were getting their regular days off and most were scheduled for a vacation of either one or two weeks. The "unhappy group" in about seventy-five per cent of the answers hardly ever had a day off and what they called us, for bringing up that remote possibility of a real vacation, is nobody's business.

Then this morning our mail included a letter from a real honest-to-goodness showman. A man we would stand up for on the record of his experience and ability any day. His state of mind has reached the point where he says:

". . . if any of the executives, near executives, stool pigeons or checkers ever blow in and you're not right on the spot....it's just too bad. To ever have your assistant say, 'You're down to the newspaper office.' Instant dismissal. And you and I both know damn well that you CAN profitably spend a hell of a lot of time around a newspaper office. How about tie-ups? I don't pretend to exploit any more. Why? Simply because I'm expected to be right on the spot.... mornings, noon, afternoon and nights. I had an excellent idea that I could have tied up 40 local stores on. I called the division manager of the territory, got it OKed, but it would have been necessary for me to call on each local manager to explain the idea. Did I do it? Not on your sweet life.....Do I go out to luncheon clubs....masonic meetings, etc? No, sir. I stick right on the stool, work my floor, collect my salary. AND when they sneak in on me, I'm right on the well-known job."

Now don't make a mistake, boys. This chap is not a pessimist or chronic kicker. He's peppy, a corking showman, and loyal as a man can humanly be; but the shake-ups, reorganizations, etc., have left him high and dry when it comes to a day off every week or so, and as for a vacation....he will probably have to go to the hospital to get away with it....and then they'll probably take him off the payroll until he returns.

To quote him again, "If circuits can't trust their managers to take off a few hours once a week right in the town where he is working, they ought to dig themselves up some new managers."

Amen. "Chick"

Zigmond Added A New Slant To The "Locked Door" Gag

One of the main reasons for the showman success of Jerome Zigmond, manager of the Avalon Theatre in Grand Junction, Colo., is his penchant for sticking new angles on gags that have been used before, and when he played "The Locked Door" he brought his showmanship into play and effected a stunt that had them talking for days.

First, he tied up with the Piggly-Wiggly Grocery Stores and they furnished gratis $25 worth of groceries to the person lucky enough to open the door of a safe lodged in the lobby of the theatre.

The advantage of this stunt was that there was no cost for keys, as in the other "Locked Door" gags that we have shown on these pages, except those special tie-ups with locksmiths; and instead of a lock, Zigmond used a safe and had the combinations printed on a circular on which was also a detailed explanation of the contest and the prize to be awarded as well as mention of picture, theatre and playdates.

It was possible to have a different combination on every slip at no more cost than ordinary circulars. This was due to the printer having a numbering machine and turning it back at every hundred and changing one of the other numbers.

Zigmond figured that there is a certain fascination that you get working a safe combination that does not surround an ordinary lock and key stunt. Most persons have never had the opportunity of working a safe and the people in Grand Junction seemed to get a lot of pleasure out of it.

And, incidentally, it was first necessary to purchase a ticket at the box office before one was entitled to work the safe combination.

The stunt had a bunch of people grouped about the safe from the time the house opened until it closed and as this was the first time the gag had ever been used it met with more than the usual amount of word of mouth publicity and subsequent box-office business. And as this is what Jerome is constantly striving for, it seems that he is hitting the mark quite often.

Walker Says It With Pen And Ink From Haverstraw

Our good friend, G. W. Walker of the Capitol Theatre, Haverstraw, N. Y., believes in saying it, not only in words, but with pen and ink sketches, and in order that you may better understand what we are talking about, we have reproduced a sketch which occupied a prominent spot in one of his letters to Club headquarters.

Walker, in the event you don't know it, has had a most interesting career in the show business, and besides has spent many years at cartoon work for many publications, including Motion Picture News about fifteen years ago.

Another accomplishment, and a mighty good one, too, is his being a projectionist, and in these days, when the booth is both the heart and the mouth of the modern theatres' entertainment, knowing a whole lot about projection and sound equipment constitutes a most important portion of any real manager's work.

That he headed himself in the right direction has been proven by the fact that he took over this theatre and, besides managing it, he is the sole owner. At any rate, it clearly demonstrates that if his ideas of theatre management and showmanship were not all they should be, he would not be meeting with the success that he is.

We would like to hear a whole lot more from this progressive showman and would welcome the opportunity of saying more about him on the pages of the Round Table Club.

What do you say, Walker? Will you accommodate us?

It Costs You Nothing to Belong to the

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

And see what marvellous benefits you derive from this organization!

A great many showmen (we know) have been just on the verge of joining the Managers' Round Table Club, but have neglected to do so largely through oversight.

We suggest that YOU get full information about this great army of showmen and then decide once and for all whether you want to join.

The mere fact that so many live-wire showmen already belong to the organization — that they represent the cream of the show-world — every branch of theatre management—that not a single one was induced by a salesman or any other sort of solicitation other than through the actual activities of the Club and the word-of-mouth praise that has spread from one end of the world to the other —but joined after simply reading the facts about what the Club does for its members—all these are indications that it is worth your while at least to get these facts as quickly as possible, and then (if you want to) join and get the benefits that such association with fellow showmen is bound to bring.

IT HAS ALMOST REACHED THE POINT WHERE IT IS NOT A QUESTION OF WHO BELONGS TO THE CLUB—BUT, WHO DOESN'T BELONG TO IT!

Ralph Phillips Is Doing Great Work On Merchandising

Sufficient evidence that Ralph Phillips, manager of the State Theatre in Chattanooga, Tenn., is displaying showmanship is seen in the recent exploitation stunt he conceived in the form of an "etiquette" throw-away to plug "Such Men Are Dangerous."

The unique herald contained a list of seven pertinent questions which were headed by the title, "Is It Correct?" The questions asked the correct thing to do under certain circumstances and according to first hand reports right from Ralph himself the questions caused more word-of-mouth publicity than anything he has tried in months. The novelty tied in with the picture by closing with "Whether these are right or wrong, you must see Elinor Glyn's smart society romance "Such Men Are Dangerous."

In addition to this, his activities also numbered window tie-ups in jewelry stores, florists' shops, men's clothing stores, ladies' dress shops, a book store window display, three days radio announcement in advance and an essay contest on "Should a pretty girl ever marry for wealth alone?" which was suggested by the theme of the picture.

These numerous activities resulted in the theatre doing better than average business. We're glad to note that Ralph is stepping out and selling his shows down there and we know he will continue the active work.

Scotch Band Was Means For Sewing Publicity Tight

The photo we are reproducing below will show you what a "natural" the "Cohens and Kellys in Scotland" offered to Chris Georgas, manager of the Classic Theatre in Owen Sound, Ontario, Can., when it came to exploiting it and how he exploited it.

With Scotch bands abounding around the cities of the various provinces, Georgas was enabled to recruit an outfit of Highlanders and have them parade about town plugging the picture. The seven men, preceded by a youngster in uniform (Georgas' heir by the way), bearing a banner plugging the picture, attracted plenty of attention to the show at the Classic.

The band paraded about the main streets and the more thickly populated neighborhoods, causing windows to be raised and heads stuck out. The value of the stunt was seen in the subsequent business that marked the run of the film. We think that exploitation angles of this sort should prove especially well, considering where Georgas is located, and from what we have seen of his work to date we believe he is of the same opinion.

We are glad to see that he is displaying showmanship along these lines and we know that he will keep it up. How about it, Chris? You know, to keep along with the leaders in the Canadian division of the Club, you have to be pretty active; in fact, you have to be active all the time. So keep us posted on whatever else you are doing so that we may rank you in the position your stunts entitle you to. Oke?

Glasman Promoted Free Printing To Plug His Picture

In order to sell his picture, "The Golden Calf" to the residents of Ogden, Utah, R. C. Glasman, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, did some "ankling" around and promoted a special contest.

The tie-up was made with a Knitting Company who put out 4,000 cards calling attention to the fact that El Brendel was unusually interested in hosiery that they (the Knitting Co.) were having a contest somewhat similar to that in the picture.

The copy on the card further stated that a young lady displaying hosiery would be in the store window from 2 to 5 P.M. on the two days current with the showing of the picture. And all that was necessary to win one of the prizes was to guess the size of the calf of the girl's leg.

The estimates were made on the card that had been distributed in advance. So popular was the stunt that there were over 250 guesses handed in on the first day and nearly a thousand more on the next day.

The other side of the card distributed by the Knitting Co. carried copy about the picture, theatre and playdates as well as tying up the contest to the picture.

The stunt proved very popular as was evidenced from the returns submitted and was an excellent medium for advertising the picture.

Robert C. Frost Placed Plane In Front Of Theatre

An angle that helped a lot towards selling "Young Eagles" to the residents of Birmingham, Ala., was the stunt pulled by Robert C. Frost, manager of the Strand Theatre in Birmingham, Ala., when he parked a home-made aeroplane in front of the house.

The aeroplane was obtained through the Southern Aircraft Corp., and remained on display in front of the theatre for the entire week in which the picture played.

The plane attracted such enormous crowds from the minute it was placed in front of the theatre throughout the entire engagements that it was necessary to place a guard about the plane in order to keep people from molesting it.

Neatly printed cards were placed on the plane at various parts, the cards offering sales copy about "Young Eagles," playdates, etc.

As this happened to be the first time that the gag had ever been used in the city, it proved to be very effective and, as a result, the house received a lot of valuable publicity. As we are acquainted with the past work of this showman, we know that he covered many more angles in the campaign, all of which tended towards the complete merchandising of the attraction.

Program Reader

Here is an interesting program reader used as one of a series by J. J. Dempsey at the Strand Theatre in Darchester, Mass. We recommend it ta any theatre whose palicy permits the use of material af this kind.

Pride is a natural human trait possessed in some degree by all of us. It has its outlets in different degrees and its objects embrace things both material and imaginary. We may be justly proud of the ownership of a home, and we speak of it as any proud owner would, dwelling with honest feeling on its beauty, its location, its modern improvements and comfort. We may be proud of our car and boast about its speed, its pick-up, its dependability and the mileage we get on gas. We may be proud of an infinity of things from a golf club to a mansion. And why? Because in the joy of possession is intermingled the pride that they represent our choice, our selection of these particular objects from any number of others which we might have chosen.

And then why should we not have that same feeling toward the theatre we have chosen as our regular place of motion picture amusement? It cannot be denied that today the theatre is one of the strongest factors in American life. The weekly attendance throughout the country in theatres of all kinds emphasizes this fact. The fact that you are here is evidence that you have chosen this theatre as your theatre. You have chosen it from a number of others for various reasons, its proximity, its structural beauty, its high-class programs, its smooth running shows and its service. In other words, it is another possession of yours and which on that account should on occasions be the recipient of praise to those who have not become acquainted with it. It is a just pride. We do not believe that anywhere is there a neighborhood theatre that exceeds this one in the attributes of a good theatre, and for this reason we are proud and would like to pass this feeling on to you because it is on our part not only a feeling of pride for the beautiful theatre we have, but a bigger and better pride in the fact that we are proud of you, as our patrons, and we just can't help telling you about it.

CIVIC CONTACTS

(From Fox West Coast "Now")
By O. FRED GLASS
Manager McCook (Neb.) Theatre

In the following I have suggested only those things we have actually done and are doing day by day:

I believe in being an active member of the Chamber of Commerce, knowing the secretary and helping him in his problems. I am on the entertainment committee, furnish entertainment for conventions, especially the Teachers Convention; through them you contact your kids. Tie up with city-wide clean-up, paint-up week, etc. Find we can be of great assistance to this organization and in return find they can, and do, help us in many ways and forget that we operate a chain theatre.

I belong to as many civic clubs as possible and try to be active. I am a member of the Rotary and on the entertainment committee. Gave paper on the value of the theatre to the community at one of their luncheons. Belong to the Y. M. C. A., play on their athletic teams, help furnish transportation to games, work on their membership drives. The Elks are a live organization; I belong and am on their entertainment committee, and promote their fight cards for them.

I know the officers of the Women's Clubs. Have promoted local home talent plays for their benefit fund, have tied up with percentage shows to raise funds for them, gave a paper at one of their meetings explaining the theatre's place in the community, and always invite their officers to previews on Educational pictures.

We gave the Girl Scouts percentage of shows on outside tickets sold to raise funds for their organization and send girls to summer camp who could not afford to go. They believe in us.

We run trailers reading "Attend Church Some Place." I know all ministers personally, play on their volley ball team and always invite them to previews on Educational pictures.

I know all city officials personally and always ask their permission to use streets on special ballyhoo. I feel that they are with us 100 per cent.

We know our Board of Education, the principals and teachers. We find that one of the best means of becoming acquainted with each teacher is to give tickets to all grades, boy and girl having highest or best grade each semester, both college and school.

A Guard Of Honor Aided Cahill On Publicity Stunt

Unique lobby displays and lobby stunts have long been a source of considerable discussion among the Club members and this stunt that we are passing along is the idea of J. J. Cahill, manager of the Brockton Theatre in Brockton, Mass., which he used in connection with "The Vagabond King," deserves a word or two.

He secured the services of a group of boys—members of the Guarde de Honeure of the French colony. These boys in full-dress uniform placed themselves on the approach to the ticket-taker, with sabres crossed, in such a manner that patrons had to walk under an arch of crossed sabres.

This stunt was used at the afternoon and evening peak hours. One group of boys would take their stand and when tired they would be relieved by another group.

The effectiveness of the stunt was enhanced by the fact that the lobby of the theatre was made over into a castle, so that patrons went into the portals of the castle, bought their tickets, then passed under the arch of sabres to give their tickets to the ticket-taker.

About the only thing that we find lacking in connection with this story is a photo and we hope that when "J. J." sends us in his next stunt that he will include one or two with it.

Leonard Grossman Discusses Merchandising In Cuba

In our daily quest for novel ideas to present to the Club members we have found that a good many may be obtained by becoming acquainted with the work of showmen from other countries and in this article we are going to tell you of the methods used by Leonard Grossman, manager of the Teatro Encanto in Havana, Cuba, to bring them in.

Along with this little story we are presenting a few samples of the newspaper advertising that he turns out and if you'll examine it closely you will notice how cleverly he has "localized" it and used copy of a forceful nature. As we feel that you would be interested in learning of what he does, in his own words, we are reprinting the letter exactly as received.

"As in the States," writes Grossman, "our policy is a continuous performance with a program made up of news, shorts, and features. Due to language difficulties we show very few all talkies and those only of the very best, which includes among them the pick of the musical revues. Most of the exchanges are inserting superimposed titles in their pictures and in this way the general gist of the plot is given to the Latin public.

"Our audiences down here shop for entertainment. They know what they want and we can't get them to come unless we have the goods. They eat up the heavy love stuff, and with the exception of Harold Lloyd, who is one of their biggest favorites, they care nothing about comedy. They pick their stars and stick by them.

"One of our greatest problems is exploitation. Due to municipal regulations and red tape, ballyhoo and stunts are hard to put across. Merchants in Cuba are not far enough advanced to tie in with the theatre for a co-operative stunt but we are getting to the point where we can make them see the advantages. During the last year, due to the excellent work of our Mr. Ferrera we have been able to crash the newspapers for all sorts of free space.

"We try to run our houses as near as possible to the deluxe style in which the States houses are operated and, considering local conditions, I hope I may be pardoned for saying that we are doing it very well. Our attaches are well trained and very courteous."

Thanks, Leonard for letting us see this and we'd like you to know that from the reports drifting into Club headquarters we know that you are running your theatre in tip-top style. We are sure that the rest of the Club joins us in saying that it is certainly a pleasure to know how you are selling your shows. Let's hear from you again.

Mgr. Lenny Freund Deserves A Compliment On Record

In this era of rapid changes of theatre managers in and around New York, any instance of a man lasting for over a year or two immediately calls for a fanfare of trumpets and a great big set of cheers. And into this showmanship limelight steps a young gentleman answering to the name of Leonard Freund, now managing the Albemarle Theatre, one of the ace houses on the A. H. Schwartz-Century Circuit of Brooklyn and Long Island.

"Lenny," from what I recall, started some seven years ago as an usher for this same circuit, and he attracted our attention because his sponsor, none other than Joe ("stud") Springer, insisted on annoying us about this guy Lenny's great aptitude for theatres and theatre work.

However, Joe's high opinion must have been based on more than applesauce, as witness Lenny's rise, with unusual rapidity, from usher to head usher, then to Assistant Manager and on to House Manager, including so tough a baby as the Century Theatre in the gas-tank section of Flatbush, etc., until he took over the reins of the Marine, a house of questionable business while it was being built, but how it clicked under Lenny's handling is now a matter of record and he earned the respect and admiration of everyone on the Century Circuit.

At times he was called upon to step into other "sick" babies, but he always came back to his pet, the Marine, until recently he answered orders and went into the Albemarle, and we don't doubt for a moment that under his capable direction this house will also respond to his methods and management.

Now, we have not started to write this as a glowing tribute to his ability and as a testimonial of his rapid advancement since he started his career in the show business. Our real object, if you must know, was to encourage other "youngsters" to strive for what Fruend has accomplished, but we can hardly do him the injustice of not paying him a compliment he so well deserves, and that is, his respect and admiration for the circuit employing him.

It had become so tiresome to listen to grudge-bearers that it was like a genuine tonic to hear Lenny rave about the Century Circuit and his immediate superiors. Maybe he never gave a thought while he was talking that he was providing us with the very "meat" we needed for a story of this kind, but knowing Freund as we do, and we know him for over seven years, we feel that we are not violating his confidence. (A thing we have never done before and never will do in the future, if we can help it.)

A lot of you boys who are taking the little time necessary to read about this "answer to a circuit's prayer" might profit by the moral of the story. Which in this case happens to be, "Give your bosses everything you've got in you, and you will be surprised to find that you will be rewarded accordingly."

Freund's name is by no means new to the Club pages, and if you will refer to past issues you will find that many of his activities have appeared from time to time and they usually contained many interesting items, practical for lots of theatres located in both neighborhood theatres as well as the average small towns. But we grabbed at the chance of passing along something more intimate about him because he represents the type of go-getting showman that the business is sorely in need of. Some day, in the not-too-distant future, we are going to make Lenny address a crowd of Club members and we'll bet our last dollar that his enthusiasm for the show business will be positively contagious.

As we well know, Freund is "sunny" by nature and has that happy faculty of spreading friendship to everyone he comes in contact with. There's an asset we could all afford to cultivate. Maybe, even you, could start to keep that in mind and see if it doesn't cause favorable comment from those merchants or patrons who have occasion to come to you for something or other. And since it generally works out so nicely, it is deserving of a trial.

Here's hoping that Lenny Freund's future will hold lots more of interest to those of us who have found his past so interesting. As for his further activities along the lines of exploitation and theatre operation, we know that he will keep his brother members and our other readers posted by sending us all the details. Right?

Matt Press Pulled A Corking Stunt On Treasure Hunt

"Thar's gold in them thar hills of Hope," shouts Matt Press, the manager of the Saenger Theatre in the Arkansas town. And he ought to know for he engineered a Treasure Hunt recently that had them talking from the time it started until a week after it finished.

Six coming attractions were arranged in a group and Matt labeled them the "Treasures of the Show World." This served to give him a wedge to start his Treasure Hunt. And what an affair it was. He started his advertising in the newspaper by working on his regular space and wound up with a full page co-operative ad that broke on the day of the hunt contest. Nearly every merchant in town plugged the novel angle and in the ad you'll notice the Kiddie Klub plug that he gets.

The kids who participated in the hunt were invited to line up at the theatre at 10 o'clock on the morning of the hunt and the mob of kids who appeared were divided off in groups of 100. Each division was placed in charge of a boy who acted as leader. The itinerary was so arranged that the various groups would not appear at the local shops at the same time. The bands were conducted about the entire town and the cry of "Hold Everything" (Press's first picture of his six) was heard by every resident.

Five hundred gifts had been purchased from a novelty house, the Coco Cola Company furnished drinks, which were distributed by one of their local dealers, a fruit company donated their product, another company, ice cream, and other merchants donated candy and pop corn. The kids surged all over the town and received the various awards and after covering every spot indicated in the Treasure Hunt route they returned to the theatre where games were conducted, announcements made and the awards given away to the more fortunate of the hunters. At the conclusion of a comedy that was shown them the youngsters were dismissed and, with dirty hands, faces, and shoes covered with dust, they returned home to clean up for the evening meal and look forward to Matt's next hunt.

It was only a short while ago that we ran a box on the value of these Treasure Hunts and we are glad to note that Matt thinks enough of them to use one. This is an excellent time of the year for you to pull a stunt of this kind and with the schools closed you should be able to do a lot of planning and cover a lot of other angles. So if you think you can use this stunt in your town go to it and we are sure that the good-will derived from it is bound to react towards your box-office.

Krier Put Plenty Of High Hatting On For This Campaign

This photo we are showing will let you see that John N. Krier, manager of the Columbia Theatre in Davenport, Ia., is right there with the goods when it comes to "Puttin' On the Ritz" at the box-office, as well as telling the town about it.

The Chief of the Theatre's Service Staff put on a complete suit of evening attire including the high silk hat, gloves and cane. A car that had been promoted from the Hudson agency was used in driving this well-dressed man about town; the chauffeur being dressed in regular chauffeur's uniform.

The car made a tour of the business district, schools, and other places where there were people. The car would stop at these various places where the man in the evening clothes would pass out calling cards reading, "I am not—HARRY RICHMAN—You can see him in 'PUTTIN' ON THE RITZ' starting Saturday at the Columbia Theatre." The spare tires on both front fenders carried a disc on which was imprinted the title of picture.

The stunt went over great and if the rest of the work that Mr. Krier turns out is of this sort we know that it will click.

JOHN V. WARD Says;

"I certainly spend a pleasant hour perusing the pages of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE section, since you have started this department. I look forward eagerly each week to receiving my copy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

Manager, Capitol Theatre, Niagara Falls, Ont., Canada.

Special Matinees For Ladies Boosted L. Mumford's Biz.

"Not a toast to the ladies," shouts Leon O. Mumford, managing director of the Roth-Strand Theatre in Summit, New Jersey, "but a guest matinee for them."

Being a showman who is always on the alert towards boosting his stock along the line of female patronage, Leon in the past has used a number of excellent angles that he has found to be very valuable box-office builders. This latest stunt of his, according to reports, clicked very well in his town. When he played "Ladies of Leisure" he felt that it was the ideal time for a guest matinee so to that end the ad we are reproducing was inserted in the local newspaper. By studying the copy you can get the drift of the stunt and if you care to use it we are sure that it will prove as profitable to you as it did for Leon. In addition to putting the ad containing the coupon in the paper, it was also inserted in with the house organ. Coupons were also handed out at the theatre, and about the town.

All wise showmen know that a great deal depends on the patronage of women and when laying out their campaigns they take especial care to see that they have a couple of angles that will appeal to the ladies so it will pay you to put Leon's stunt away for future use and when you have a chance you might be able to include it in with your campaign. Thanks, Leon, for passing this one along to us and remember to keep us wised up on what else you are doing to put the Roth-Strand over in a showmanlike manner.

Ray Meyersick Had To Do Something So He Tried This

Another of the live-wire showmen on the Inland Theatres Inc., Circuit who seems to be headed for a front row place in the merchandising end of his group, along with Frank Hill, Junior Mercy, Bill Adams and the rest, is Ray Meyersick, manager of the Liberty Theatre in Kennewick, Washington.

Ray used a lobby stunt recently on "Her Golden Calf" that attracted a lot of attention to the show he was selling. He secured a wax model leg used for displaying hosiery. He then constructed a background made of attractively painted beaver-board and placed stills all about it. A hole was inserted in the back of the display and the leg model stuck through it. The finished effect was a wow. It looked as though someone had stuck her leg through the hole and was trying to extricate it. The display created a good bit of comment especially from the men and as it was located in a most advantageous position—enhanced by a spot playing upon it—it was bound to be seen. We had a photo showing this display but unfortunately it was too dark for reproduction and we were forced to leave it out.

Another stunt that was pulled in connection with the merchandising of this show was good for a lot of laughs. Ray and one of the men on his staff, went about town, with a tape measure and pencil and pad, taking the measurements of the calves of beautiful girls. They explained the stunt to the young ladies by telling them that the most perfect calf would be awarded free tickets to the theatre. Of course, no perfect calf was found, since the gag was only for the purpose of causing a lot of comment on the picture, and as it did just that, Ray was satisfied. In fact, he was more than satisfied. For when the crowds began to arrive for the showing of the film he knew that his showmanship had helped a lot to put it over. Right?

WEAR YOUR CLUB PIN

DO YOUR BIT!

That most dreaded of all show seasons is upon us. Summer. And with the arrival of summer and the "dog days," the showman has plenty to do. He's got to plug his cooling plants and tell people that they should come to his theatre on the hot summery nights instead of sitting at home on the front porch sipping lemonade.

It's not an easy job he has and it's for that reason alone we are of the impression the Club pages should be chockfull of helpful summer suggestions. It doesn't make any difference where you are located or what might be the size of your house. GIVE US YOUR "TEN CENTS WORTH," because the daily newspapers will tell you any day what John D. expects for his "TEN CENTS WORTH."

Perhaps right now you are using something for which your brother showman would be grateful to you for life if he knew about it. Or perhaps you have something and want to pass it along to every showman in the world. Well, brother, let us state right now that there is no organization in any of the six continents better able to keep in touch with the real "field workers." We've proven it. Look at our offspring in Australia!

"Dog days," do not mean that you must lie idle and wait for fall to roll around, before you decide you can pull some stunts worthy of recognition on YOUR Club pages—stunts that you KNOW are good. Forget all that. Let us have what you are doing now. What matter whether it is little or big BECAUSE THIS IS THE TIME OF THE YEAR WHEN SHOWMEN NEED IDEAS MOST AND WHEN THE "ONE FOR ALL AND ALL FOR ONE" SPIRIT STANDS OUT.

HowardClaimsThat HeDigsSomeOf'Em Out Of Mothballs

When it comes to admitting that a gag has whiskers, it doesn't take much questioning to find out from Howard Waugh, manager of the Palace Theatre in Meriden, Conn., that he dug it out of the moth balls. In fact, Howard will tell you he did, because he claims that no matter how old the stunt is, it will click if you put a new suit on it.

When "Her Golden Calf" played his house, Howard dug deep and pulled up one that he claims Eve used in the Garden of Eden for advance stuff as a decoy for Adam. The gag is the "First Coat Hanger" stunt. And all who have good memories remembers what it consists of. A nail.

Howard enclosed the nail in a large envelope, bearing copy on the picture which stated: "The first Coat Hanger Ever Used by El Brendel, That Funny Swede in—etc." The stunt, believe it or not, met with a lot of laughs in Meriden and Howard got a lot of word-of-mouth publicity. Of course he denies the claim that a Civil War vet living in the town states that he can remember using the gag as a boy. Howard said that the vet couldn't have used the nail then because it was a "hot" war and they didn't have time to take their coats off. And that's that, for no reason at all.

However, all kidding aside, there's no doubt but that Howard lets the house in for publicity on every stunt he pulls, be it new or old, and anyone who doubts the veracity of our statement need only to take a trip to Meriden and watch this showman in action.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

AN OPEN LETTER on MANAGERS and PROJECTIONISTS

From P. A. McGUIRE

The Monagers Round Table Club hos constantly stressed the importonce of friendly ond hormonious relations between house manogers ond projectionists. We did not hesitote to express our own candid opinion, either to commend or criticize, but we felt that we honestly storted something worth-while in bringing this motter to the fore. In the following excerpts from Mr. McGuire's letter, he will give you his slont on many ongles pertoining to this important discuession. Not olone should YOU reod it, but moke sure thot it is posted in a conspicuous spot up in your booth.

"Chick"

My dear Mr. Lewis:

I want to express my sincere appreciation of your very friendly comments on the Projection Advisory Council in the June 14th issue of the Motion Picture News and to thank you for the splendid co-operation you have given in our efforts to carry out the motto of the Council "Progress Through Understanding." The motto of the Projection Advisory Council is not a mere slogan and we are sincere in wishing to have it taken literally. "Understanding in its various meanings conveys a comprehensive explanation of what the Projection Advisory Council is seeking to accomplish for the advancement of projection and the motion picture industry. The Council has a number of very practical activities, such as seeking to secure properly designed projection rooms, provide good working conditions, minimize the use of obsolete and defective equipment and standardized safety laws. In addition the Council hopes to encourage understanding that dispels misunderstanding. All suffer by the illwill created through the faith to properly realize the responsibility and problems of others."

You have shown an extremely fair minded and courageous spirit in bluntly criticizing the viewpoint and attitude of some managers and it is no more than proper that there should be some reciprocation through the Projection Advisory Council. The Council is seeking to secure a greater respect for the projectionist and a better understanding of his problems and responsibilities, but I assure you that progressive projectionists fully realize that respect and understanding must be mutual. No worthwhile projectionist will deliberately belittle or ignore the rights and authority of managers. There must be leadership and leadership must have authority.

For the Masses

Motion pictures are the very bread and butter of recreation for the vast mass of people and while they have a penny left for relaxation it will be spent for motion picture entertainment. We can be sure of that, for there is no change from the inevitable monotony of the factory, office and even the home, which make such a complete appeal to every member of the family. In order that the public may look constantly to the motion picture theatre for relaxation and happiness, patrons must feel sure that they can have a reasonable dependence upon the entertainment provided, that their comfort and convenience shall be considered at all times and that the picture shall be presented in the best possible manner.

David Sarnoff, President of the Radio Company of America, has said "that this is the age of electric entertainment" and the motion picture industry depends entirely upon mechanical means for recording and reproducing. In spite of this, the industry is not technically minded and has not always adequately realized how much the quality of the entertainment depends upon the condition of the equipment, working conditions in the projection room and the skill of the projectionist. The projectionist should be afforded every facility for doing his work in the best way and then held to the highest standards. No worthwhile projectionist will fail to take his work very seriously or expect to avoid the difficulties that develop in the performance of his duties. Let us investigate more closely the qualifications necessary to make an expert projectionist. I quote briefly from an article "Projection A Specialized Art," issued some time ago by the Projection Advisory Council.

A good projectionist must develop an artistic side as well as a mechanical skill and this means the developing of conflicting mental qualifications, which makes him a highly specialized expert. A good manager, if he is a good executive, will, therefore, readily realize that when he has a man who possesses these various qualifications, he must do everything within reason to keep him and get the best out of him. It is the task of a real executive to take the conditions he faces and make the best of them. A real executive develops men he has and only discharges them as a last resort. While the manager must be keenly alive to everything that goes on in his house and demand good projection, he must not expect perfection in men, methods or material. The good manager will seek to maintain the highest standards in every department of his theatre, but his experience and ability will show him he must sometimes compromise to get best results.

Don't Start Kicking

It should be quite obvious that it is entirely wrong to call up the projection room and complain as soon as anything goes wrong. If a defect continues, it is, of course, proper to call up at a reasonable period to call attention to the trouble. If the projectionist is any good at all, he will make every effort to correct the fault as soon as he can. No competent projectionist gets anything but grief when something goes wrong with the picture. The defect is there for the whole world to see and the minutes seem like hours to him until everything is again going the right way. The world of the projectionist is a little world, it is true, but a big one to him. It is made up of patrons of the house and those who work in it and the projectionist knows that his is the responsibility when anything interrupts or spoils the entertainment. A good projectionist does not have to be told when anything is wrong on the screen, for he should be the first one to know it. Perhaps it is his own fault, but it may be caused by something beyond his control. No matter what the cause of the trouble may be, he is not happy. He knows he will be held responsible and if he is worth his salt, he is working like "seven devils" to get the picture back on the screen or overcome the difficulty.

Calling him up at such a time only adds to his trouble and delays him. Later on the manager will want to know what happened and if there is a recurrence of the trouble, may have considerably more to say. Whatever he says, however, or whatever he does, will be based upon his desire to get the best results at all times. He should never be actuated by a desire to show his authority or indulge in mere fault finding.

Progress Through Understanding

A great merchant once said "the customer is always right," and that means that even the owner must subordinate himself to his patrons, if he wishes to retain their patronage. If the boss does this, surely everyone employed by him must expect to follow suit. In doing this, no one need lose his own self-respect but will secure the confidence and good-will of others. "Progress Through Understanding," as it applies to the projectionist, means that he must meet others at least half way. That he must be more than willing to make sacrifices when necessary, obey orders, accept criticism and fully realize that he cannot expect consideration from the manager unless he earns it. It has been my good fortune to see the managers and the projectionists working together with the best of good will and respect for one another, and such theatres have invariably been conducted on the highest possible plane. "Progress Through Understanding" must be on a fifty-fifty basis. If there is any competition at all, it is for both sides to strive to see which one can contribute most to the success of the theatre.

I have had a long and intimate friendship with many of the leading projectionists of the United States, Canada, England and other parts of the world, and I know that in this letter I have merely expressed their ideas, which have the support of thousands of conscientious and capable projectionists.

Cordially yours,

P. A. McGuire,

Executive Vice President,
PROJECTION ADVISORY COUNCIL.

PLAN AHEAD!

It is not too soon to start laying your plans for the coming season. Most live showmen have already given this a lot of thought, but perhaps you are one of those who feel that the summer is still too young to worry about the new season. Well, it is rather early, but nevertheless there are many things suitable for next fall that possibly will occur to you. Jot them down in a note book. Keep them where you can lay your hands on them. But don't dismiss them from your mind.

After all, once July breezes on its hot, merry way, you will have to be getting yourself and your theatre set for the opening of the busy days ahead.

This is just an advance suggestion and you can either throw it in the waste basket or treat it seriously. But if you want to take some good advice, start thinking about September right now.

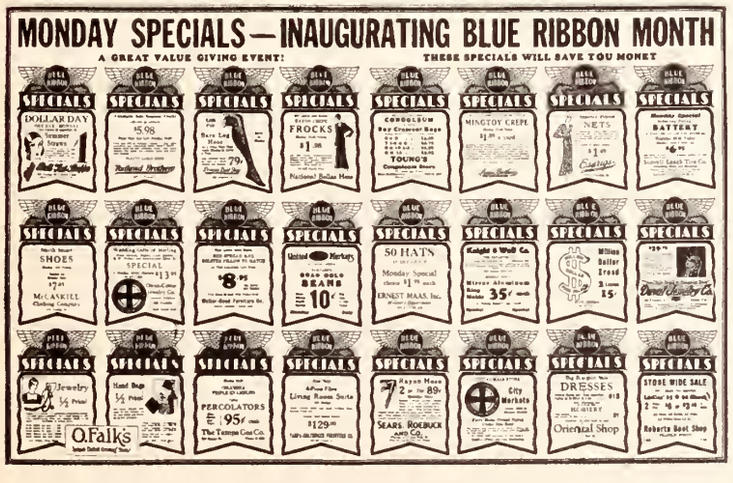
Harrison Hit Waco On "Hit The Deck" Special Display

Talk about lobby displays that pack a wallop. Here's one that J. P. Harrison, manager of the Waco Theatre in Waco, Texas, turned out to help sell "Hit The Deck." A beaverboard battleship in natural colors was what he worked out.

One week in advance of showing, the battleship covered the entire center of lobby. Ropes leading to each side of the wall made into a ladder, were hung from the ship. Pennants with catchlines from the picture were strung from all directions to ship. Port holes were cut in ship with pictures of Jack Oakie placed in them and two big guns sticking out of center of ship gave a real atmosphere for the occasion.



During run of picture, the battleship was placed over box office and tickets were sold through the port holes after removing several of the Oakie pictures.

Harrison also planted a sign at a vantage point—on top of one of the construction houses at Waco's new two million dollar dam; the sign reading, "Hit the Deck—Waco—Friday." This was done one week in advance and since nearly three thousand persons visited the dam on Sunday alone the value of this stunt was easily seen, especially in view of the subsequent box-office re-action during the week. We want to thank Harrison for letting us see this one and we feel that when he engineers some more of his well known stunts in Waco, that he will keep us posted on them. How about it "J. P.," you know we're more than interested in seeing how you merchandise your show.

Weiss, Short And Allen Engineered Blue Ribbon Month

The trio who have been startling Tampa, Fla. with live-wire exploitation are at it again. Wally Allen, exploitation and publicity "ace," Harry Weiss, City Manager, and Paul Short, manager of the Tampa Theatre, engineered a Blue Ribbon Month for June that is making them sit up and take notice.

Feeling that this was not to be a Blue Ribbon Month for the theatre alone, the trio set out to make it an affair that would include all of the Tampa merchants. They hustled out and tied up every big store in the city. They roped in the Tampa Tribune, one of the largest papers in the city. We are showing a cut of one of the special double truck co-operative pages that was run. A number of these were featured weekly. On Saturday and Sunday the local newspaper granted, free of charge, a reader on the front page plugging the Blue Ribbon Month.

Many angles were covered in the special month and two of them of special interest were the popularity contest and a special tie-up with one of the largest department stores. The popularity angle was a corker. Every store was provided with thousands of voting blanks and patrons spending a dollar or over were entitled to vote for the "Blue Ribbon Sales Girl." The girl who at the conclusion of the month had the most votes had fifty dollars in gold waiting for her.

ICE CREAM TIE-UPS!

Last summer we published many details in connection with theatre and ice cream tie-ups, and although we have not received any great amount of this kind of material up to this time, the thought still remains that here is a good gag that can be turned into b. o. receipts if you want to take a crack at it.

Bill Bergmann, out in Nebraska, worked out a stunt whereby every purchaser of a quart of ice cream at the local distributors of a state-wide cream manufacturer, received a free ticket to the theatre.

Comstock, out on the coast, engineered a kiddie matinee idea by tying up with an ice cream company to secure a small brick of cream for every youngster who attended the special show. This went over so big that the company sponsored hundreds like it all over the state. (On stuff of this kind, keep in mind that the cream must be distributed after the show as the kids go out. Otherwise they will ruin your carpets and seats.)

Give this angle a little thought and try to work it out so as to cost you little or nothing. Maybe you can sell your local ice cream parlor or confectioner a bill of goods so that he will furnish the cream in return for a plug on family trade.

The other tie-up with a department store enabled the showmen to secure special heralds which were distributed by the store. The heralds plugged the month and invited all customers who spent five dollars or over to attend the Tampa as their guests. The tickets were purchased by the store and given away to the customers. Another angle that proved to be a valuable plug was the insertion of thirty thousand stuffers in the monthly telephone bills that went to the residents of the city. Three thousand special buttons were handed out at the theatre and stores.

The showmen were given the whole hearted co-operation of the Tampa Merchants Association and since Wally Weiss and Short, sponsored the entire arrangement they built up a lot of good-will for the house and the Publix organization besides making some excellent contacts for future use. The activities of these showmen are always a source of pleasure to us as we feel that our members display more than a usual interest in learning what the Florida bunch is doing; especially with competition among the showmen to see who can lead the group, being so keen. Let's have some more boys, and we want to say that you three are certainly hanging onto the top rung.

Department Store Tie-Up Proved To Be Profitable One

H. C. Bamberger sold a puzzle contest idea to a department store that resulted in excellent publicity for Maurice Chevalier in "The Big Pond," playing at the Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, Ky.

The puzzle picture contest appeared in the store's ad with a headline, "Won't you be our guest at the Kentucky?" Copy in the ad stated that it was necessary to cut out the little squares and assemble them, paste on a sheet of white paper and bring them to the store's Fashion Dept., and if you were among the first 25 to submit the correct picture, you would receive a pass to see the picture.

The store also had a co-operative window display on the picture as well as flashing advertising material in their Fashion Dept., where the correct solutions of puzzle contest were exchanged for passes.

Department store tie-ups ought to be easy for Bamberger. Just think of the famous department store of his name over there in Newark, N. J.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Theatre Management and Patronage Building in Holland

H. A. FOL, Rembrandt Theatre, Arnheim, Holland

The Club pages have brought you slants on foreign showmanship and theatre operation from many isolated and distant points. Now we take you to Holland where one of our most enthusiastic members relates, for the benefit of his brother members and thatre managers, how Management and Patronage Building is handled in his country. We are grateful to Mr. Fol, and hope that he favors us with many more interesting letters.

"Theatre operation in Holland brings difficulties specific for our country. The Dutch are no theatregoers by nature and they do not like bragging publicity. I remember a few years ago, when we had the picture "THREE NOBLE BANDITS," we sent three men through the town dressed like the principal figures. Results . . . the worst week we ever had.

We run two shows a night at 6.45 and 9 o'clock. Matinee performances every Wednesday and Saturday. Sunday and Holidays four shows. Our program which changes every Friday, consists of FOX MOVIETONE NEWS, SILENT LOCAL NEWS, one or two SHORTS—according to the length of the feature—VARIETY and FEATURE.

Our principle is good publicity all the year round and special exploitation for special pictures only. As a result of this we have a large regular patronage and with special pictures we draw more people than we can seat. When we do something unusual everybody knows that the "REMBRANDT" has a picture which they must miss on no account.

Our campaign starts on the preceding Monday with two-column ads. We have a quarter page on Thursday and continue with teasers until Wednesday. For special pictures we run advance ads from two weeks before the opening.

Only on Thursday our ads are headed by the name of the theatre. On that day people are looking for the ad of the "REMBRANDT" and of the other theatres. The other days, however, they are not a bit interested in what we have to say. Therefore, we have headings which arouse people's curiosity. Owing to the lack of a choice of cuts we do not always illustrate our ads.

For every picture we build a display in a corner next to the stage and find this a very good way of interesting patrons in next week's program. We run trailers on special features only. The same applies to the dressing of front and lobby.

In the windows of all important shops, cafes, hotels, etc., in town and in the surrounding villages we have small posters announcing the program of the week. We frequently use heralds, throw-aways and occasionally tie-ups with music stores and others. The latter is rather difficult as this is nearly never done in Holland as the merchants seem to be unaware of its value for their own business.

The largest store in town packed in all its parcels a numbered card. On one side we advertised our coming attraction and on the other side informed them that the customers of that particular store would have a free entree for the opening show if the number on the card corresponded with one of the hundred numbers we were to publish an hour before the show started. This worked splendidly and we had to call in the assistance of the police to clear the street.

Every important event is filmed by our own cameramen. On their car we have an announcement reading as follows: "SEE THE .....AND YOURSELF ON THE SCREEN OF THE REMBRANDT. COMMENCING TO-MORROW." It is our main purpose that wherever they go, people will always hear or read of the "REMBRANDT."

It is a custom in Holland that house programs are paid for by the patrons. We have a special parking rate for our patrons in the nearest garage.

Among our new promotion plans ranks first a combined ticket or bus or tram and a visit to the theatre sold by the guards. This is done to draw people from out of town to the theatre. Therefore, we give a reduction on the entree. And the company gives a reduction on the fares as well.

THE FIRST RULE IN SELLING OUR SHOW IS: WE NEVER PITCH EXPECTATIONS TOO HIGH AND THIS IS, WE BELIEVE, THE MAIN REASON FOR OUR SUCCESS."

In a very short time I am coming to the States to get better acquainted with the excellent showmanship of the American exhibitors and I hope to meet many of the "CLUB" members in person."

"All For One And One For All"

Robert E. Hicks Put His Food Show Over In Fine Style

A sweet campaign that went over like a house afire was turned out by Robert E. Hicks, manager of the Paramount Theatre in connection with his merchandising of "Honey," when he decided to stage a food show along with the picture.

The food show and the picture received a break in the local newspaper due to the fact that the paper was sponsoring a plan to select a Miss Maxwell House, typifying an old-fashioned girl who would act as hostess during the run of "Honey." This of course, was engineered by Hicks. When the girl was selected, the food concerns represented in the show agreed to pay her salary for the time she worked and in addition ran some big ads in the local papers plugging the show, the girl and the house.

One of the local bakeries put out a special "Honey" cake, slices of which were given away free to patrons entering the theatre. Free coffee was also distributed along with the cake. The cake company arranged for ten window displays plugging the show and also permitted the use of banners on twenty of their fleet of trucks.

Practically every type of food that could be prepared in the theatre with the electrical equipment furnished by the Power Company was offered to the guests and patrons. Exhibits and demonstrations in the preparation of over 35 nationally advertised food products were given in the main lobby and on the mezzanine floor. The preparation and use of such food products and beverages included Maxwell House coffee and tea, Jell-O, Hellman's mayonnaise products, Minute tapioca, Sanka coffee, Frosted food products and Baker's cocoa and chocolate.

The food show drew to the theatre many of the employees of the products' manufacturers, since a number of locals were represented as well as the nationally advertised products. And with "Honey" for a title and a honey of a campaign to put it over it can be seen that all was milk and honey when Hicks checked up the b.o. receipts.

Mahoney Placed His Bid In For Space On Midget Courses

With all these miniature golf courses springing up around the country it was only logical to suppose that showmen would hop right to it and take advantage of them in the way of securing free publicity. So W. H. Mahoney, manager of the Strand Theatre in New Orleans, La., went to work to take his share of free advertising.

Signs were planted at the entrance and at one or two other places on the miniature golf course; the signs carrying copy relating to the picture, theatre and playdates as well as offering three passes daily to the lowest scores.

The tie-up was in effect throughout the entire week and from indications it seems to us that Mahoney is going to repeat every time the opportunity presents itself.

The stunt proved to be of value, not only for the house but the golf course as well, as it was observed that a number of crack golfers were playing the course in order to secure the free tickets which were offered for the lowest scores.

We don't know whether you have any of these courses around your section of the country as yet but if you have, remember that it is an excellent opportunity for you to plug your house and any special features that you may be offering. Another idea that a Round Table member has brought to light is supplying the course bosses with a number of score cards carrying an "institutional" plug for your house.

We want to thank Mahoney for passing this one along to us and we hope to hear from him again very soon and when he sends us in his next contribution it will be a pleasant surprise to find that he has included his photo and a little note telling about his career in show business.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

S. Robinson Sprang Some Cuckoo Ones On "The Cuckoos"

As we felt it was about time that we heard from S. E. Fleet Robinson, house manager of the Capitol Theatre in Reading, Pa., we were more than pleased when we received this account of the knockout campaign he engineered for "The Cuckoos."

In the photos we are showing you will notice one of the most effective stunts that was used in the form of two trucks which were pressed into service as street ballyhoos. One truck played the theme songs and funny records. It went all about town, stopping at the busiest street corners as well as at the factories and schools. Heralds were distributed and short talks given through the microphone attached to the truck.

The other "truck" is a 1909 model flivver, manned by what Fleet terms "two of the best natural born comedians that ever pulled off a Rube act." The man and the woman panicked the town. Inside of two days after they were in Reading everybody knew that "The Cuckoos" was slated for the Capitol. They pulled off a novel stunt at different restaurants and all of the big banquets. A man would be pointed out as a possible "victim" and the woman would go over to him, place her head on his shoulder and begin to wail tearfully about the woes that has befallen her since he deserted her and the "cheeild." This stunt was always worked whenever a crowd was present and was good for a number of laughs.

When it seemed as though the victim was pretty much embarrassed, the woman's partner would appear on the scene and commence to harangue with her and which always culminated in a rough and tumble encounter that would be stopped by a "kissing and making up" process. The two would then turn to the crowd and say "If you like us, go see the Cuckoos at the Capitol."

In conjunction with this story we are also showing a sample of one of the ads that Fleet turned out on the picture and since it is self explanatory we are sure that after an examination you will agree with us that it is an ad that packs a punch capable of selling them in any town.

These few activities are typical of the work turned out weekly by Harry Stern and Fleet Robinson and we can safely say that these two showmen will be represented on our pages many times in the future. Right, boys?

The world is full of opportunities just as it is full of worms, if we, like the old black hen, will "dig" for them. Persistency will overcome the "rainy spells and dry spells," and there is always business to get if one will "keep on keepin' on."

Stimulator.

"Buddy" Webber Figures In A New Kind Of Experience

It has been "Buddy" Webber's fortunate experience, not so long ago, to participate in a radio broadcasting innovation that netted the Capitol Theatre in Miami, Fla., a good deal of free newspaper publicity and also provided interesting reading.

As most of the Club members know, "Buddy" is the Capitol Theatre's feature organist and his novelty solos have long been a feature of the theatre and the Club pages. This new stunt that he figured in, consisted of a unified broadcast—in other words, three men located in different parts of the city combined their talents to make the special show possible.

LaRoy Fifield, pianist, broadcasting from the studio of WQAM, "Buddy" at the Capitol and Fred Clark, chief operator of the station, arranged a hookup so that the pianist and the organist would be heard at the same time. At eleven in the morning, in the quietness of the darkened theatre, "Buddy" with a microphone alongside him, sits at his organ and plays his famous numbers. At exactly the same time, the pianist at the studio runs his fingers along the shining keyboard of the piano and the soft notes issuing forth blend with the chords of the organ pipes. The engineer sits silently before the transmission panels, his skilled hands too, deftly touching here and there, "mixing" the tones that brings this remote control broadcast to the public.

Many letters have been received by the station expressing appreciation of listeners for this combination program and from all indications it marks a radical step in the progress of radio broadcastng. We are glad to note that "Buddy" takes so much interest in the Club that he keeps us posted on everything that he does and we know he will continue. Give our regards to our friends in your house "Buddy" and keep up the good work.

LESLIE F. LARSON Says:

"I particularly want to stress the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB which is carried in this publication. It is without a doubt the biggest help to the exhibitors who have the opportunity of taking or reading this magazine. Especially is it a great help to us small fellows in that it enables us to keep up with the larger houses and run our theatre on a more theatre-like basis."

Graduation Time Wasn't Overlooked By Merritt Either

It was a certainty, in view of the fact he could tie-in the Graduating Class of his local high school with his showing of "The Vagabond King," that D. M. Merritt, manager of the Strand Theatre in Birmingham, Ala., was going to cash in on the good will the stunt would net him, by sending out invitations to the class to attend the show.

The invitations were neatly printed and read as follows: "We are taking this opportunity to extend our congratulations to the Graduating Class of 1930 of Phillips High School and to offer the privilege of attending the performance of VAGABOND KING on Wednesday afternoon, May 7, 1930—Management, Strand Theatre.—Please show this card at the door." Another angle was covered on the Sunday preceding the Monday opening when he arranged with the Davis Air Lines to be picked up at Mercer Field and then land at Roberts Field, the Army Depot, where they were holding stunt flying before a large crowd. He was accompanied in the plane by an empty can of film which was supposed to carry the print of "The Vagabond King." He also arranged for an auto to pick him up at the field. The car was bannered on both sides, "Vagabond King brought back to Birmingham upon popular demand by aeroplane—First time at regular prices."

The car was then driven through the main streets of the town with the film can prominently displayed by means of a background of red satin, and the necks that were craned led Merritt to believe that the picture would go over extra well. And, as we understand it, he wasn't disappointed.

Rudy Born Placed Bunches Of Roses In Lobby As Plug

A flower show that proved a natural for Rudy Born, manager of the Coronado Theatre in Rockford, Ill., was engineered recently in conjunction with his showing of "The Vagabond King."

With a theme song like "Only a Rose" to plug, it can be seen that his flower show tie-up was a most appropriate medium for selling the show. Accordingly Rudy arranged with a local florist to have a display created for the lobby that would have them looking and sniffing from the other side of the street. And did it? We'll say so. When the passers by got a whiff of those flowers they just naturally had to stop. And another thing that was used to hold them there when they stopped was a special display board carrying an enlargement of a telegram, sent by the stars of the film and plugging the picture's engagement in Rockford.

Some valuable newspaper space was given the theatre by the florist who ran a number of ads plugging his exhibit and the picture at the theatre. He also promoted a lot of interest in the display by announcing, through his ads, that a bunch of flowers from the stars had been sent to the theatre via telegraph. This stunt created a lot of comment, particularly as it had not been used before in the city, and the house and florist were the subjects of plenty of word-of-mouth comment.

We want to thank Don Hoobler for letting us see what Rudy is doing out there and we know that we are going to hear more of this showman's work in a little while. So what do you say, Rudy, keep us posted so that we can pass along the results of your many showman activities.

"Just Another Day"—Is Dis ah Seestem?

10 A. M. at the Blink Theatre. Enter the manager, bright and cheerful and ready to tackle all the detail and routine so that he can get out and arrange for a Chamber of Commerce tie-up before the matinee gong strikes.

He sits himself down at his desk whistling and happy. Carefree as the birds in the trees (hell, ain't we getting artistic?) and picks up unusually large stack of mail, noting with a slightly sinking feeling 'round the gizzards, that most of it is from the home office—(God—bless 'em).

First letter from the publicity department, cutting to pieces his last report on the great campaign he put across. Everything they told him to do was great and everything he did himself was rotten. (Now, ain't that strange?) Letter ends by telling him that he must start getting a little original if he wants to keep his job.

Next letter is from the district manager asking why his marquee lights were turned out 9 minutes later than they should have been. Likewise calling his attention to the fact that he goes to dinner too early. Likewise inquiring whether he ought not call the district manager up before spending forty cents carfare to get a reel over to the other house.

Less-cheerful manager now removes his coat and picks up letter number three, and it happens to be from the supervising manager of that division, asking why he don't leave his marquee lights on a little later, the "big shot" feels that late customers are being chased away. Also, why don't he go to dinner earlier so as to be back and ready for the evening rush. Also, why he didn't take a taxi to insure faster delivery of that reel to go to the other theatre.

By this time he is hot and bothered and he stops to mop his forehead before continuing with the batch of bad news. But once more he tackles the pile of mail and after going through about ten letters asking ten times that many fool questions, he feels that he can clean up his copy for next week's program and continue with his plans for the morning.

Phone rings. D.M. shouts: "Say, where in hell have you been all morning? (It's just about ten-thirty) I've been trying to locate you about . . . blahhh . . . blahh . . ."—and so on for various and sundry other matters.

Manager hangs up receiver and turns back to desk again. In walks the porter. The vacuum machine refuses to vacuum. Doesn't he think they ought to put in a requisition for a new one? So out into the orchestra sails the team and after much talk on the part of the porter the manager discovers a rip in the pipe. Instructs porter to tape it up temporarily and back into the office he goes.

Assistant comes in and tells him that the lobby signs for that night's changes are still undelivered. Why weren't they followed up a few days before? Assistant explains (as only assistants can explain) that he was busy doing so and so and which or what. Time out for the poor harassed manager to get the sign shop on the phone and straighten out the mess. That off his mind, he gets rid of the latest pest and tries working on his program copy again.

Phone rings. Home office bookkeeper phoning to ask him to please make up a duplicate of all last week's b. o. statements as someone in the office misplaced them and they were needed right away. Before noon, if possible.

His cheerful expression, now entirely gone, poor manager opens the cabinet and digs out the statements. After about an hour and a quarter he gets the duplicates finished and dispatched by assistant to office.

Back again to the programs. Printer calls and tells him that copy must be in a day earlier because of orders from the "big shot." Manager tries to explain that he would gladly have sent it in a day earlier if someone had tipped him off to the secret. Promises to get it out by messenger before matinee starts. Locks the door and starts on the copy again.

Banging on door—in about three minutes, shouts, "Whoinell is that?" Answer, "Jim, the operator, open the door quick." Door is unlocked, enter perspiring projectionist, all flustered and het up. Conveys the glad tidings that the sound plant has stopped furnishing any sound, notwithstanding all his efforts to the contrary. It is now after twelve and the chances of getting a service man are rather punk. Rushes up to the booth and between them they try everything under the sun to get some sound out of the equipment. At one-thirty they are still at it, going over and over all the rules on the trouble chart. Enter the reel boy munching a ham sandwich (we specify the kind of sandwich so you won't be misled), asks what the trouble is and after being told goes over the control board and throws the switch from non-sync to sync. Enter the sound with everything at the high point, such as monitor control, and fader. The first of the few customers almost drops dead from fright and is awaiting the manager when that perspiring individual reaches the main floor once more.

Quieting that gent, he returns to work on his copy. Matinee starts and he is almost finished when the highly (?) esteemed district manager walks in and asks, as only a d.m. can ask, "Why is it that you must always do your office work when the show is on?"

Thereupon, the now distracted h.m. picks up an ink bottle and flings it at the h.e.d.m. making much mess of him. Walks out for a cup of coffee and a piece of dunk and then calls the printer and tells him if he wants his copy to come and get it.

MORAL:—According to Aesop (and Moran and Mack): "The early bird catches the worm." And the early manager catches HELL. DRAW YOUR OWN CONCLUSIONS!

"What A Quartette I Have In My House" Proclaims Damon

The Lincoln-Dixie Theatre in Chicago Heights, Illinois, now boasts an usher staff which numbers among it a quartette of four male voices, under the tutelage of A. J. Damon, live-wire manager of the house, and they are a great quartette, too.

It seems that Damon, who is seen in the photo we are running with this article, decided that he would like to have some sort of an attraction that would keep his crowds in good humor during the hold-outs and while inspecting the theatre it came to his attention that he possessed four ushers on his staff who were excellent singers.

The boys rehearsed for a while and then were pressed into service as a feature attraction. A baby piano was placed in the lobby of the theatre and the sensational success of the first night proved the strength of Damon's idea and enabled him, in addition to having a lobby attraction, to put the boys in his stage shows whenever there was a spot for them. And the moral for this little saga is that you can never tell, until you look in your own backyard, where the gold is buried.

We are glad to note that Damon is continuing the interest that he has shown in the past and we hope that he will keep us informed of his future work because we know that a good many of his brother managers on the Publix circuit are as interested as we are in learning what he is doing to sell his shows.

Merle Blair Tells Us What He's Been Doing In His Town

When Merle R. Blair, General Manager of the Regent and the Empress Theatres in Cedar Falls, Ia., seemed to be less represented on our pages than before we figured that he was busy putting something over. We found that such was the case for he has been installing a cooling plant and a number of other improvements at the Regent. But here, we'll let him tell you about it!

"We have been doing considerable changing around our house here, new floors are going in this week, have just purchased a new all-steel cooling plant (and by the way, that is something that the boys want to watch, to keep away from the noise of the fans, either wall or in these larger systems). We have had a large arctic system in for several years and have now bought their latest and a larger job.

"Have also been doing over our front and inside lobby, installing new indirect lighting. Taking care, proper care of one's house, the screenings and the local work that I do here keeps me hopping.

"This has been the situation here, where one not only had to sell his theatre to the public in the town but more than that, he had to sell himself. With a town of forty thousand only five miles away and plenty of theatres in that town plus the fact that there are three paved roads leading into that city, believe me, one must not sleep at the post, if he expects to get along here. Many have failed before. For this reason I have always taken quite a lot of activity in our local affairs.

"I came here an absolute stranger less than eight years ago, and am a past president of the Lions Club, now the Deputy Dist. Gov. for this section, am also the president of the Chamber of Commerce here this year. While this takes considerable time, yet it lets me keep my theatre before the people in many ways.

"When the people think of M. R. Blair, I know they think of the Regent Theatre and that is the way I have tried to sell myself and my theatre to the people of Cedar Falls. While this is possible of no interest to you, I am telling this to bring out point that I know many men in the theatre business should heed. So many of the boys ignore the opportunity to help out the town in which they are unless they can see some benefit to them or the theatre. By taking this attitude they lose much good-will that, after all, is money in the B. O. some time.

"PERSONALLY, I WOULD NOT CARE TO LIVE AND DO BUSINESS IN A TOWN WHICH I COULD NOT FEEL THAT I WAS CONTRIBUTING SOMETHING WORTH WHILE TO IT, NOT JUST TAKING ALL THAT I COULD GET OUT OF IT AND LETTING SOME OTHER JOHN AND BILL DO THE WORK."

"We had a little paper bag stunt the other day that, while old goes over good. This was on "Sally," and while the picture has nothing to do with the stunt we made arrangements with two of the largest grocery stores to print on both side of various sixes of paper bags. Printed four thousand of them and, of course, on the bottom of each bag we inserted the slogan that the store carried. The store furnished the bags and used them. We paid for the printing and passed the store several passes. They were pleased and so were we as it carried the message into the kitchen on the grocery sack."

We would like to state at this time that Mr. Blair has been in the show game a good many years and that his past experiences and activities covering a wide and varied career, have proven his worth to the title of showman. We want to thank him for keeping us posted on what he is doing and we're sure that his comments on the various subjects will be well received by his fellow Club members.

Advertising's Priceless Ingredient

(From "Advertising Age")

One of the best stories told recently about Charles M. Schwab relates an experience with a banker. Mr. Schwab had explained a financial situation, involving the issuance of new securities, and the banker had o.k.'d the idea in detail. Then, banker-like, he asked Mr. Schwab to put it in writing. Later he called the steel man and told him that the written communication was not in line with their conversation. Then Mr. Schwab went to him and carefully explained each point, showing that the written outline covered the situation accurately.

"It sounds all right while you are talking," said the banker, "but it looks different on paper. Maybe I had better get you to make a phonograph record of this matter, and then everybody will understand it."

The explanation, of course, was that the splendid enthusiasm and personality of Mr. Schwab carried conviction, while the cold type did not. Merely putting down the dull facts, without the illuminating exposition of their author, left the reader unmoved. A "selling punch" was supplied by the personal enthusiasm which those who know Mr. Schwab can testify that he puts into every act of his life.

Isn't enthusiasm, after all, the priceless ingredient of advertising? Isn't it the one quality which is missing in a great many of the advertisements which fill the newspapers and magazines? This is a great day of fact-finding and of reason-why copy, and all of the facts and reasons are needed and necessary. But capping them all, like the climax of an oration, should be that sweep of enthusiastic presentation that will make the reader feel, "Well, this chap evidently believes in his own proposition, anyway."

Few decisions are made entirely on cold logic. There is nearly always a little emotional appeal that influences the final result. It shouldn't be left out of the advertising.

Oscar Makes His Stunts Work Overtime; Here's How

Want an example of how a stunt can be repeated on any picture merely by changing it around a bit? If you do, look at this work turned out by Earle Oscar, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Athens, Ala.

The two photos show different fronts. One was used to sell "Revenge" and the other one to plug "The Mississippi Gambler." When he played the first picture, he placed a number of stills under the marquee and arranged them so that they spelled out the title of the picture and when the residents of the town got a look at this a good many of them complimented him on his idea.

The other front plugged "The Mississippi Gambler," and this time, instead of using stills, atmosphere was supplied by the use of ordinary playing cards, to the good effect that may be seen in the picture. From these two stunts we hope that you have seen why it is not necessary to throw away a good stunt after it is once used (as a matter of fact we don't know who does) but it is a habit with some showmen to put it away until the same type of picture rolls along again.

This showman from Alabama has passed along a number of examples of what he has been doing and is doing to sell his shows and, as he says, "I get a great many valuable ideas from my fellow members and I'm more than pleased when I can contribute something." With an "All for One and One For All" spirit of this sort, is it any wonder that Earle keeps his house running well?

Swanson's Fronts Create A Lot Of Interest In Miami

Among the showmen who are way up in front for turning out classy fronts, you'll find R. M. Swanson, manager of the Hippodrome Theatre in Miami, Fla. If you'll recall it was only a short time ago that we told you about the front he created for "Free and Easy" and in which story we expressed regret because we did not have a photo of it to pass along. But this front that we are showing on "So Long Letty" is the one from which the other one was copied. So here it is.

Panels of beaverboard were used in covering the sides of the lobby entrance as well as the box office and entire lobby front. On this was pasted particles of broken glass intermingled with stills, cut-outs carrying copy of star names and large cut-out letters spelling out the title of the picture.

So many favorable comments were heard about this unusual lobby display that Swanson used practically the same effect some two weeks later on "Free and Easy."

The "Free and Easy" display was given a fresh coat of paint and the broken glass was given a coat of glitter which made the effect more striking than before. Of course, different cut-outs, stills, etc., were used to emphasize that "Free and Easy" was the current attraction.

Now all that you have to do, if you want to construct a front of this sort is to refer to our other story and work from the photo and if you want to know any more about the construction we are sure that Swanson will be glad to give details.

"Journey's End" Offered Sherred Plenty Of Angles

Remember the broadsides that went out on the openings of a recent musical production? Well, it seems to us that the campaigns that our members are turning out for "Journey's End" will vie closely with anything that was done in the past. One of the first accounts we have come across from Pennsylvania is the campaign turned out by Carl Sherred, manager of the Mishler Theatre in Altoona.

Despite the fact that Commencement Exercises at the local schools and hot weather prevailed throughout the run of the picture, Sherred managed to pack them four and five deep during the picture's run. His first move was to tie up the American Legion, since, knowing his town the way he does, this seemed to be the most valuable move that could be made.

The Legion men, forty-five in number, had brought back from France a box car which they had mounted on an automobile chassis and whenever they held a parade in Altoona this was almost always included. Sherred tied the Legion in with the picture and they agreed to stage a parade every evening for four days. The first was held on the opening night and the photos we are showing will give you some idea of the success of it. As an added feature, the Legionnaires gave a fifteen-minute concert in front of the theatre and it completely demoralized traffic. The Legion's secretary mailed out three thousand cards, calling the attention of members to the picture.

As most of the ex-soldiers are business men of Altoona, they permitted Sherred to dress up their store windows with the beautiful oil paintings that he made up for the occasion. In return for their courtesy, Sherred granted them 60 per cent of the theatre's profits on a special midnight show which was run during the week, and, as we have stated, that he packed them in at every show, you know that the Legion men were more than satisfied with their share.

Of course, Sherred used many other angles to sell the picture, but as most of our members have also used them at some time or another, we did not deem it necessary to set them forth. We want to commend Carl on what he did to sell the picture and we know that if he continues the live-wire activity that is evident in every stunt he uses around Altoona, he'll be breaking records week after week.

Irving Cohen Uses Many Mediums To Sell Attractions

By tying up with one of the local newspapers Irving Cohen, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Waterloo, Iowa, was enabled to put "Sarah and Son" over to big box office receipts and big publicity gains. Irving sure is in with the newspaper folks.

The newspaper announced the contest with a front page reader and followed this through with a large ad on the classified page explaining in detail about the stunt picture, theatre and playdates.

The names of five Waterloo mothers and five Waterloo sons were scattered throughout the classified page for two days—during the first two days of the picture's engagement.

Every mother whose name appeared in the classified columns was entitled to free admission to see the picture provided the name of her son also appeared during this time. And likewise, every son whose name appeared was entertained if the name of his mother was also published.

A tie-up was effected with the First National Bank wherein the bank ran a 20-inch ad in the newspapers advertising the fact that they would open a $10 bank account for the first son born in Waterloo on the opening day of "Sarah and Son." This ad also carried sales copy about the picture as well as mentioning name of theatre and playdates.

The stunt proved to be an exploitation bonanza, and though we haven't any special dope on whether any one claimed the prize, we feel that plenty of attention was attracted to the theatre, the bank and the film and that both the house and bank rated a lot of good-will.

Not only on pictures like "Sarah and Son" does he step out and grab a bunch of publicity, but on every attraction that plays his house. When he had the "Benson Murder Case" he decided that a "mystery car" would be just the thing for word of mouth comment. He promoted a new car from the Cord agency and since the lines and body of this car are of an unusual type, it helped the effectiveness of the stunt immensely.

The windshield and all the windows of the mystery car were covered on the inside with black cheese cloth. And from all (outside) appearances the person driving the car could not see.

Banners carried on the car contained copy, "How does the driver see to guide this CORD mystery car? It's quite a mystery, but not nearly so baffling as the mystery confronted by Wm. Powell as Philo Vance in S. S. Van Dine's THE BENSON MURDER CASE—a Paramount all-talking picture—Paramount Theatre, April 5-6-7-8."

We have often wondered where Irving gets all the pull he seems to have in Waterloo, because, no matter what sort of a stunt he wants to engineer, he is pretty sure to receive the cooperation of any merchant before whom he lays his plan. Why don't you let us in on the secret, Irving, by writing us a little article about it so that we can pass the low down to the rest of the Club?

UNDERTRAINED OR OVERTRAINED

The subject of ushers seems to centre around the one pertinent question: Are they properly trained for their jobs?

Observing the usher staffs in many theatres that we visit, we often get the impression that they do not arrive at the happy medium. We find them either undertrained or else much too overtrained.

Taking a Broadway house for an example, we would say that the boys in the Roxy Theatre hit closer to perfection, in our opinion, than any other house on the main stem. They seem to maintain their military bearing without being overbearing.

They make no attempt to force you into undesirable seats so long as there is a chance that other empty seats are to be had. And they radiate a feeling of welcome that seems to catch hold of the patron too.

Many theatres, starting off with a military style of staff, impress the ushers with too much of the stiff-looking appearance; so much so that the boys can't seem to relax when asked questions, etc. Which is not so good. It leaves the impression that the customer is being "high-hatted" and no staff ever won over the patron with that kind of stuff.

Are you coming into New York for a vacation this summer? If so, make it a point to visit some of the Times Square houses and particularly observe how the boys handle themselves at the Roxy. It's an education.

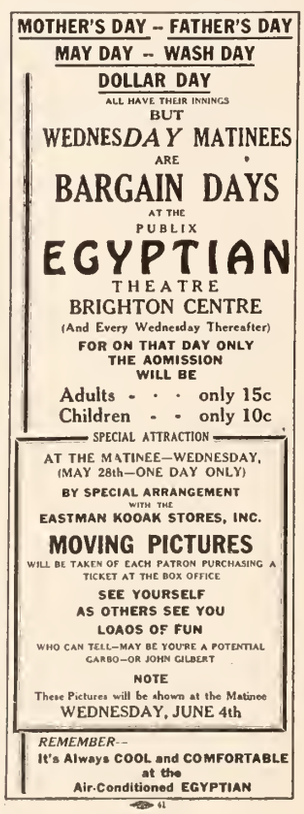
"HELLO PERLBERG"

It was a pleasure to welcome half of the firm of Weiss-Perlberg, Inc., of Jacksonville, Florida, when Jonas Perlberg in person (not a talkie) walked in on us while here in New York.



It is certainly a treat to meet the boys personally after corresponding with them for so many months, and Perlberg was all that we expected of him.

Let's hope that the renewed activities of Weiss-Perlberg will be broadcast from the CLUB pages as often in the future as they have been in the past.

Local Movies Went Over With A Bang For William Murphy

It was King Richard who yelled out "A horse—a horse—my kingdom for a horse," and as luck would have it there didn't happen to be a showman around or he'd have been furnished with a nag of some kind, whether it be a beaver-board mare or a reducing equine; for any of the ideas that showmen of this organization have been cashing in on would have helped Richard out of his dilemma.

To boost up his biz at the b. o., William Murphy, manager of the Egyptian Theatre in Brighton Centre, Mass., decided that a couple of novel ideas would be necessary, and to that end he put on the old thinking cap and devised the herald that we are reproducing. From studying the herald you'll see the special stunts he arranged in order to keep them coming into the theatre.

One of his special attractions was the taking of motion pictures at the box office of the theatre, and what a stunt this proved to be. They started to line up at the box office on the date set for the shooting, and then the fun began. The kids made faces; the movie-struck ran the gamut of human emotions, their faces registering the equivalent of joy, sorrow, love, passion, heartache and the rest of the expressions that might make Greta Garbo what she is today. The local sheiks registered pathos, profiles, and other movie expressions (some of them). The matronly ladies attempted to conform to the accepted Belle Bennett standards and the men to the approved Lewis Stone, man about town characterization.

A week later the pictures were shown and Murphy got in his follow-up plug. Every one who had figured in the previous week's shooting was on hand and the unreeling began. Many hopes were blasted. Pathos as registered by the local sheiks was found to bear a striking resemblance to a cow gazing blankly at a brick wall and not knowing which way to turn. Love registered in the Clara Bow fashion by the flappers and flapperettes looked suspiciously like some one who had just had lip contact with a lemon. But despite all of these little tricks of the camera, it was found that a good time was had by all because the theatre resounded with the hilarious laughter of the audience, and, as a result of this, Murphy found that he had secured some good-will for his house that would come in handy.

This angle of Murphy's is something that it will pay you to look into further. It wouldn't cost much to grab yourself a roll of film and a camera and pull a gag of this sort. Give it a little thought and perhaps you can find some slants to it that will help you put it over at your house. We want to thank Murphy for this and to let him know that we expect to hear more of his work. So how about it, William? You know that the rest of your fellow managers on the Publix Circuit's New England Division are represented on our pages a good deal and we feel that you, too, would like to let them know what you're doing, and what better medium can you find than the pages of the Managers' Round Table Club?

Some More Reasons Why Earle Holden Packs His House

Feeling that our members are always interested in knowing what Earle Holden is doing we decided to shoot these two accounts of his work at the Fairfax Theatre when he played "The Vagabond King" and "Honey" not so long ago.

In a stunt designed for purely publicity purposes, 100 merchants signed a petition asking him to get "The Vagabond King" for the Fairfax.

He was to go to Atlanta to see the advanced screening of the picture and the petition as well as letters and telegrams from various clubs and other organizations were sent to him at Atlanta. The idea of this stunt was to help assure Miami being one of the 25 American cities to be among the first to book the musical romance.

A particularly effective story was put in the papers about the number of extra ushers which had been employed to handle the large crowds anticipated the opening night. The advance story also told of plans for the premiere.

Arrangements were made with the Royal Scotch Highlanders Band to feature music from The Vagabond King one night in Royal Palm Park. After the numbers, it was announced that The Vagabond King would open at the Fairfax March 6th as well as other selling lines about the picture. And incidentally, this concert plus announcements went on the air over the local broadcasting station.

All leading orchestras of the city were furnished with orchestrations of Vagabond King music and they plugged this music and picture to the nth degree. Many of these orchestras broadcast so the tie-up became that much more valuable.

Countless other mediums were also used to give this picture a most thorough campaign that reacted at the box office in increased receipts.

On "Honey" he effected a tie-up with a local confectioner that proved a good box office gag.

The confectioner put out sample candies in an envelope which carried the following copy, "Have you a sweet tooth? Then taste this tempting Honey Chip! And for 'Sweets' that delight the eye and soothe the ear, see and hear Nancy Carroll in HONEY—Fairfax Theatre, Week beginning Friday, March 21st."

At the bottom of the envelope was copy relative to the confectioner, etc.

Two thousand of these envelopes filled with sample candies were effectively distributed on the streets, in stores and at the theatre.

The confectioner also had a co-operative window display with the majority of space being devoted to the exhibit of stills, art cards and other advertising material about the picture.

Oak Earle, we know that your fellow members want to be wised up on what the rest of the Club members are doing so keep up the good work.

C. DOCTOR Says:

"As a new member I wish you to know how much I appreciate the pages of the ROUND TABLE CLUB. We probably all slip at times for lack of ideas on exploitation and these stunts sure keep one pepped up. My respects to the managers who are interested enough in the other fellow to send in their experiences".

Patrons Caught Fish And Then Bert Caught Them

Here's a couple of ideas that will pay you a profit to look into. They have all that is needed to pep up interest in a picture and when you figure the added interest that their novelty attracts, is it any wonder that they click? These two stunts were used by Bert Bickert, manager of the Palace Theatre in Marion, Ohio and formed part of his campaign on "The Big Pond" and Paramount on Parade."

He obtained a watering tank that was 4 feet wide and 8 feet long. This was surrounded with artificial grass, filled with water and then placed twenty artificial fish in the tank. Each patron was permitted to fish once. And since one of the 20 fish was marked, any person getting this particular fish on his or her hook was permitted to see the picture without cost. A card on an easel alongside the tank read: "Free Tickets to see and hear Maurice Chevalier in THE BIG POND—Tues., Wed., Thurs.—if you catch the lucky fish you get a free ticket. —Try Your Luck! No Charge!" The tank was on exhibition for five days in advance of picture and not only afforded much amusement among the patrons but was an excellent plug for the picture.

The other photo shows the stunt he arranged with a group of boys whereby they would stage a parade about the city streets. 22 signs—each carrying the name of one of the stars appearing in the picture were carried by the boys in the parade. Two other signs were also carried in the parade; one reading, "Paramount on Parade" and the other, "Palace—Now Showing." The signs supported by a two-foot piece of wood made an unusual sight as the boys marched through the principal business section as well as visiting other places where there were crowds of people.

And when the residents saw the strange cavalcade they all halted until they spelled out the name that the boys were carrying thus proving what Bickert has always maintained "get them looking, then they'll talk; after that selling is easy."

Plugging Songs Is A Cinch If Done Fulton's Way

In all of the accounts we have presented of the work being turned out by R. K. Fulton, manager of the Broadway Theatre in Council Bluffs, Ia., we guess you have noticed the completness of his campaigns, and this campaign that he turned out on "Honey" is just as sweet as the rest of them.

He tied up with a local merchant, who donated a $50 Nancy Carroll hope chest that we are showing in the photo, in addition to having a full co-operative window display, running special newspaper ads and paying a half share of the cost of the special heralds and the exchange heralds.

The main idea of the contest was to find the girl who could sing the song, "In My Little Hope Chest," the best. Judging was to be entirely by audience applause. The contestants were given specific nights to sing during the week in advance of the opening night of picture. One girl was adjudged winner of each night's contest and she was to appear in the final contest on Sunday night—the opening day of picture.

The preliminary contests during the week not only plugged the Sunday opening, but also built up the week days' business inasmuch as each contestant was urged to get all of her friends to come and cheer for her. Each contestant made a canvass of the city to get all her friends present on the night she took part in the preliminaries.

"A CALENDAR SUGGESTION"

Our "Showman's Calendar," an idea which originated with the Club, has been received in many and sundry ways throughout the world. One of the best gags called to our attention in connection with this manager's aid, was the filing of the "calendar" box each week. This is then used as ready reference guide for both the present and the future and in the next year or two will act as a sort of advance reminder even ahead of our own regular announcement.

Do not underrate the value of the "Showman's Calendar." On the contrary you should be taking advantage of it each and every week. In order to give you this service the Club had to prepare months in advance for its publication. Libraries were combed for information, almanacs were referred to and the Club corresponded with over forty-five organizations and others so as to insure the accuracy of the information we convey.

We felt that the innovation was worth while and the fact that this has been copied in so many different quarters makes us more than certain that our efforts have not been in vain.

M. R. T. C.

The local newspaper gave 100% co-operation; the theatre receiving advance stories on the contest besides stories announcing each day's winner and the final winner.

The contest was also plugged over the local radio station for a week in advance as well as mentioning that the girl winner would sing over the radio.

To help make a thorough job of the publicity angle of the picture, Fulton tied up with seven music stores, each of them devoting a full window on the song hits, "In My Little Hope Chest," "Sing, You Sinners," and "Let's Be Domestic."

A tie-up with Liberty Magazine distributor resulted in each boy salesman carrying a card on his bag inscribed "Honey." Each one of these boys also distributed a herald to their customers as well as seeing that every newsdealer was provided with a window card on the attraction. In return for their efforts, the boys were admitted to the theatre free to see the picture.

So completely was the campaign covered that the residents of the city were talking about the various stunts a couple of days after the picture was finished and by this time Fulton had already gotten his new campaign under way, and recorded the various stunts down to send to the Club. Right, "R. K."?

An Ice-Cake Tie-Up!

Tie-up with you local ice company and arrange to have them freeze a picture of your house in a cake of clear ice and some "cool signs" in the middle of a cake of clear ice. Lay out your copy and the picture of the theatre in such a manner that it will be bound to attract the eye.

The cake of ice should be placed in the window of the leading restaurants, drug stores and other places. As an inducement to promote interest in the display offer free tickets to the person guessing nearest correctly the length of time it would take the ice to melt. This stunt is a great ballyhoo for any house and the ice company will be more than glad to cooperate with you due to the fact that it serves them as a weapon to combat electrical refrigeration influences.

Work along this line for a little while and we think that you will work out a number of excellent angles to help boost your business and at the same time keep your good-will stock boosted up.

"I'se Regusted" Gave Howe Chance To Pull Fine Gag

Here's another showman with an "original" complex and a sense of humor in the person of Walton B. Howe, manager of the Gorman Theatre in Framingham, Mass.

With a marathon race acting as opposition to his matinee business on "The Girl Said No," he decided to at least get something out of it and he started plotting.

To cash in on some valuable publicity with crowds lining the streets and everybody more or less talking about the marathon race, he picked his own representative to do a bit of marathoning for him.

He engaged the services of a young man who had all the appearances of a runner. This fellow was clad in a regulation running suit and carried a canvas sign on his front and back; copy reading, "I'M DISGUSTED—THE GIRL SAID NO AT THE GORMAN THEATRE."

The theatre's marathoner cavorted about town and presented himself wherever the crowds were thickest. Considerable comment was heard about this stunt for the young lad gave the appearance of a much-disappointed lover running away from town because "The Girl Said No."

And look at this account of how he cashed in on the Amos 'N' Andy craze. He secured a dummy and dressed it up to resemble a human being. The dummy was placed on the roof of the theatre at an elevation of twenty-five feet with a sign proclaiming the famous words heard round the world via the NBC network, "I'SE REGUSTED." To these he affixed "THE GIRL SAID NO." At night a spot was played upon the effigy and for a week it had the whole town laughing.

Listen, Mr. Howe, with so many of your fellow managers in the Publix houses in Mass. we know that you want them to be kept posted on the things you're doing to sell your shows and what better medium have you than the Club pages? So why not start boosting the Gorman here via your stunts?

M. D. Cohen Went After High B. O. On "Young Eagles"

As far as flying high goes, M. D. Cohen, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Denver, Colo., certainly hit the sky with his exploitation campaign on "Young Eagles" when he tied up almost every medium with which he could plug his picture, to the best possible results.

A tie-up with the Curtiss-Wright Flying Service gave the theatre the following publicity shots without cost:

(a) A plane flew over the city dropping lucky number heralds good for free tickets to see the picture.

(b) A 30-foot Gypsy Moth plane was mounted on a truck and trailer and hauled through the city over a selected route for two days prior to opening of picture. This plane carried banners telling that the print of "Young Eagles" was being brought to the Rialto by air.

(c) Pictures were taken at the airport showing the plane landing and the pilot handing over a can of film to one of the theatre's staff. This shot was made up as a trailer and used on the Publix-Denver theatre screen during the week of picture's showing at the Rialto.

A free show was arranged for the members of the Denver Post "Just Kids Club" on Saturday. This got three days of advance stories. In addition to the free show a contest was set with the Post whereby Buddy Rogers through a wire offered prizes for the best letters from the kids on an aviation subject. This contest carried through the week of the showing and gave the theatre daily publicity on the picture.

A stunt outside designated as a "Hollywood Voice Test" got a world of attention. A radio speaker was hooked up in connection with a Kennedy Radio permitted a microphone pick-up. On one side of the lobby the microphone invited any one to try their "Talking Picture Voice" and have a friend listen in over the radio opposite. Hundreds tried the trick and got a big kick out of it. Stills from the picture and test announcement on the outfit gave the theatre the plug on the current showing.

Regular radio publicity was effected in addition to the playing of the new Rogers Columbia record with theatre plugs being given.

Having so much to his credit in the way of merchandising, Cohen boomed business to a new high as was easily seen when the lines began to form a half hour or so before opening time. Cohen is one of those showmen who seems to be consistent in busting records either for business or merchandising, and as he is one of our active members, we'll have more of his work to pass along in the very near future. And we're sure "M. D." agrees with us.

Bucholtz Found It Necessary To Tell Town About Star

When a Broadway star enters into the moving pictures it is sometimes necessary to inform your patrons who she is; especially if those patrons are not much interested in learning about the Great White Way's inimitable products, preferring instead to read their local news and lay off the Broadway columns which are syndicated in almost every paper in the country. So when Paul Bucholtz, manager of the Grand Theatre in Mankata, Minn., played "Roadhouse Nights" and decided to feature Helen Morgan, he had a job on his hands to introduce her to the town.

First he sold the idea to eleven merchants who paid for their pro-rata share on a co-operative page. Each merchant was given a "call" letter—the letters when placed correctly together would spell out the name of Helen Morgan. To get the proper "call" letter for each ad, it was necessary for each participant in the contest to visit each store and ask the merchant what his "call" letter was. Having done this, then you were to put the "call" letters in the little square space in each merchant's ad on the co-operative page.

Having filled in all the squares with the proper "call" letters it was then necessary to figure out the proper placing of these letters so that it would correctly spell out the name of Helen Morgan. Having arrived at the result, then it was necessary to print the name of the star at the bottom of the co-operative page together with name and address and bring or mail the page to the "Roadhouse Nights" Star Contest Editor of the Free Press. To the persons submitting the first 25 nearest correct solutions, the Grand Theatre gave one free ticket each to see and hear "Roadhouse Nights."

The stunt created a lot of interest in the picture and as a consequence the star was given a break that helped a lot towards setting her for future bookings.

Charles Copperman Promoted Tie-Ups Of Mutual Value

Another showman who seems to be a past master in the art of tie-ups is Charles B. (Chuck) Copperman, manager of the Ohio Theatre in Warren, Ohio.

Everytime we pass along accounts of Chuck's activities we find that he has sewed up a number of local merchants and either promoted window space, space in their ads, or secured a lot of merchandise for free distribution. He was at it again when he played "The Big Party," for he tied-up with a local jeweler and promoted more things.

Through the jeweler's co-operation, Chuck made up a special herald in the form of an invitation to the "Big Party" which plugged both the theatre and the jewelry shop. An angle that secured a lot of good-will for both the merchant and the theatre was the presentation with every ticket purchased, of a gift certificate that entitled the bearer to a dollar's worth of merchandise, free with every sale of a dollar or more. Notice of this gift was also put in the special heralds and served to pep up interest considerably.

As a result of these moves the picture was put over to increased business and it is interesting to note that the trade at the jewelry shop also picked up. Chuck's tie-up again proves that when you handle a thing right almost any merchant will be glad to co-operate with you because of the fact that the tie-up is of mutual advantage. This little idea is just one of the things that Chuck is always pulling out there in Warren and as this showman is one of our very active members, we know that more of his work will be forthcoming shortly.

Co-Operation Of Local Newspaper Was Boon To Helbig

Some very showmanlike work was exhibited recently by Dave Helbig, manager of the Woodlawn Theatre in Cheviot, Ohio, when he executed his campaign for "The Love Parade."

Through a tie-up with his local radio dealer he secured a set to be given away at the theatre. Every patron entering the house was presented with a coupon entitling him to participate in a drawing for the radio. The coupon left a blank for name and address in order that Dave could place new names on his mailing list.

In conjunction with the radio dealer a full page ad announcing the set to be given away and plugging in the picture by use of appropriate copy was inserted in the local newspaper. The ad was well made up and besides carrying a picture of the set also carried a cut of the star of the film.

To secure additional publicity Dave tied up with the local paper and promoted an agreement whereby the paper agreed to print and distribute a number of heralds for him on the contest. All Dave had to do to secure the heralds free was to permit the use of a credit line for the newspaper. Since the paper had carried the ad, they placed a catchline, "As advertised in the Western Hills Press" on the top of the herald. And there's an angle it would pay to look into. You may want to run a very fine ad in your local newspaper and perhaps if you make them a proposition similar to the above you can let your house in for a load of free publicity.

The radio give-away went over to great success and since we know that Dave is quite capable of turning out good work, it's really not more than we would expect. We're glad to see he's continuing his activity and we hope to hear from him again in the near future.

Some Good Pointers

From CARL M. OSBORNE (Lima, Ohio)

One thing that interested me greatly in the Round Table section was your inquiry regarding specific difficulties overcome in the pursuit of free publicity. When I first came to Lima the newspapers were absolutely hard-boiled as far as giving anything except space in their paper, for which they charged plenty. I have overcome this condition to a great extent by trying to show the newspaper that I practice, as well as talk about, cooperation; by giving them a break on news stories which not only referred to theatre matters but in other things which I picked up; and also by being everlastingly "with them," and cultivating the friendship of the city and managing editors.

Managers who have trouble in securing the cooperation of their newspapers will do well to study the problems of the newspaper. There are things which a newspaper can do, if they wish, and there are other things which it is almost impossible for them to do. Therefore, it behooves the theatre manager to be careful of what he asks of the newspaper and when he is refused, take the refusal in good grace and try again the next time. I have been fortunate in having had newspaper experience before entering the theatre game. Therefore, I know just how far over the line a newspaper can go in the spirit of cooperation.

Another question which seemed to be troubling the managers of the Round Table Club was that of securing the cooperation of the merchants. In all cases where the theatre asks cooperation it will stand the manager in good stead to study his situation before he asks for consideration and possibly look up the exact definition of the word "cooperation" as Webster gives it. Too many managers ask but do not have anything to give to the merchant in return. Or, at least they do not know their situation well enough to show the merchant where they are giving a return for the window space or other help which they are asking from the merchant. One of the best arguments the theatre can use in securing window space or store space for theatre display is to bring home to the merchant the fact that the theatre is the only business selling a commodity—entertainment—which cannot be purchased by mail. Entertainment ranks with food and shelter in most people's lives. It is necessary for anyone patronizing the theatre to pass by the windows of the merchant. Therefore, the manager of the theatre should calculate the approximate number of admissions per week and the proportion of these that go by the individual storekeeper's place of business, and he will have an argument as to whether the theatre should be encouraged or not. Further argument to advance to the merchant is the fact that people being interested in all things related to the motion picture industry, are attracted to the merchandise in his windows by interesting theatrical displays. As a proof of this interest, the manager can quote the immense sale of fan motion picture magazines, which runs into the millions of copies per month.

Chicago—A week that opened nicely in all Loop houses was ruined by three days of scorching heat, closely followed by a cold rain finale.

"All Quiet on the Western Front" appeared to be least affected by the weather, despite a $6,000 drop from the preceding week's gross. The picture was still at $35,600 (170%). [illegible] weather break [illegible]

Continued heavy take by "All Quiet," and fairly healthy grosses by the Capitol, with "Florodora Girl," the Paramount playing "Safety in Numbers," and Roxy's Will Rogers film, "So This Is London," were the highlights of theatre activities along New York's main stem.

Loew's Warfield, with its third week of "All Quiet on the Western Front," did another big week's business, the largest ever reported for a third week here, taking $38,000 with a rating of 150%. Ottawa—A hot spell administered a sock to box offices here during the week, although a couple of showers gave receipts a momentary boost. Not one film attraction attained business par for the week. Exhibitors themselves admitted that business was slow but more or less expected it on account of the humidity.

San Francisco—Stage presentations in picture houses are doing a come-back, drawing a larger attendance at the Paramount than pictures. The Embassy is scheduled to offer presentations for the first time beginning June 25.

The week in San Francisco has been a very poor one, with but two theatres doing good business. The Casino had a rating of 135% and gross receipts of $12,500. DON ALLEN, Photoplay Editor of the Davenport, Ia., Democrat:

"The 1930 copy of your MOTION PICTURE NEWS BLUE BOOK is at hand, and after an initial perusal it is easy to say that the book will prove as valuable as its predecessors. And that's saying something."

E. C. LUEDKE, President The Maywood, Ill., Daily News:

"Thanks for the copy of the 1930 MOTION PICTURE NEWS BLUE BOOK mailed to our editor, Mr. Noel . . . it is a splendid work and will aid us in building up our film world news. We wonder if we could prevail on you to send us another copy for our library, as the copy to the editor is considered his personal property?"

"I consider the 1930 EDITION OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS BLUE BOOK the most complete and valuable compilation that has come to my desk in many years. An invaluable aid to any motion picture editor and one which he will find it difficult to get along without."

981 theatres have replaced unsatisfactory sound equipment with . . . Western Electric!

W*hy?* Because of loss of business due to poor reproduction . . . lack of proper servicing . . . program interruptions.

The insistent public demand for quality sound reproduction led these 981 theatres to change their equipment.

It's profitable to install Western Electric in the first place—it costs less in the long run.

Inside Talk Again of Pathe to R-K-O As Industry Divides Into Two Camps

In Conference

Hollywood—A well known comic on a well known lot occupies an office close enough to executive headquarters to hear all that goes on when the windows are open.

"I see all the men and women go in and hear all of the conversations, too. The men all say 'yes,' and the women, 'no.'"

Bankers at It Again, but Public Indifference to Stocks May Kill Move

Pathe to R-K-O?

The financial checkerboard this week indicated that this amalgamation, discussed at least twice in the last six months and as often dropped, now has a strong chance of becoming fact.

Through Lehman Brothers, R-K-O bankers, and Elisha Walker of Bancamerica-Blair Company, Pathe bankers, it is understood the stock structure can be set up, but one of the snares that is causing trouble is the slow-motion rapidity with which the investing public today is gobbling new issues. Some speculation apparently exists as to whether or not a new stock flotation which an amalgamation such as this would call for could be sold in view of market conditions. The uncertainty may prove sufficient to again block any deal.

The Two-Company Swing

The drift of the industry toward two large companies would be further intensified by a Pathe-R-K-O affiliation. On one side of the fence are Paramount, now playing ball heavily with Fox. That, in turn, ties in M-G-M and Loew's. United Artists is affiliated with Paramount through a franchise with Publix theatres. A U. A.-Paramount merger, as reported exclusively in Motion Picture News last week, continues a live possibility.

The Paramount-Fox booking deal, which may be the prelude to closer business relations, immediately resulted in a product tie-up between Warners and R-K-O. Columbia is thrown into the Radio camp via a booking contract, with actual purchase reported if the first six pictures on Columbia's 1930-1931 program come through.

Pathe associated with Radio is, therefore, considered by observers to be a logical step. This would then leave Universal and Tiffany on the outside.

It's Dynamite!

There's something brewing in the laboratory field—and it's not beer, either, although it will have a kick as potent as pre-war malt-and-hop juice, taking certain big interests by complete surprise and knocking 'em right off their pins.

The fuse is now being adjusted to the gunpowder, and when the match is lit, watch the fireworks.

Do Warners Own Harris Circuit? They Don't Know

If Warners are the owners of the 25 Harris theatres, it's being kept a very dark secret, because no one in that organization could answer "yes" or "no" to the question asked by a Motion Picture News reporter: "Do Warner Brothers own the Harris circuit in Pennsylvania?"

The query was prompted when it was learned that Warners are still trying to strike a bargain with "Denny" Harris for control of the string, despite the fact that Warners officially told the wide world, more than two months ago, that they had purchased the chain. What they forgot to mention, however, was the fact that the deal stipulated all cash—and plenty of it. Now Warners may lose out entirely, if they don't lay it on the line in a hurry.

The chain operates 25 houses in Pennsylvania, Delaware and Ohio and was one of the few remaining important independent strings to sell out.

Spyros Skouras, Warner theatre operating chief, is unavailable for a statement concerning the Harris mixup. He is out of town.

Janet Gaynor Is Contrite; Awaits Sheehan Pardon

Hollywood—Being off the regular weekly payroll since the middle of March, inside reports have it that Janet Gaynor is more than willing to return to Fox and to take any assignments that the executives decide are best for her talents.

Winfield Sheehan, now on the coast, apparently knows that Miss Gaynor is anxious to "kiss and make up" so that a new start can be made. But Sheehan is said to feel "spanky" before she returns to the or-

Hanson Quitting? Exaggeration, He Says; Here's Dope

Grant L. Cook, vice-president of Tiffany, says the report is silly. Oscar Hanson, general sales manager, declares his retirement is something like the well-known story of Mark Twain's death. Yet——

Motion Picture News learns that Cook will shortly return to Detroit, his home town, in connection with activities not concerned with Tiffany; that Hanson will be succeeded by Phil Meyer, at present New York manager for the company.

Cook says he goes to Detroit every weekend; that there's nothing new in that. Hanson insists his hatrack at Tiffany is his—all his.

New "U" Policy Gives Lupe Only $20,000 a Film

Hollywood—Although holding option on services of Lupe Velez for a five-year term contract with annual options and salary for first year of $2,500 weekly, Universal made a new deal with the player for a five-year optional agreement calling for appearance in four productions yearly at a flat sum per picture.

Under terms of the contract, Miss Velez receives $20,000 per picture from Universal, and is entitled to appear in productions for other first line companies when the outside engagements do not interfere with her

SACKCLOTH AND ASHES

THE big producer-distributors are calling in their scouts. The mad game of acquiring theatres is in the ninth inning and the score is against them. A lot of naughts in crimson tell the story. The unaffiliated exhibitor is discovering that he has not forgotten how to laugh.

The swivel-chair moguls in the home offices have found out that it is easier to buy theatres than to run them at a profit. They set a Napoleonic figure as their goal in theatre holdings on the theory that they had to have outlets for their product. But when their own pictures failed to show a profit in their own theatres they began to get slivers in their fingers from scratching their heads.

At some point along the path of mental travail that ensued they acquired a respect for the independent exhibitor who had originally supplied the lucre that enabled them to buy him out—or freeze him out. He had been able to make money despite costs that mounted yearly. The automatons they dispatched to manage their new theatres didn't seem to know the trick. Hence the grief.

The deluge of publicity from big concerns relating their current acquisitions now has suddenly stopped. The first inkling of this reversal of policy came at the sales conventions when the big boys began to express concern for the welfare of the "little fellow." It was the theme song of every confab. Now they're beginning to unload and to pat the "little fellow" on the back some more.

This is not fiction, but the punch climax is this: The sales chief of one of the big companies admitted only this week that he expects to do $14,000,000 worth of business with the independents next year.

A New Deal

AND the "little fellow" has another laugh coming. For years he's been taking his pictures when the first runs let him have them. The circuits set arbitrary protection schedules that were so utterly unfair that they are now donning the sackcloth and ashes. But the repentance was not entirely an involuntary change of heart. The Government became somewhat inquisitive about the scheme of things in Southern California and the big shots suddenly discovered that they hadn't been treating their lessers properly. So they hurriedly got together and framed a new protection schedule that has satisfied practically everybody.

The procedure is being repeated in other sections. The independents hereafter will be able to play a picture before the public has forgotten it.

Signs of sanity.

The Funny Public

LOOKING like a summer natural with its icy title, "With Byrd at the South Pole" went into the Rialto here in New York three weeks ago with an unprecedented blare of publicity and the fond expectations of the Paramount higher-ups that its run would be both long and profitable.

Wednesday night it was pulled and the aforesaid officials wept tears of red ink. The public shunned the picture with a vengeance and the intake was described as "way below average." Whereas Gloria Swanson, for instance, had lured them in to the tune of $60,000 weekly, the highest daily gross of the polar film during its brief run was $5,500.

Audiences Without Flappers

THE flappers are credited with doing the damage. The audiences were composed of the very young and the middle-aged, but the callow youth of the metropolis was conspicuous by its absence. The picture contained no "sex angles," and thus again the reforming profession, clamoring for "clean pictures," was confounded.

A tremendous campaign was put behind the film. Byrd's arrival in town on the day of the opening—carefully planned to benefit the picture, the story has it—was looked upon as a sure-fire draw, but the picture, nevertheless, opened slowly. Nine hundred women's clubs in the metropolitan area and 33,000 Boy Scouts were contacted; Byrd appeared in newsreels; the Hays organization did what it could; the radio was used; approximately 17,000 lines of free publicity were garnered. Some people saw the picture two and three times.

Figure it out for yourself. Perhaps the public does prefer jazz and sex to this type of film, which won the unanimous acclaim of all critics. Perhaps the fact that Byrd appeared in many public places and faced so many cameras and microphones provided an invidious comparison with the self-effacing Lindy.

It's a mysterious business and a far more mysterious public. The conclusion you draw may be anything you like. To us it's as discouraging a sign for the future of better and different motion pictures as we have struck in years.

KANN

Warners Line Up 60 Chicago Houses; Tomahawking for Paramount's Scalp

Bottomless?

Chicago—It may be a legend, but a lot of exhibitors in this territory have themselves believing the Warner bankroll is "bottomless."

In negotiations, closed and pending, for theatres in Chicago, Warner representatives have quieted all talk of "we'll think it over" with "name your price for cash."

That's language any exhibitor can understand.

Walsh's Salary Doubled; Gets 5 Year Fox Pact

Hollywood—After Winfield Sheehan had spent three days on location near Moran, Wyo., watching progress on Raoul Walsh's current $1,300,000 special, "The Big Trail," he talked over a new term contract with the director and finally departed with one covering a period of five years.

Under terms of the agreement, according to report, Walsh gets the largest salary paid to a director in the industry—whether pay checks come from Fox or any other companies. Unconfirmed reports state Walsh's new agreement provides him with a hundred per cent raise in salary during the first year of the contract, with graduated scale upward for the succeeding four years.

Sheehan's successful negotiations with Walsh, which finally resulted in both parties getting together for a new contract were indicated exclusively by Motion Picture News several months ago, after various reports stated at that time that Walsh would leave the Fox fold on expiration of his present agreement in October.

Marie Lubin Sues Herbert; Says He Was Cruel to Her

Hollywood—After six years of married life, Marie Lubin has filed suit for divorce, charging her husband, Herbert, with beatings and attempts to defraud her. Mrs. Lubin seeks $4,500 a month alimony and $21,000 in attorney fees. She claims Lubin spirited her two sons, one aged two and the other five, out of the state and demands their custody.

Lubin was the promoter of the Roxy in New York, later selling out to William Fox.

Paramount in Small Ohio Towns, Cincy Report Says

Cincinnati—What is construed here as indicative of Paramount's intention of invading smaller Ohio towns is seen in the move to erect a theatre in Fremont. One of our parcels of land has been acquired as a site for a prospective house.

Overlooking No Bets—Every Publix Town in Windy City Area on List

Chicago—Working almost entirely under cover, the Warners are girding themselves for a bitter battle with Publix. Scouts for the brothers have lined up and are shortly expected to take over about 60 theatres in Chicago and surrounding territory.

Actually and in the open, the first independent theatre acquisition is the Shore at 75th and Kingston Streets on the South Side, which was purchased from Neil Dougherty, president of the building corporation which owned the structure.

Bloom Brothers formerly operated the Shore. The house, which seats 1,400, is an important addition to the South Side chain comprising the former Federal Theatres and Coston houses, recently acquired by Warners. Further Indie buys in other sections of the city are in prospect, according to a report substantiated by the recent presence in the city of representatives of Spyros Skouras and the departure (Monday) of Jimmy Coston, Warners' Chicago theatre head, for New York presumably to recommend Indie houses here for Warner acquisition.

Eyeing All Publix Towns

Hammond, Indiana Harbor and East Chicago are three spots which have been given particular attention, but no Publix towns are to be overlooked.

These various moves are taken for granted here as definite indicators that Warners are out to break down Paramount's powerful grip in the Chicago and Illinois territories.

Those who know the bulldog persistence with which the Katz theatre organization can fight back expect to see what is fast developing into a hectic situation reach the boiling point soon.

Mysterious "John D."

John D. Rockefeller is understood to be spending considerable of his vast wealth in an attempt to discover the walls of the first theatre built in the United States. What the oil magnate intends to do with them after unearthing the ruins is problematical. It may be that he has a theatre museum in mind for that $250,000,000 amusement center planned for New York's midtown sector.

Six brick foundations were discovered, but all proved to be the unreal thing, there having been no indication of the materials being original.

Exhibs are hereby warned not to chase away prowlers in the night who are found picking the mortar from their theatre walls. There may be gold in them thar bricks.

What's Up?

There's considerable speculation in amusement circles over RCA-Victor's announcement that it will add 7,000 workers to the payrolls. This action is taken by many observers to suggest that considerable increase in activity in radio might develop this fall, particularly since arrangements were made for RCA-Victor to manufacture for Radio Corp., Westinghouse Electric and General Electric.

Those Semi-Nude Dames Get Blame For Chi Slump

Chicago—The "street competition" introduced by torrid, mid-summer temperatures appears to be the newest worry of those Chicago managers whose theatres depend, in large, for their draw on flesh shows.

The long skirt fad breathed its last here when Loop thermometers reached 80 degrees. The moth balls rolled out of last year's knee length dresses at that time and, as the mercury continued to mount, so did the hem-line. When the 90-degree mark was reached the temperature reading of the male loop hound coincided, for by that time matron and flapper alike had discarded most of the accessories whose principal utility is concealment.

"Look," croaked a loop theatre manager the other day, "you can't get a man into a theatre on the strength of a flesh draw 'cause he's afraid he'll miss a better show if he gets off the street. Why, if we were to—"

His voice trailed off into nothingness as he turned to follow with an avid stare a neat little brunette who passed, stockingless and disturbingly gowned in a few, close-fitting yards of white silk. She disappeared within a nearby office building.

Getting an Eyeful

"What was I saying?" the showman resumed. "Oh, why, if we were to dress our show girls like your respectable ladies dress for the street we'd be in court before sunset. Yes, sir. I'm telling you!" He paused. It was another brunette; stockingless, also, and free, too, of anything that might have served for a brassiere. He turned back with a grin and continued.

"I'm telling you, it ain't the heat that keeps them out of the theatres in the summer. No, sir. It's nothin' but the street competition, an' I don't mean 'maybe'."

His gaze wandered to the other side of the street where, coming toward us with a penetrating mid-afternoon sun at her back, leisurely strolled a tall, slender blonde. It

The Insiders' Outlook

SOCIAL note and perhaps something more:

Adolph Zukor and Joe Schenck are slated to week-end at Nick Schenck's place on Long Island.

They may be expected to talk about this and that and, who knows but that a rather important piece of business involving United Artists and Paramount will enter the discussions.

The two companies may finally throw their individual hats into a collective ring. Or they may not. But, if you are interested in tying U.A. into the merger picture which is filling the industry's screen these days, remember that Art Cinema, which finances the Schenck productions and some others that go through the United machinery, owes Mr. Zukor's company $3,000,000. It doesn't take much imagination to dope out where Schenck will go for advice on how his company fits into the two-camp division in which this business is rapidly falling, does it?

Say Not So

Over the wires from the coast comes a complete denial from Mary and Doug. Empeenews' merger yarn of last week is untrue throughout, a representative for Mary pointed out.

Her relations with Schenck are most cordial, she avers and vouchsafes there are no two closer business friends in the industry. Further, he queries:

"If there was any trouble over policy isn't it logical to assume that Fairbanks would not agree to go into 'Reaching for the Moon' as a favor to Schenck?"

There you have that. From U.A. in New York, nothing but a dead silence.

Down on the Farm

Every year following the Fourth of July holiday, Zukor spends a week on his farm at New City. This year, according to schedule.

Because he hasn't been seen around the town in the last few days, reports have been piling up that he is prepared to retire, content himself with an ex-officio chairmanship of the board and permit Paramount to pass to other hands.

Not so, The Insiders are assured. Nothing could be further from the truth. There you have a confidential retort to the rumor-spreaders.

But—and this comes from downtown where sit the men who control this business—wouldn't Zukor sell if he could make the deal he wanted, one that would preserve intact the prestige of Paramount and, at the same time, take full care of the trusty aides who helped build the structure? In the same breath, the answer comes: "He would."

Why then the delay? It seems that last fall the grandest tumble in history got under way. Before it landed at the far end of the toboggan, the good old American public turned so completely sour on stocks and ticker tapes that today, eight months after the festival, that public is still bilious.

Investors are trying no end to get their systems adjusted. That, in turn, makes stock issues hard to sell. And without stock issues, who is going to absorb the purchase price of company acquisitions?

Riddles

WHAT national circuit, operating in a city near New York, is losing $75,000 a week with two theatres in the town shut down tight?

What circuit—another one this time—will show the worst quarter in all of its history when figures for April, May and June are made public?

Incidentally, this Insider slid off his base last week. In this very spot, too.

He was talking about a chain—still another—that had lost $480,000 in one week. What he meant to report was that receipts had dropped that amount over the previous seven-day period. There was still a profit. Sorry.

The Legal Way

Big company making big profits. Hot after theatres. Gobbling them everywhere. So fast, the head of this outfit didn't quite know himself how many his scouts were annexing.

But now the picture changes. Announced deals are not going through. A whisper here and there that the promised cash is not forthcoming as plentifully as the sales arguments used at the outset had indicated. Money is tight these days and millions can't be bandied about like nickels.

This organization is learning that and, in its recently acquired infinite wisdom, is now checking when the proper time to apply the brakes has long since passed.

The stakes are being pulled up wherever possible. And in a hurry. Even a paltry trick like insisting that the legal department unearth as many as ninety objections on a solitary theatre in order to break down the seller's resistance sufficiently to have him cry quits.

There's a real front page story in the making. Concerns a prominent Hollywoodite who is casting about for the divorce that will permit him to marry a prominent English society woman.

This chap's wife, likewise a w.k. Hollywoodite, adds a semblance of mutuality to the proceedings by moving for a divorce on her own.

This will smash into headlines if it ever breaks.

Hysterical Showmanship

The legitimate has been through another sickening season, with the usual exception of plays whose ingredients contained liberal portions of brains.

Two-a-day vaudeville has but one home in the length and breadth of this country, and it's dying out in part-time houses with heart-rending groans.

Every theatre situated on gay Broadway, with the exception of one, now closed for the summer, houses motion pictures.

Mix those facts together and you have the theme for a sermon that certain reputed showmen in this business should hearken to.

Hit by a slump which could easily be explained by hot weather or attributed to the stock market collapse, these heavy thinkers came to the hysterical conclusion that the public wanted to see flesh on the stage. They did not stop to consider that, if it did, it could find it on the vaudeville stage and legitimate stage. So they plunged.

Reports are coming in from all over the country. Stage shows aren't clicking. The showmen are puzzled. They're spending time worrying that they could profitably devote to doing some constructive thinking, if that were possible.

One company has been making frantic efforts to put over one of its Broadway showplaces. It is experimenting with masters of ceremonies, with name bands, with vaudeville acts. Only when a good picture comes along does the box-office smile. This Insider has often walked out on its stage shows.

Incidentally, this company makes dandy short subjects. But they're never seen in this Broadway house.

Here endeth the sermon.

Aim to Place New Standard Contract In Operation in Three to Four Weeks

The Tip Off

Reviewing scouts for Motion Picture News meandered into California by-lanes this week and unearthed the dope on the following:

"Whoopee," "The Little Accident," "Grumpy," "Oh! Sailor, Behave!" "Shooting Straight," "The Singer of Seville" and "For the Defense."

Also covered in this issue beginning on page 84:

"Last of the Duanes," "Man from Wyoming," "Inside the Lines," "Young Desire," "Hot Curves," "Love Among the Millionaires," "The Lone Rider," "Those Who Dance," "Lost Gods," "Song of the Caballeros."

Samuel's Private 'Whoopee' Review Is Not So Private

Hollywood—Sam Goldwyn, Florenz Ziegfeld and Eddie Cantor finally finished "Whoopee," Goldwyn's initial venture into the filmusical comedy field. The picture cost in the neighborhood of $1,500,000—enough money to make any producer, especially an independent, rather anxious.

Eddie Cantor decided to delay a vacation trip to Hawaii until he caught the picture in front of a preview audience. Finally the picture was readied for a tryout—with the utmost secrecy attached to the time and place.

In order to throw preview reviews, fan magazine representatives and not-wanted studio employees off the trail, someone in the Goldwyn organization let it be generally known that the picture was spotted for previewing in San Bernardino.

At noon, Goldwyn, Ziegfeld, Cantor and a select group took a special car to San Diego for the "Whoopee" preview, which was staged at the Fox Theatre in that city.

Sam Goldwyn received the shock of his life, however, when the lights went up just before the showing of the preview—and he discovered a reviewer of Motion Picture News sitting two rows in front of him!

Shhh! Harold Bares the Secret of Glassless Specs

Los Angeles—Parts of the $1,000,000 trial suit, now being heard against Harold Lloyd for alleged pilfering the plot and gags of "The Freshman" from a Witwer yarn, brought as many laughs in Federal Court chambers as any of Harold's funniest comedies.

Harold admitted that his horn-rimmed glasses are just his "trademark," much as Charlie Chaplin's funny feet were the latter's "brand." He told the court that his glasses were glassless—and when he did the illusions of Harold's legion of fans were probably shattered.

With Clauses Agreed Upon, Hess, Walker and Myers Will Draw Final Form

With distributors, Allied States Ass'n., and the M. P. T. O. A., in accord on the proposed new standard form of license agreement, plans for the ratification of the agreement by exhibitors are being speeded in an effort to get the contract into circulation in three to four weeks. The new agreement, as exclusively stated by Motion Picture News, is to be retroactive to cover all contracts on 1930-31 product.

Every exhibitor of the nation will be asked to use the new form of contract. Under the plan, the salesmen will make individual exhibitors acquainted with the terms of the new form of agreement, which is divided into a master form and short form. If the exhibitor elects to buy product under the new contract, he will automatically signify his acceptance and ratification of the agreement. Otherwise, he will be offered an individual company contract in each instance. These are the contracts now in use, and which have a wide variety of clauses.

Advantages to be Cited

In connection with the proposed contract, the advantages to the exhibitor using it will be cited. These include a voluntary arbitration system, a five per cent cancellation for theatres paying an average rental of $250 or less and protection on advertising of pictures by a subsequent run before or during a prior run, unless the subsequent run follows within 15 days. The various distributor contracts now in use have no cancellation charges, call for the exaction of deposits and contain a number of other features which are not embodied in the proposed standard agreement, which represents a number of concessions by distributors.

The sales managers of all national distributors met at the Union League Club Thursday to learn from S. R. Kent what had transpired at the Atlantic City conferences. Gabriel L. Hess, for the Hays association; Frank Walker, for the affiliated exhibitor, and Abram F. Myers, for Allied, will jointly whip the clauses into their final phraseology, after which the contract will be printed and placed in the hands of exhibitors and salesmen.

How They View Results

Myers asserts the main objectives of Allied were obtained with the exception of two points. One was the refusal of distributors to make any concessions on theatre expansion; the other, to take a stand on score charges.

Ninety-eight per cent of exhibitors of the nation must support the proposed new standard license agreement if it is to be successful, in the opinion of Kent, sponsor and chairman of the contract meetings, who is calling upon all branches of the industry to support the proposed agreement. The flood of messages received within a few hours after the meetings closed at Atlantic City, shows "the great satisfaction which

An Ambitious Scribe

One of New York's better known newshounds, who frequently covers picture stuff for his sheet, was asked by the chief to dig up the dirt on a yarn which had just broken. The chap was on his vacation, although the old town remained the center of his holiday excursions, and he gladly consented to halt festivities long enough to run down the assignment.

To carry out that old Spanish custom, however, he brought an oversized typewriter downtown in his car and, after getting the dope, pulled into a side street to write it rather than enter the office during vacation time.

Allied May Gun For W. B. and F. N. On Score Charges

Unwillingness of Warners and First National to entertain proposal for elimination of score charges is to be brought to the attention of all members of the Allied States Ass'n., Motion Pictures News exclusively learns. The entire personnel of the organization is to be circularized to acquaint members with the status of the situation.

Allied waged a fight for the elimination of score charges in the 5-5-5 conferences which ended last week. Its efforts to obliterate score charges were blocked by distributors, who contended the charges were a matter of individual company policy. In taking this stand, the distributor members of the contract committee were actuated largely by the attitude of Warners.

Most distributors have been cutting down on score charges, it was pointed out, with many feeling that the situation will soon adjust itself. However, the declared determination of Warners and First National to continue to exact the score charge is said to be muddling the situation.

Talmadge Divorce Yarn Persists, Though Denied

Hollywood—Stories filtering through from Paris insist that Norma Talmadge will institute divorce proceedings against Joseph M. Schenck. To counter this is a denial by Schenck that he and his wife are contemplating any such action.

"We are crazy about each other," he is quoted as saying.

Maxwell's Dream Of U. K. Films in America Fades

Another dream of British pictures invading the American market on wholesale scale has ended in the split between John Maxwell of British International Pictures and Sono Art-World Wide.

The Maxwell interest in World Wide, understood to be 50 per cent, has been taken over by Earle W. Hammons of Educational, the backer of the company, and the B. I. P. product definitely removed from the Sono Art-World Wide release list.

Differences in opinion over the relative merits of the British product and dissatisfaction on Maxwell's part over their financial return are the two reasons which led to the break. Now Maxwell has arranged with Harold Auten to handle 30 pictures in this market next season. Auten, distributor of "White Cargo," has been getting his outlet via state rights' exchanges.

Kans.-Mo. Exhibs Hit Upon Plan to Iron Out Troubles

Kansas City—A grievance committee of three will henceforth straighten out the difficulties of Kansas-Missouri M. P. T. O. members with distributors. If a theatre owner believes the exchange has violated a contract, he will present his case to the committee, which will take up the problem with the distributor.

The committee trio consists of John Staple, Rockport, Mo.; Lloyd Lenharz, Clinton, Mo.; Fred Meyn, Kansas City, Kans.

Dues for exhibitors owning one theatre in towns of 600 or less have been reduced to one-half per cent per capita by the association, which has voted to retain the former rate for circuits, that of one and one-half cents per capita in all towns. Owners in towns of less than 600 will pay a flat rate of one dollar per year, this low rate having been adopted to aid smaller houses and increase the association's membership.

Chicago Debacle Proves How Complex Job Is—Fearful of Gov't Action

Protection is beginning to streak some heads with gray.

Failure of the zoning committee in Chicago to work out a plan to meet the complex situation prevalent in Chicago and the territory served by exchanges in that city has brought home the realization to executives in New York that they have a problem on their hands which can not be settled overnight.

Via the Film Boards of Trade, zoning committees either have met or will meet shortly in about twenty key cities throughout the United States to revamp existing protection agreements. To date, southern California is the only territory where the situation has been satisfactorily worked out and, while it is hoped the clauses may be used as a model for the entire country, the Chicago tangle has already demonstrated that what may be suitable in California does not necessarily go in Illinois or elsewhere. Unexpressed, but known to be in the back of distributor minds, is the fear that the Government may step into the picture and straighten out a situation over which the industry is admittedly having difficulty. Reluctance on the part of big chains to relinquish protection privileges they have been enjoying for years is one of the chief obstacles which, it is felt, must be hurdled.

The irony of the situation is seen by some in the fact that it is the producer who, in the last analysis, must be held responsible because of interlocking control of the circuits. Where, hypothetically, a committee composed of exchangemen may argue for less stringent protection for Class A operations and more for the subsequent runs, the big chains battle the other way. Yet, the controlling factor in the situation is identical.

The realization is rather general in high executive circles that the time has arrived for a settlement of the protection problem if for no other reason than to ward off possible legislative action in Washington.

"Anybody's War" Clicks

Moran and Mack certainly keep the laughs sustained in this war comedy based on Mack's story of "Two Black Crows in the A. E. F." It should be a box-office card, for its humor is punctuated with human interest, pathos and romance. The cast is an excellent one, with Neil Hamilton and Joan Peers furnishing the romantic angle, and Walter McGrail as the menace. The battle scenes are thrilling and funny. Moran and Mack have set a high mark for other blackface comedians to shoot at. HYNES

Saal Denied But Forgot 9 Years Of F. N. Contract

First denied, now verified, it seems that after all Publix is actually negotiating with First National for the new season's line-up.

Bill Saal, feature film buyer for Publix, turned hot and bothered a few days ago following publication of the yarn that the First National deal was on and then went in for a lot of denials. In view of the fact that First National holds a ten-year contract with Publix and that nine years are yet to go with prices to be set at the outset of each season, those familiar with the situation are drawing the conclusion that Saal's denial centers around its possible effect on prices.

This week the Warner publicity department dug into the files for a new flock of adjectives and emerged with "one of the biggest deals ever made in the motion picture industry." That was how the modest p. a. described a booking deal now under way with Publix. This year, however, preferred playing time goes to Fox with the Warners filling in where Publix has gaps to bridge.

Seek to Remove "Blue" Sabbaths In Pennsylvania

Philadelphia—On the statute books since 1794 the chances grow increasingly better that efforts will be made to repeal the statewide "blue" law when the state legislature next meets. The proposed law, which has plenty of substantial backing, will vest the right of local option in each community.

Working in support of the liberal movement, but not appearing in the open are Philadelphia exhibitor interests who are being spurred into action by open Sundays in Trenton, plus the possibility that Camden, right across the Delaware from Philadelphia, may follow in Trenton's heels and nab some of the business now going to houses here.

Chicago Protection Scramble Blows Up; New System Contains Minor Changes

The Radio Menace

Columbus, O.—Domination of radio by any one group portends "the greatest danger to the fundamentals of American republican government," Federal Radio Commissioner Ira Robinson declared in a speech before the Institute for Education by radio.

Asserting that no one group must ever dominate radio, the commissioner declared that it "cannot be gainsaid that a monopoly of radio is now insistently claimed by a group, and that its power and influence is so subtle and effective as to portend the greatest danger to the fundamentals of American republican government." He said that "no greater issue presents itself to the citizenry."

Warner Deals For Houses in Ohio Are "Off"

Cleveland — Announcement of Warners having successfully consummated deals for the acquisition of various Ohio theatre interests appears to be all wet. The deals were not closed and are not likely to go to that chain.

Negotiations for the Schine Sandusky houses, Plaza, State and Star, are still in work, while deals for the Ritzler houses in Lima and Pekras' circuit at Elyria are definitely off.

Chakares and Paramount Settle Franchise Tilt

Franchise difficulties between Paramount, the Springfield (O.) Paramount originally filed suit in the Federal court at Dayton, O., charging the franchise had been breached.

Operators Strike; Twenty Theatres Start Open Shop

Minneapolis—Thirty-six operators went on strike here when their demands for a second man in the booth were denied by a majority of independent exhibitors. Twenty of the latter immediately countered with the hiring of non-union men to operate the projection machines; three theatres, the Paradise, Princess and Lyra, closed their doors, and two capitulated to the union demands, the Broadway and the Ione. The Ione, it is reported, is controlled by the operators' union.

St. Paul exhibitors also threaten to run non-union if the operators seek to enforce their demands. Date for the showdown is set for July 19.

New Schedules to Hays Office For Okay; Many Battles Feature Conferences

Chicago—The battle of "much ado about nothing" has come to an end and the armistice finds the casus belli in status quo. In other words, the Chicago re-zoning committee, after five weeks of bickering and argument, one verbal battle following another, is back to the ante-bellum stage. The recommendations on metropolitan protection which is forwarded this week to the Hays office for preliminary approval before submitting the new system to the local re-zoning board means that protection procedure here will remain essentially the same. All important changes were killed off in conference.

The final recommendations of the committee involve only such incidental considerations as admission scales as affected by double feature programs, two-for-one admission and other premiums or inducements held out to patrons. The committee's recommendations for dealing with such situations have been incorporated in a rider which will be supplemental to the main Chicago protection system. This rider comprises the only new or changed considerations locally and awaits the approval of C. C. Pettijohn, after which it will be submitted to the Chicago re-zoning board.

Name Permanent Committee

The metropolitan committee, also, named a tentative committee to constitute a permanent re-zoning board for the Chicago area. This committee, likewise subject to the approval of Pettijohn and the re-zoning board here, is comprised of the following: Felix Mendelssohn, chairman; Jack Miller, Aaron Saperstein, Arthur Schoenstadt, Floyd M. Brockell, James Coston, William Elson, Clyde Eckhardt, James Kent and Henry Herbel.

In the event this committee is approved and installed it will hear all existing and future protection complaints in the metropolitan area. Its meetings will be subject to the call of the chairman.

It is believed that the Hays organization will approve the committee's rider recommendations inasmuch as that office has already evidenced its impatience over the time now consumed in deliberations over protection here. The conferences have been going on for five weeks and, during that time, opposing factions have demonstrated the small likelihood of any agreement being reached on a basically different protection system than the one which has been in effect here in the past.

Approval of the committee's recommendations by Pettijohn, it is admitted, will mean their adoption locally.

N. Y. Sobbie Sobs For a "Kindness To Clara Week"

There is at least one critic in this cruel, cold world whose heart isn't as chilled as steel. This may be a rarity, but, nevertheless such exists in the person of Bland Johaneson, sob sister on the New York Mirror's picture staff, who just about broke down and wept bitter tears when she realized how heartless our own little Clara Bow was being treated by the press.

"Let's organize a 'Be Kind to Clara Bow Week,'" suggests the sobbie, who sobbingly points out that "everybody's been picking on Clara since she allowed herself to be dragged into a press agent engagement to Harry Richman."

"How many more movie stars have announced phoney engagements really doesn't matter. Clara has stood enough criticism to last anybody for the rest of 1930." she says in defense of the "red hot mamma from Brooklyn."

"The Bow contract with Paramount expires this Fall and everybody is speculating about whether she will be resigned. The wise money is all on that she'll be cast adrift. Her bosses are riled over the injudicious stunts which have gotten into the papers. Her box office popularity is on the wane.

"Bow never has had enough credit. She started with nothing and got $5,000 a week. She entertained millions. She gave the whole country a good time.

"Why should anybody care if she dyes her hair plum color and likes a Richman?

"That's the movie business. The public worships for a season and butchers the next. The Hays office orders what to wear, where to go, whom to marry, how to live and what prayers to say at bedtime.

"The fans that cheer a star to the top yell the loudest raspberries when that star begins to slip.

"Stars need vacations from stardom, with false mustaches and smoked glasses and the privilege of being ordinary people two weeks a year. Had Clara had one she might have been spared all the current knocking. She might have chosen blue hair. Or fallen in love with an aviator.

"We have 'Burn Your Love Letters' weeks, 'Watch Your Horses' weeks, 'Eat Your Spinach' weeks and a hundred others. A 'Be Kind to Movie Stars' week might do everybody a lot of good."

Tampa's Bargain Summer Prices

Tampa, Fla.—Effective this week, a special summer reduction in prices for two of the five Publix houses here was made by General manager Harry Weiss. The Strand will cut a nickel from the children's prices and make a flat rate of 10 cents for all shows. Adults will save a dime on the matinees, the new scale being a quarter, while the night rate will be cut to 35 cents from the former 50 cents top. The Franklin cuts a dime from the adult price, making a quarter good for all shows. The juvenile price remains at a dime.

Ouch!

Chicago—Publix-B. & K. was afraid of the Cosmopolitan production, "The Richest Man in the World," and turned it down, at least as far as their Loop houses were concerned. R-K-O grabbed up the picture and put it into the Woods for the first time in plenty of months that a Cosmopolitan production has had a Loop opening in any but a B. & K. house. "Richest Man" grossed better than $20,000 in its first week at the Woods, a sensational pace for the house, and appeared to be building in its second week. Now B. & K. wants it for the outlying houses.

Winter Passes Buck On Kiddies To The Parents

Parents, not producers, are to blame if the minds of youngsters are influenced by certain films, Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, paid clubwoman representative on the Hays staff, told women of Kansas City and Minneapolis, where she made addresses on behalf of public relations work of the M.P.P.D.A.

"The fact that only eight per cent of the audience is made up of children often is used as an argument against the elimination of certain elements suitable for grown-ups, but not for children," Mrs. Winter said. "Parents should know what is being shown, and whether a picture is a child picture or one for adults. The talking picture introduces an element of sophistication which often makes for confusion in the child mind," she admitted.

Mrs. Winter pointed out that 115,000,000 pass through the doors of picture theatres every week. And, on the basis of the eight per cent figure which she advanced, there are 9,200,000 kiddies who pay admissions for screen entertainment.

Parent Not on Job

In urging application of the need for intelligent discrimination between films for children and those for grown-ups, the club women were told that this is an age when the parent is off the job and the community must take care of the children.

"The business success of the motion picture," stated the Hays attache, "depends wholly upon whether or not it meets the demand for entertainment and gives agreeable occupation of the mind to the great majority of its audience, yet all of us know that entertainment has its ethical side. It may be good or bad. And it uses and surrounds itself with many other elements. Art and education and morals are its inevitable by-products.

"Now the sole and ultimate judge as to whether it gives agreeable occupation to the mind is the public, and by public judgment it falls or succeeds. No one pays his entrance fee and goes to a picture, because it is improving, or because he must, or because he wishes to swell the purse of the producers. He goes because he wants to go for his own pleasure.

"The producer, by the very terms of his business is obliged to fall into step with us and give us what we want—if we make him understand what we want. His hat is off and his ear is cocked to public demand. The head of every studio is trying to climb over the head of every other producer to learn and produce what suits his audience. His success or failure is graded all along the line by the degree with which he meets our demand.

"We, the public, make or mar, and the producer knows it. We think he has been making some mistakes as to what we want. It is up to us to let him know. So we start out with two facts—first, that motion pictures are a huge, dominating influence in the changing world of today and second, that the public is the ultimate controlling force, because pictures, like all other commodities that are for sale, must please their public or they will not sell."

Chicago Critic Sponsors House For Kids Only

Chicago—Frances Kurner (Mae Tinee), movie critic of the Chicago Tribune, has inaugurated and is sponsoring a movement to establish a picture house here for kids' trade, with productions for juveniles to be presented exclusively. The movement has won the support of many civic and social agencies and has been endorsed by Louis Smachal, vice-president of the Chicago Cinema Art Guild, Inc., operators of the Cinema Art Theatre here.

In agitating for a kid's theatre Miss Kurner decries the lack of suitable movie fare for children, but advances the belief that this situation may be due less to availability of productions than to box office requirements. An exclusive juvenile house, she believes, would not want for suitable bookings and would be a financial success.

Wants Lotta Dough for Tale Spun in Three Weeks

Chicago—Bob Andrews, editor of the Mid-Week magazine section of the Chicago Daily News, knocked out a serial story entitled "Three Girls Lost" for his paper in three weeks' time. The first installment was running before the story had been completed. Before the last installment had been published, Fox began negotiations for purchase of the movie rights to the story, but to date no deal has been made. Andrews' quotation is still too high for Fox, but the dickering is continuing.

Merchandise Now Cluttering Up Theatre Lobbies

South Bend, Ind.—The kidding given drug stores in which drugs constitute an insignificant portion of the business may soon be directed at motion picture theatres which are turning their lobbies into marts of trade. Publix was the first of the big chains to go after this side money, selling stockings, honey, sheet music, souvenirs, etc., and now R-K-O is plugging General Electric refrigerators in a similar manner.

A General Electric refrigerator essay contest here, conducted in connection with the Palace, ended with a capacity crowd in the theatre. For two weeks sample cooling devices had been on display in the lobby, with a young lady in charge as Miss General Electric to display the boxes and explain the rules of the contest. Hundreds of essays on "Why I Want a General Electric Refrigerator" were received, with the prize one of the company's cooling systems. The name of the winner was announced at the last show at the theatre following the close of the contest. The lobby is inside the theatre and all who desired to know the rules and get proper forms found it necessary to pay their way inside.

Ashland Upsets Ohioans On Sunday Show Problem

Ashland, O.—"To have or not to have." That is the question at present perplexing the proponents and opponents of Sunday shows here. A petition containing 500 names, with only 397 required to force the issue, has been presented to the city council asking repeal of an ordinance prohibiting Sunday pictures. The question will be one of the issues to be decided by the voters at the November election, this being the third time the matter has been up for decision in this manner.

It was overwhelmingly defeated in the first referendum, but received with more favor at the election last fall. Under the city charter, the council, within 30 days after receipt of a petition for repeal of an ordinance, shall either repeal it, or submit the question to the vote of the people. The latter course will likely be followed.

Refuses to Accept the New Development as Seriously As Amusement Field

Washington—Despite the furore created in the amusement field by the approach of television, the Federal Radio Commission, governmental authority with supervision over ether waves, is inclined to look upon the current status of visual broadcasting in an extremely light vein.

Television is still in a "highlighly experimental stage of development," states the Commission, which will issue licenses for television stations only on "an experimental and temporary basis." Because of the indefinite status of television, and because the manufacture of sets also is "still highly experimental," the Commission has informed the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, in a pleading, that it has not seen the wisdom of licensing regular voice broadcasting stations to be synchronized with experimental television transmitter.

The views of the Commission are presented in its statement of facts and grounds for its adverse decision on the application of the Short Wave and Television Laboratory, Inc., of Boston, which seeks authority to build a new local broadcasting station at Boston to be used principally as a "sound-track" for the short-wave television broadcasts the laboratory now offers. Such dual operation was declared to be essential in the proper development both of television transmitting and reception.

The laboratory appealed to the court after the Commission had denied its application for a 100-watt station to operate on the 1,370-kilocycle channel, during specific evening hours which at present are unused.

It is brought out by the Commission that the experimental visual broadcasting stations operate in the short-wave spectrum on five channels 100 kilocycles in width, and are entirely divorced from the broadcast band, in which broadcasting stations operate. Stations in the broadcast band use channels only 10 kilocycles in width.

Television Experimental

Not only is the transmission of television experimental, but the manufacture of radio visual receiving sets is naturally in the same engineering status, according to the Commission. Because there are "only a limited number of such receiving sets on the market, and few, if any, of them are of any practical worth other than a curiosity or novelty, public interest at this time does not require the adoption of regulations providing for sound accompaniment for visual broadcasting," says the Commission.

"Television is not yet ready to offer to the public as a whole. It is not yet possible to foresee exactly or with any degree of certainty just what engineering developments will take place in this highly technical field of radio activity."

None of the frequencies in the broadcast spectrum, covering the territory from 550 to 1,500 kilocycles, has ever been designated by law or international treaty or by regulation of the Commission for use as a sound track for programs to be synchronized with visual broadcasts, the court is informed. "Furthermore, appellant's visual broadcasting Station WIXAV is operated under an experimental license."

One of the primary reasons for the application of the Short Wave and Television Laboratory "was admitted by appellant to be an effort to secure a medium for the direct promotion of the sale of television receivers manufactured by appellant," the Commission states. "The Commission did not regard this as a ground for denial of the application, yet the Commission felt that this fact alone, or taken in connection with the other facts herein involved, did not constitute a sufficient showing that public interest, convenience or necessity would be served by the granting of appellant's application."

Face Tax Fight

Raleigh—Exhibitors of the state are anticipating a hard fight at the next session of the legislature when effort is scheduled to be made to enact a proposed ten per cent tax on admissions. South Carolina has such a tax, and for some time there has been agitation for an admission tax levy in North Carolina.

First "Bolita," Now Nite Ball, to Trouble Exhibs

Tampa, Fla.—If it isn't a bean ball, it's a baseball to stand in the way of exhibs in this town, who were just about recuperating from a trouncing by "bolita," gambling game, when along steps night ball to steer the customers away from b.o. windows.

The "bolita" racket had been a favorite with the Latins, who passed it on to the natives. The sons and daughters of Tampa, in due time, took to the game so seriously that picture houses found themselves confronted with a menace to healthy business. There were three big "houses" and a group of smaller ones all playing the game unmolested. The sheriff stepped in, turned thumbs down and pinched customers and owners.

"Bolita" backers, it is understood, circulated rumors about reopening to "feel" out the constabulary, but the latter announced the padlock was permanent.

With the closing of this pop pastime, local theatre business perked up immediately and all was happy along theatre row until night baseball threw another fly in the ointment. The new entertainment factor is going over big, with strong indications of stacking up as another heart breaker for showmen.

RKO Selling Amos 'n' Andy Film On $2,400,000 Value

The top-notcher on RKO's program for the new season is designed to be the Amos 'n' Andy feature on which an exhibition value of $2,400,000 has been placed.

Twelve others in the line-up are to reach exhibitors on an exhibition value of $1,000,000 each. They are "Dixiana," "The Silver Horde," "The Iron Trail," "Beau Ideal" and one other produced by Herbert Brenon, "Half Shot at Sunrise," "Cimarron," "Babes in Toyland," "Present Arms," "Heart of the Rockies" and two starring Wheeler and Woolsey.

The four which Charles R. Rogers will make for Radio are budgeted at $750,000 each; three with Richard Dix at $750,000 each; two Compsons at $400,000 each; three to be made in England at $450,000 each and nine in the "Victory Group" at $400,000 each. This makes a total of $25,400,000 which Radio anticipates drawing from exhibitors in the form of rentals.

These figures appear in the current issue of "The Allied Exhibitor."

Artists' Representatives Form New Organization

Aimed to drive out of business "crooked agencies," the Theatrical Artists' Representatives' Ass'n. was formed this week at a joint meeting of Actors' Equity and the Artists' Personal Representatives' Ass'n. The move is also expected to eliminate strikes against producers.

William Morris, Inc., was denied permission to enter the new association on the grounds that it was owned by Publix and therefore could not give artists unbiased representation.

The officers elected are: Arthur Lyons, president; M. S. Bentham, vice-president; Walter Batchelor, secretary; Edward Davidow, treasurer, and Julius Kendler, counsel.

California Clubwomen Honor Fox Managers

Langdon Not Love Thief

Los Angeles—Harry Langdon may be a laugh stealer, but surely he is not a love thief. Superior Court ruled that Harry did not steal the affections of his present wife from her former husband, Thomas O'Brien, while she was still married to the latter, who sued for $11,500 worth of notes which Langdon claimed he made out to O'Brien to prevent the filing of a threatened lost love suit.

A Thriller

Thrilling air stuff, some pathos and comedy combine to make "The Dawn Patrol" a strong attraction, although no doubt it will be handicapped somewhat by the several air dramas of the type which have gone before. It presents an outstanding cast with Richard Barthelmess, Neil Hamilton and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., the principals. Hamilton well nigh steals the picture before his transfer from the post of flight commander. There is an abundance of air fighting, a bit too much in fact, and there isn't a woman or love interest. Its appeal is in its thrills.

Educ'l Product Up 25 Per Cent For New Season

Educational, fully set on its line-up for 1930-31, will release 64 two-reel comedies, or an increase of 25 per cent over the season just closed. The increase in one-reelers is larger, with 50 subjects on the new program as against a small number during 1929-1930.

In the two-reel division, Mack Sennett will make 26. Lloyd Hamilton is down for six. There will be six Mermaids and six each to be released as Tuxedo, Ideal, Gayety and Vanity comedies.

There will be 12 Mack Sennett Brevities photographed via the producer's own color process and featuring bathing girls. Twenty-six Terry-Toons and 12 novelty reels in the Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge series complete the line-up.

With the affiliation of the Educational and Metropolitan studios in Hollywood, the company has available 60,000 square feet of sound stages for production. In addition, the Sennett studio has a floor area of 40,000 square feet.

Hollywood—Five production units are at work on Educational's new line-up. Stephen Roberts is directing the first in the Mermaid series. Mack Sennett is ready to start "Grandma's Girl," first of his series, while Nat Ross will handle the opener of the Vanity series. The Tuxedo, Lloyd Hamilton, Ideal and Gayety groups get under way shortly.

Youngsters Hit, Too

Los Angeles—Report of the state department of industrial relations reveals that child players have suffered the effects of talkers along with grown-ups who have been thrown into the discard.

The number of permits issued to minors for film work decreased 39% during the five-month period ended June 1, as compared with the corresponding period in 1929.

International Patent Accord Depends On Disposal of German "Kontingent"

Dat Bane Funny

Los Angeles—Figuring that the word "Follies" in a film title is detrimental at the box office, Pacific Coast release of "Fox Movietone Follies of 1930" goes out under the title of "Svendson's Wild Party."

Revues and musicals have generally nose-dived on the coast in recent months.

DeForest Patent Suit in Canada Awaits Decision

Ottawa—Despite the fact that a decision has been handed down in Wilmington, Del., in the suit of DeForest Phonofilms against other companies for alleged infringement of talker patent rights, no judgment has yet been delivered by the Exchequer Court of Canada, Ottawa, which heard the application by DeForest Phonofilms of Canada, Ltd., against Famous Players Canadian Corp. and the Northern Electric Co. for an injunction and damages on similar grounds. The Canadian case was heard prior to that at Wilmington, but the decision will not be handed down before September at Ottawa. The ruling of the United States Court has no effect in the Dominion and is not regarded as a precedent by the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Warners and Fox Reported Seeking Indiana Circuit

Terre Haute, Ind.—Fred J. Dolle, president and general manager of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Corp. of Louisville, Ky., which controls the Indiana, Grand, Liberty, American and Hippodrome here, was in the city for a short time, accompanied by other officials of the company and by a man said to represent one of the large producing companies, but whose name was not disclosed.

The party made an inspection of the local theatres and left to continue the tour of the company's holdings in other Indiana cities. The visit adds credence to a report that the company is negotiating for the sale of the circuit to one of the large companies. Warners and Fox are known to have been negotiating with the company during the past several weeks.

Chances Fade for Settlement in Paris, But Conference Lingers On

Paris—The conference seeking an accord in sound patents may be sitting in Paris, but it is to Berlin that the American industry should properly look for settlement of the deliberations which have been under way here for three weeks.

Publicly, the German and American representatives, chairmaned by Will H. Hays, report progress. On the inside, the story appears to be somewhat different. It is believed here that a cross patent arrangement can be worked out, but the problem has passed beyond the electrical stage.

It is the legislative slant and what the German Reichstag intends to do about the proposed "kontingent" law which would permit circulation in Germany only of talkers made in German with German capital remains a mystery. Confidential reports from New York, which are understood to be reflected here among American representatives, express the belief that little is to be gained by a patent settlement if the proposed German law is passed. The belief is that American companies will find that market practically closed to them.

It is highly probable that the meetings may reach a deadlock and break up without a settlement having been reached.

Chicago Protection Scramble Blows Up

Publix-Great States, will await action on its recommendations at the same time the metropolitan plan is submitted to the re-zoning board here. Approval of the so-called Rubens plan for downstate is looked for at the time it is submitted, as the men who will finally pass on it are, in large, those who were instrumental in drafting it originally. However, the complicated and technical considerations of this plan, though obviously an improvement on the old downstate situation, is expected to draw opposition from both exchanges and theatres which, if and when the plan is adopted, will result in numerous complaints being registered with the re-zoning board here in the future, it is believed.

No further meetings are scheduled here until approval of the Chicago committee's rider recommendations is received from Pettijohn. Thereafter, it is believed, a final committee meeting will formally draft the entire recommended protection system and submit it to the re-zoning board immediately after. Final disposition is expected within a week or ten days.

Portland, Ore.—Following the plan of rotating masters of ceremonies, Don Wilkins this week returned to the Fox Broadway as the stage show feature.

Cute Censorship

Toronto—The Ottawa Board of Censors has again saved the youth of the Dominion from perdition. It deleted three scenes from "Bouncing Babies," an Our Gang comedy, which show one of the kids breaking electric light bulbs in order to stop automobiles. The cuts were ordered on the ground that the deed "would tend to disturb public morals and safety!"

Seattle Met Goes To Publix on Full Time; K. & E. Out

Seattle—Under arrangements just concluded, according to all indications, Paramount Publix and Klaw & Erlanger will no longer split time at the downtown Metropolitan in this city. Publix will have the house all the time.

For the past season, Publix has operated the Met on a first run picture policy whenever there were no road shows, concerts, etc., to be booked in by Klaw & Erlanger, lessees of the house, which is primarily a house for "legit" shows. Much confusion in the minds of the local public resulted, and both firms suffered.

Now, with the stage version of "Strictly Dishonorable" in the offing, Klaw & Erlanger officials announce that they have rented the President for that show, in order that Publix may continue film shows at the Metropolitan uninterrupted. The President, formerly housing Henry Duffy stock players, has been dark since Duffy's financial difficulties began and he closed the local company.

Hollywood Has Its Sherlock, So Beware!!

—all are tumbling over each other in an endeavor to dig up the inside of Hollywood and its inhabitants.

Norma Shearer and her producer-husband, Irving Thalberg, among others, appreciate that privacy is impossible to obtain in the coast film colony. Here's the reason:

Last December, a film chatter writer started the report that an heir was expected at the Thalberg mansion. Denial was emphatic at that time. But the rumor was reprinted over a period of three months.

The rumor died down eventually, especially after female scribs had seen Miss Shearer out in public quite often.

But now the secret is out. Inside reports declare an heir is expected at the Thalberg home sometime in October, ten months after the first chatter writer's story appeared announcing it was on the way.

Perhaps the chatterer consulted a Hollywood medium or palmist to get the advance dope, but that can be discounted in view of the wrong percentages standing against even the best of the seers operating locally.

all phases of the industry feel in the work," he says.

"Substantial improvement" was made in contractual relations between exhibitors and distributors by the deliberations of the 5-5-5 conference, M. A. Lightman, president of the M. P. T. O. A., declared to Motion Picture News in commenting upon the outcome of the meetings.

"The M. P. T. O. A.," he said, "feels that substantial progress was made at the Atlantic City conference in mutualizing business situations within the industry. The many changes in ownership and personnel have featured the industry within the past few years and others in prospect convince that all of these situations must be comprehended in every move affecting the business."

ganization to resume her contract obligations.

According to the story of the Gaynor break with Fox, the entire matter revolves around the idea of the player's husband, Lydell Peck, that she is worth about $6,000 a week to Fox instead of the present contract salary of around $1,750. Then, according to the report, it was figured that Fox would meet a salary raise early this year when production plans were made to co-star Miss Gaynor and Charles Farrell. So Miss Gaynor walked aboard a Hawaii-bound boat for a "vacation."

Refusing to be disturbed, Fox executives assigned Rose Hobart to the Gaynor part in the picture and went ahead with production. Then, it is said, a cablegram was dispatched to Miss Gaynor, instructing her to report at the studio on March 15 to resume work. When she did not show up at that time, it is understood she went off the payroll until matters were adjusted.

Miss Gaynor finally returned from Hawaii, and sat around waiting for a call from the studio, according to the story. But no messengers or emissaries appeared. The longer she waited, the more anxious she became, according to report.

Finally she decided to talk things over with Sheehan. Apparently an appointment was made, for observers noticed her waiting in the Sheehan outer office. But she waited for over an hour, and finally left. The next day Sheehan departed on a trip to Wyoming to talk over a new contract with Raoul Walsh.

It is expected Miss Gaynor will return to Fox to resume work under her perfectly good contract—and at regular salary—just as soon as Sheehan figures he has time to tell Miss Gaynor she can return if her attitude is "right."

In the meantime, Fox is grooming Maureen O'Sullivan for stardom—and is exploiting the Irish girl more intensively than any player that has arrived on the lot in years.

was needless to wager whether or not she wore a slip.

"Now look at them gawks starin' at her," he exclaimed with disgust.

A group of the boys who acquire their season's supply of sun tan propped against the buildings on the sunny side of Randolph Street were the objects of his scorn.

Better Show on Streets

"You see," triumphantly, "that's what I been tellin' ya. They get a better break free on the street than any respectable house can give 'em on the stage for eighty-five cents. That's all that's the matter with business."

His agile eye, this time, had picked out a buxom red-head. She was attired in a blue ensemble, with fold-over skirt that strove valiantly but unsuccessfully to reach her knees. Her stride parted the fold of the skirt generously with every step. The manager was slow in recovering.

"They ought'nta allow it," he pronounced finally. "At our next managers' meeting I'm going to ask the boss why we can't kick in something to help out the brassiere and petticoat houses with their advertising. It'd be an investment; that's what it'd be. Well, say, I gotta be gettin' back into my office."

Halfway into the theatre he paused and looked back. It was another blonde; as generous of proportions as she was of revelations. He shook his head slowly as she disappeared in the crowd.

"I'm tellin' ya," he pronounced, "it's the street competition."

He looked carefully up and down the thoroughfare; then entered the theatre hesitantly, looking back, once, over his shoulder.

Build Canadian Studio for U. K. Quota Pictures

Building of a talking picture studio, designed primarily for production of British quota films, is under way at Montreal, according to Ray Jackson, who is managing director of the enterprise, which will operate as United Talking Pictures, Ltd. He plans production of two films this year. The company, says Jackson, who is in New York arranging for recording equipment, plans to co-operate with all American producers. A canteen, which will accomodate 250 persons, now is under construction.

The new studio is to be located 20 miles outside Montreal upon a former golf course. A proposed clubhouse is to cost $150,000, according to Jackson. Site of the new production plant will cost a reputed $300,000.

Production of quota films in England is unfeasible in Jackson's opinion. He believes the cost of taking American production staffs to Europe is prohibitive and says the antagonism against both British and American films is a stumbling block. This is due, he declares, to the "blow up" of British films, as a result of the American talker development. A few years ago, he says, $24,000,000 was raised by popular subscription for the rehabilitation of the British film industry. Because no market for the pictures was developed, the British public is considerably peeved at films generally, Jackson says. As a result, considerable difficulty is experienced by British producers in filming scenes, Jackson asserts.

Court Enjoins Police From Barring "Ingagi"

Portland, Ore.—Presiding Judge Stevenson has granted a temporary injunction restraining the city, the chief of police and the board of censors from interfering with the run of "Ingagi" at the Capitol for a third showing. The suit was brought by C. M. Dunn, Inc., operators of the Capitol.

Judge Stevenson, in granting the temporary injunction, said he was not determining whether the picture was indecent or immoral, but took into consideration that the owners of the Capitol may have contracted for showing the picture with the understanding that the board of censors had approved it.

Health Authorities Declare Low Theatre Temperatures Harm; Advocate 75 Degrees

Chicago—Criticism of the "too-cool summer theatre" by various health authorities of this city is giving local theatre managers and engineers a new headache.

Such well known and popular advertising phrases as "68 degrees cool inside" and "20 degrees cooler than on the street" appear destined to be forgotten as a result of the criticism which, coming from recognized health authorities, carries some weight. These authorities place the proper temperature of the theatre at 75 degrees and a humidity of 55 per cent. A good rule for theatre engineers to follow, they believe, is the maintaining of a difference of approximately 10 degrees in temperature between the inside and the street.

Dr. Arnold Kegel, Chicago health commissioner, has issued public warnings against the too-cool theatre, as have Dr. Herman Bundesen, former city health commissioner, and Dr. W. A. Evans, health editor of the Chicago Tribune.

Temperatures Too Low

Referring to an article on the subject which appeared in a technical publication, Dr. Evans writes: "We have repeatedly observed that many theatres where artificial refrigeration is used are maintained at much too low a temperature for health and comfort. Theatre temperatures of 68 degrees may be anywhere from 20 to 30 degrees below summer temperatures on the street.

"Ultimately such low temperatures work harm to the theatre, to the manufacturer of air cooling equipment, and to the public," he writes. "There is a surprisingly large number of people, some of advanced age and infirm, some perfectly normal, who will not and who dare not patronize refrigerated theatres because of some unhappy experiences they had in amusement places that were 68 degrees cool. A theatre in which the air is kept at 75 degrees and a humidity of 55 per cent, and in which there is a barely perceptible air motion, is close to the ideal for warm weather.

10 Degrees Variation Ideal

"A difference of 10 degrees," Dr. Evans states, "between the inside where there is no light and but little radiation, and where the air is still, and with the glare and heat outside, represents comfort and makes for health.

"The human body can adjust itself to much greater differences in environment, but after the expiration of a few minutes the low temperature becomes trying. We hope," he says, "that ,eventually homes, business places, offices and factories will be refrigerated in hot weather. Mistakes made in theatres and restaurants tend to retard this development."

Other health authorities agree with Dr. Evans' viewpoints in principle, declaring that sitting inactive in a theatre, the temperature of which is twenty degrees cooler than on the street, is too much of a strain on the human system which is forced to adjust its heat procedure and heat loss to far too radical a change. This is particularly true of adolescent systems, they say. Any theatre where the air is ten degrees cooler than the outside air is safe and offers wholesome and comfortable conditions, according to these authorities.

Gratis Shows in Northwest Again Socking Exhibs

Minneapolis—Free shows, bane of summer show business for several years past, again are reported flourishing in the Northwest. The usual racket is being employed, business men being sold on the idea that free pictures will attract trade to the town and so to their individual stores. The screen is placed either in a park or against one of the town's business buildings, a section of the street being roped off for the occasion.

Among Northwest towns where free pictures are being shown are: Watson, Minn., Walcott, N. D., and Bennett, Wolbach, Hardy, Kenesaw, Comstock, Platte Center, Neb.

Drops Blues; Ohio Town Does Big Sunday Trade

Steubenville, O.—The initial showing of Sunday pictures here received an ineffective sock on the chin when two exhibitors were arrested on affidavits sworn out by City Manager Strayer, for alleged violation of the Sunday "blue laws."

Both houses continued to operate following the arrests, and report unusually good business. Petitions circulated in local churches have been sent city officials demanding strict enforcement of Sunday laws.

Ohio Censors Turn Down All 'Ingagi' Monkey Business

Cleveland—State board of censors here are a tough lot, so thinks W. N. Skirboll, distributor of "Ingagi" in Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Kentucky and West Virginia. The board insists upon releasing the picture purely as a "film romance" and not as an authentic record of a jungle expedition, as the film was touted to be.

As now passed, the picture carries a foreword explaining what parts are studio made, and what parts originated in the jungle.

Florida Man Launches Natural Color Process

Lakeland, Fla.—Burgi Contner, an operator in different theatres here for several years and who later established a studio with his own developing and printing plant for the making of commercial films, states he has invented a natural color process which he claims reproduces all natural colors.

He calls it "Supercolor." Shortly after talking pictures were established, Contner developed a lens mount which he said would allow the same lens to be used for both the disc and sound-on-film pictures, the picture covering the entire screen in the latter without losing the space used for the sound track.

The Big Magnet

Washington—In 1929, United States visitors spent about $289,000,000 and Canadians here spent about $91,000,000, the Department of Commerce has figured out.

In enumerating the causes for this great traffic, which, incidentally, is larger than between any other two countries in the world, the government states "the important influence of prohibition in the United States will be doubted by nobody." In other words, John Barlevcorn plays host to many millions of Uncle Sam's chillun!

Canadian theatres undoubtedly received a substantial share of that 289 millions.

Old Johnny Law Busy

Sacramento, Cal.—Many film companies are included in the group of 2,600 corporation charters which have been revoked by the secretary of state in forfeit for failure to pay the state franchise tax.

Suits have been filed to collect the taxes due, amounting to $100,000. Delinquent companies may revive their charters by filing applications with the secretary of state and by paying the tax.

"Runaway Bride" Sinks to 30% In Balto Run

Baltimore—With three first-run theatres having closed for the summer, business went along pretty good for those remaining open despite the July 4th holiday, with many persons leaving the city for the three-day period. The weather enticed many out into the open.

The biggest business was done at Loew's Stanley, where "Big House" was acclaimed by the public after getting off to a slow start. Large advertising space was used on this in the Sunday "American" and Baltimore "News" (Hearst papers). The gross was figured at $21,800.

The low was done at the Auditorium, where, although this house abandoned the road show policy and went on a grind basis with a 25 cents to 50 cents admission, business did not go so well with "Runaway Bride." This grossed only $1,650, rating 30%.

A new menace to one's peace of mind is beginning to replace the film goer who reads the subtitles aloud. This is the person who stamps his way through a musical film, tapping time to all the dance tunes and some of the others.

Check and—

Washington — Many key towns in various sectors of the country, particularly Los Angeles and surrounding film colonies, have been blowing a horn far and wide heralding new census figures which placed them away up on the list of important communities.

Some of them, it is understood, are in for a big disappointment. The figures announced a few weeks ago were only rough estimates and will be changed when the official list appears some time late this month.

$21,500 Intake Gives Oakie Top Cleveland Spot

Cleveland—"Social Lion," Jack Oakie's newest comedy, was the most popular attraction of the week, grossing $21,500.

RKO Palace had a big week, too, but whether Bebe Daniels in "Alias French Gertie" or the popular vaudeville team, Olsen and Johnson, were responsible for the crowds is debatable. "Big House," on Sudden Spurt, Jumps 6 Grand

It took New Yorkers a week, apparently, to find out about "The Big House," which played to $18,000 in its first week at the Astor, jumping to nearly $25,000 for the second, a sensational climb.

Holiday crowds deserting the town for the beaches were missed along the main stem, but not much, what with the hundreds of thousands of visitors who flocked to the big show palaces to catch a glimpse of New York's "sophisticated" stage touch. Business, generally, held up fairly well.

Mortgage Actions Against Two Indiana Theatres

South Bend, Ind.—Judge Thomas W. Slick in Federal Court ordered the Palace Theatre Corp. properties here sold at public auction to satisfy a judgment of $986,244.40, granted to the Liquidating Midland Bank of Cleveland, for $900,000 first mortgage deed bonds floated April 1, 1925, to finance the construction of the building.

The judge of Superior Court here signed a judgment foreclosing two mortgages against the Mishawaka Theatre Corp., Mishawaka, Ind., for $143,894. The American Trust Co., which instituted the foreclosure suit, held a first mortgage and was given a judgment for $93,379. In view of the fact that the property of the corporation is not sufficient to pay off the mortgage indebtedness at a sale, the court provided that the trust company continue as a receiver collecting the rents and profits of the property for an indefinite period pending the final sale.

"Richest Man" is Chi's Best Bet; Grosses $20,100

Chicago—The Loop held four money pictures last week, each in one of the smaller houses. The big spots were slightly off for the most part.

Of the four honeys, "Richest Man in the World" (M-G-M), playing at RKO Woods, was the standout. Publix-B. & K. turned the picture down cold; the critics received it very mildly, and it is running with poor short subject support. Its first week gross was $20,100 (175%), an exceptional figure for this house. It is now getting the family trade, which means word-of-mouth advertising, and appears to be building.

The Roosevelt carried another winner in "Byrd at the South Pole" (Paramount). It grabbed $32,800 in the last seven of its first ten days, and is continuing at a good pace. The Garrick took "All Quiet on the Western Front" (U.), which had four good weeks at McVickers previously and collected $14,200 (150%) the first week, a sweet figure for this house. "Lilies of the Field" (F. N.), in the Castle on a "pink" permit, did $5,100 (170%) in its second week, thanks to the ladies' trade. In spite of this nice showing the picture was forced out by an "Ingagi" (Indie) booking. The gorilla picture opened to capacity business; its previous nine weeks at the Garrick apparently having done it no injury.

"Big Pond" (Paramount) slumped badly in its second and final week at the United Artists, taking only $13,200 (60%). It was replaced by "Song o' My Heart" (Fox), which opened nicely. The Palace was also slightly off at $19,200 (80%).

Weather: Cool, occasional showers.

Death, Where's Thy Sting?

A ham-and-egg actor recently steadied himself on the edge of a Times Square skyscraper with a desire to end it all.

"Come back," called a sympathetic director who happened along at the crucial moment, "you have everything to live for. Why die?"

The actor insisted, but the director finally convinced him to wait until they talked things over. "Life ain't so worse," he opined.

The intended suicide relented. For 15 minutes life was discussed in all its chameleon aspects. They delved deeply into the intricacies of the show business. They then arose—and both jumped off.

Eddie Dowling Pulls Big Crowds In Providence

Providence—Eddie Dowling's popularity pulled big business to the RKO Albee and hit the high-water mark for the house's summer gross, clicking around $11,000, which is about 100%. Dowling was feted by the state and city, and various lodges held theatre parties during the week.

Loew's State held up well at $20,000 with "Big House," while the Paramount found "With Byrd at the South Pole" strong at $13,200. The Majestic and RKO Victory, showing "The Devil's Holiday" and "Good Intentions," were about normal.

Weather: Clear, cool.

All Boston Town Goes Wild Over South Pole Film

Boston—Seldom does a film playing day and date in two houses, even though they be first runs, blow the lid clean off the top, but that's just what happened with Publix's Olympia and Uptown, where "With Byrd at the South Pole" was screened. The Olympia grossed $28,000 for 205% and the Uptown went it better with $24,500 for 210%. These two records are likely to stand as house records for some time.

"Big House" at Loew's State did splendid business in what, with the exceptions noted, may be termed a rather dull week. It grossed $22,000 for 110%, the result of heavy newspaper advertising and newspaper tie-ups. "Florodora Girl," which played at Loew's State a couple of week's ago for grosses well above average, came back for another Boston showing at Loew's State and did 95%.

Other downtown houses did a typical mid-summer business, more or less spotty and nothing to brag about. The holiday was a life-saver in many instances.

Weather: Fair and warm.

Opposition: Metropolitan with "Border Legion" and a good stage show with plenty of music and dancing; Keith-Albee, "Alias French Gertie," vaudeville; Keith Memorial, "Bride of the Regiment"; Loew's State, "Big House"; Loew's Orpheum, "Florodora Girl" for a second showing in three weeks; Olympia and Uptown, "With Byrd at the South Pole," playing day and date, "Young Desire," Park; "Shadow of the Law," Scollay Square; "Swing High," playing day and date at Fenway and Modern; "All Quiet on the Western Front," 5th week, Majestic.

Sound Strengthens Grip of U. S. on Swedish and Czechoslovakian Markets

Fans Want the Real Stuff, Not Synthetic Synchronized Versions

Washington — Sound has helped rather than hinder American films in at least two European countries, Sweden and Czechoslovakia, where prestige of U. S. product has been enhanced by advent of talkers.

Despite strong attempts to block the run of American films, Swedish fans supported the new movement so staunchily that the opposing forces backed down to defeat. This is made known by the United States Government in the fifth installment of a survey of film conditions in all European countries, full report of which is appearing regularly in Motion Picture News.

American films, in a neck-and-neck race with German product for supremacy in Czechoslovakia are running leaps and bounds ahead of the Teutonic pictures. As in the case of Sweden, sound has given added prestige to U. S. product, although synchronized versions do not receive as warm a reception as straight talkers in either country.

Both Sweden and Czechoslovakia are showing a progressive attitude toward the building of a film industry, unlike other neighboring countries. The countries are following the trend in larger countries of building modern theatres.

The discussion of conditions in Norway is continued below from a preceding issue, followed by full reports of Czechoslovakia and Sweden:

NORWAY

By MARQUARD H. LUND
American Commercial Attache, Oslo

Gross receipts from the 245 Norwegian theatres amounted to about 12,500,000 crowns ($3,350,000) in 1929. Of these, 103 theatres owned by municipalities showed receipts of 11,237,734 crowns ($3,010,511). Control of the principal theatres, therefore, is entirely in the hands of the various communities. Some of the few remaining independent houses—Colloseum and Kinopalaet in Oslo, and the Rosenberg in Trondhjem—were taken over by the respective communes during the year. Although each commune manages its own theatres, Kommunernes Film Central, Oslo, is considered as the center of affairs for all communes and undoubtedly has considerable influence and is consulted on important decisions.

American film prestige seems to hold up well with the public, as is indicated by financial returns. The press considers most American films inferior to European production from an artistic point of view, owing probably to a difference in taste. Sound films with much American slang are not suited for the market. On the other hand, musical comedies with attractive settings and all-talking mystery plays would make American sound films probably more popular. The German sound picture "Atlantic" has been playing to full houses.

The further development of sound films is rather promising, considered from the point of view of the public. Most of the opposition comes from professional critics, who prefer the silent film, and a certain political element, which is opposed to commune operation of the theatres and quotes the sound film installations as an example of poor business judgment. Norwegian text is shown for the benefit of those who do not understand English or German. A surprisingly large number of people are familiar with English and German, however, but have difficulty in understanding typically American idioms. For the same reason, American jokes and humor are not always understood.

Additional theatres will probably be wired for sound film during 1930. The present cost of installation is considered too high, however. A reduction in price should widen the market somewhat.

No production, no expansion in studios, and no adverse legislation is contemplated for 1930.

SWEDEN

By T. O. KLATH
American Commercial Attache, Stockholm

During 1929 there was a continuation of the trend toward larger and more modern motion picture theatres in Sweden. Seven new houses with a combined seating capacity of about 4,000 were opened during the year. A few theatres were reconstructed, but the number of seats added was insignificant.

About 60 theatres had been equipped with sound film installations at the end of February, 1930, and others are being added slowly. Most of the large houses have completed their installations, and the new equipment is now going into the smaller provincial theatres. That the sound film has conquered the Swedish market is best indicated by the fact that Roda Kvarn, a first-run theatre in Stockholm, announced some months ago by Aktb. Svensk Filmindustri as "the permanent home of the silent film," will soon have a sound apparatus installed.

Of these 60 wired theatres, 20 have American equipment, 27 Nordisk equipment of local manufacture, and 11 Klankfilm.

Svensk in Commanding Spot

A total of seven purely Swedish feature productions were either planned or started during the year and, in addition, five were to be made in cooperation with other European producers. Of these, eight are silent and four have both silent and sound versions. Aktb. Svensk Filmindustri so far has released only one synchronized film, this being "Sag Det i Toner" ("Say It With Music"). This feature is reported to have cost about 150,000 crowns ($40,000), and the sound part was made in Berlin. Six silent feature films were released. The average cost of the Swedish silent features may be estimated at from 80,000 to 125,000 crowns ($33,500) each, but it is impossible to obtain definite information as to the investment in films made in cooperation with other European producers.

Film production in Sweden is dominated by Aktb. Svensk Filmindustri, which in 1929 started production or planned about 10 feature films. In addition, two features are now being made by two individuals, one of them being produced in a Danish studio. Swedish sound short subjects have not yet appeared, but it is planned to start production soon.

The only Swedish sound film produced and released so far was made by the Tobis system. There is but one film studio of importance in Sweden, located at Rasunda, a suburb of Stockholm, and owned by Svensk Filmindustri. It recently completed the installation of Tobis equipment for making sound pictures.

America in Lead There, Too

According to the trade, approximately 350 feature films were censored for release during 1929, and of this total approximately 75 per cent were American. Swedish features were next in importance. The following statistics, compiled by the official censor, cover all pictures censored during 1929 and indicate to some extent the types and origin of films: The total number of films (original and copies) examined during 1929 was 4,781, including 2,665 features, short subjects, etc., and 2,116 nature pictures, news reels, etc. The total of 4,781 included 1,974 original copies and 2,807 duplicate copies. Of the total number, 1,987 were from Sweden, 2,053 were from the United States, and 741 were from other foreign countries. The Swedish figure appears so large because it includes a large number of news reels.

The total length of film examined (including originals and duplicates) amounted to 3,862,841 meters, of which 3,294,171 meters represented features, short subjects, etc., while 568,670 meters represented news reels, nature pictures, etc. Originals examined were 1,224,620 meters in length and copies 2,638,221 meters. Of the total length of film examined, 633,845 meters originated in Sweden, 2,202,979 in the United States, and 1,026,017 in other foreign countries. Only 76,086 meters of film were altogether banned by the censor, while about two-thirds of all film censored were forbidden for children under 16 years of age.

During 1929 American producers supplied practically all of the sound films released in Sweden. Since the beginning of 1930 a few German sound films appeared, and most of these met with success. Silent versions accompanied the American pictures in nearly all cases, exceptions being the revue subjects, operettas, and exclusively singing pictures.

Sound Aids U. S. Pictures

The advent of sound films created a great deal of interest on the part of the Swedish public. At first the theatres showing sound films were filled with people who came out of curiosity. However, a large percentage of the public immediately became keenly interested in

They say Quaint

HE'S such a fascinating fellow that even if he weren't the well known movie star that he is, there would be many, many women who would think him quite grand. He's amusing, good looking, and he certainly must have a way with him, judging from the number of Hollywood girls who just can't get him out of their minds.

Every so often he's rumored engaged to some one. He never denies it until people begin to take the idea seriously, and then he just steps out of the Romeo role and in a few months a new Juliet is heard from.

What the public and even his charmed ladies don't know is that the handsome hero is a married man and has been for many years. He joined the benedict class in the obscure days of his career and the break-up came before he attained any prominence at all. He paid his wife a monthly allowance, and as his popularity grew he was always acclaimed as one of the most eligible of the movie bachelors. It was too late to do anything about the mistake. In the meantime, the wife refused to go away and get a quiet divorce. She isn't interested in any one else and she sees to it that hers is a good sized share of his earnings. She lives in luxury, to which she was never accustomed, and the poor man lives in a terrible fear that some day his matrimonial past will bob up before the public. And then won't that make headlines—N. Y. Graphic.

Probably the worst that can be said against that not conspicuously successful movement to salvage prosperity is that too many men expected too much of it. From Hollywood comes another tale concerning Arthur Caesar. Mr. Caesar, perhaps through carelessness, was invited to a party being given by a prominent producer.

BALANCED programs, more variety, better acting and better stories will furnish the trend of the business in the next year. American Sound Films Increase U. S. Prestige sound films, and the attendance at theatres showing this type of film increased over the previous year. In the larger cities a surprisingly large number of people are able to understand sufficient English to enjoy American dialogue if it is not too idiomatic. Considerable criticism is heard regarding American sound films that have been rescored to any extent. Furthermore, it is claimed that American films have entirely too much dialogue and too little action. One result of the American sound films has been to increase the interest in the study of foreign languages, particularly English. The introduction of sound pictures also has tended to obviate the seasonal characteristic of the market; most theatres in the past have closed for about three months in the middle of summer.

The American film industry undoubtedly increased its prestige in Sweden during 1929, although there were many difficulties on account of the sound feature. Certain local interests have endeavored to slow up or block the introduction of American sound films, but have met with little or no success so far as the general public is concerned. On this account, however, many owners of smaller theatres have delayed the purchase of sound equipment. Some time ago an important daily newspaper in Stockholm arranged a reader referendum on sound films. The replies received were highly unfavorable to American sound films. On the other hand, audiences in some theatres have been given cards on which to state whether they thought the particular film shown would have been more enjoyable in a silent version. The results of these straw votes have been overwhelmingly in favor of sound pictures.

Svensk Filmindustri controls one or more first-run theatres in each of the 35 largest towns throughout the country and also is the only factor of importance in local production. Its operations during 1929 involved the erection of a few additional theatres and the installation of sound equipment in many of its houses. It is the best customer in Sweden of American film companies.

Swing Toward Sound On

In general, it may be stated that an increasing number of Swedish film houses will be equipped with sound apparatus during 1930. There is some objection to the high prices charged for certain makes of apparatus, although it is generally admitted that the American apparatus reproduces sound better than competitive products.

It is believed that Swedish film production during 1930 will be about the same as in 1929. Plans are discussed for making German and other foreign-language sound versions of a few Swedish feature films during 1930. It is reported that two American companies plan to produce sound features in Swedish by using Swedish actors. Probably about half of the Swedish feature production during 1930 will have both sound and silent versions, while the other half will be only silent.

There is no legislation proposed that would in any way affect the interests of American film companies.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

By DR. ALOIS BROFT
Office of Commercial Attache, Prague

During 1929 the number of motion picture theatres in Czechoslovakia was increased by 50 with an average capacity of 440, or a total increase of 22,000 seats. Apart from a few rebuilt theatres in smaller towns, all of these were new and constructed expressly for motion picture performances. In Prague 12 cinemas with a total seating capacity of 9,820 were completed during the year. These figures represent a decrease as compared with 1928, when about 150 new theatres were put in operation. This is ascribed to the fact that the total seating capacity of motion picture theatres more than covers present requirements. This is true particularly as regards Prague, where the number of first-run theatres has been growing at such a rate and the competition is so keen that the initiated speak of an imminent crisis which may manifest itself late in the summer of 1930 by a number of cinemas having to close down. It is thought by many that only financially strong theatre owners will be able to survive a slack season, with undiminished operating expenses accompanied by materially lower receipts.

U. S. Lead Insured

According to the preliminary statistics covering motion picture films consored by the Czechoslovak authorities during 1929, 274 dramas, 376 comedies (mostly short subjects), 94 educational and cultural films, and 203 news reels, a total of 947 films with a length of 924,650 meters, were imported into Czechoslovakia from the United States. This compares very favorably with 1928, when 803 American films having a total length of 887,130 meters were imported.

The second most important supplier of motion picture films to Czechoslovakia was Germany with 136 dramas, 72 comedies, 213 educational and cultural films, and 130 news reels, a total of 551 films with a length of 592,122 meters. Then follow, in order of importance, France with 186 films, Great Britain with 40, Soviet Russia with 35, Austria with 44 (mostly short cultural films), and other countries with 26.

The total number of films imported into Czechoslovakia and censored during 1929 was 1,829, with a total length of 1,840,164 meters, as compared with 1,610 films and a total length of 1,666,054 meters in 1928.

As regards the number of sound films imported into Czechoslovakia, it must be borne in mind that the first sound film was shown on Aug. 15, 1929, and that the number of theatres wired for sound-film reproduction increased. The imported sound films were almost exclusively of American origin and included 16 feature films having a total length of 43,410 meters, 25 news reels having a total length of 8,120 meters, and 33 short films (songs, music, etc.) having a length of 7,260 meters.

The American sound films censored for release during the latter half of 1929 totaled 74, having a total length of 58,790 meters. In addition, three German short sound films (two films by the Tobis company and one by Ufa) having a total length of 480 meters were shown.

As a rule, sound feature films are imported with silent versions, so that the distributors can sell them to theatres which are not yet equipped for sound film reproduction.

The condition of the Czechoslovak motion picture market during 1929 was favorable for American pictures, which not only maintained their prestige, but again gained ground against the German competition, which was rather severe in 1928. During 1929 Germany exported to Czechoslovakia a smaller number of dramas and comedies (208 films 452,000 meters in length in 1929 as compared with 224 films 508,000 meters in length in 1928), while the imports of such films from the United States increased considerably (650 films with a total length of 832,000 meters in 1929 as against 635 films with a total length of 713,000 meters in 1928). The competition of other countries and domestic production were minor factors.

The increased popularity of American films was to some extent due to the introduction of sound films. The Czechoslovak public received them with enthusiasm and filled the sound-equipped cinemas in spite of substantially increased entrance fees. The cinema owners are thus far satisfied with the financial results, there is very little competition at present, and the novelty attracts large crowds. The exhibitors point out that actual sound films are in great favor, whereas silent films with a synchronized version are regarded less favorably, being called "movies with phonograph accompaniment," and attract a much smaller public.

As stated above, 28 more theatres, including 10 in Prague, will shortly be equipped for sound films. Of course, most of these are the large first-run theatres, since the smaller houses can not as yet afford the expense of installing sound-reproducing apparatus. The further development will also force the second-rate cinemas to change over to sound films, owing to the fact that the American production is largely devoted to sound films and that the present high prices for silent films are increasing as a result of the shortage beginning to be manifest on the local market.

Although one American make of sound apparatus is leading the market and is considered the best, the German Klangfilm apparatus is second in importance, owing to its low price.

The plans of the Czechoslovak film producers are as yet rather indefinite, the more so since domestic film companies do not wish to invest much money in silent pictures under present circumstances. It is expected that the cooperation between the domestic and foreign film producing companies will be extended, particularly with a view of turning out Czech sound films, since there is no sound film studio in Czechoslovakia.

The domestic film producers are handicapped greatly by a lack of properly equipped studios, there being at present only one regular studio. Recently an effort was made to create a joint movement for the purpose of erecting a modern studio which could also serve for sound film production. Since private financial means are not adequate, a government subsidy would be sought. To date, the project is very indefinite and has not proceeded beyond a general discussion.

The Czechoslovak government does not appear to have plans inimical to American motion picture interests, nor is there any prospect for an early change in the present situation. No action was taken by the Czechoslovak government on the film law which was drafted in 1928 for the purpose of introducing a quota system on foreign films; the domestic film producers are showing no further interest, and as the distributors and the theatre owners were never very enthusiastic, it may be assumed that the bill has been abandoned.

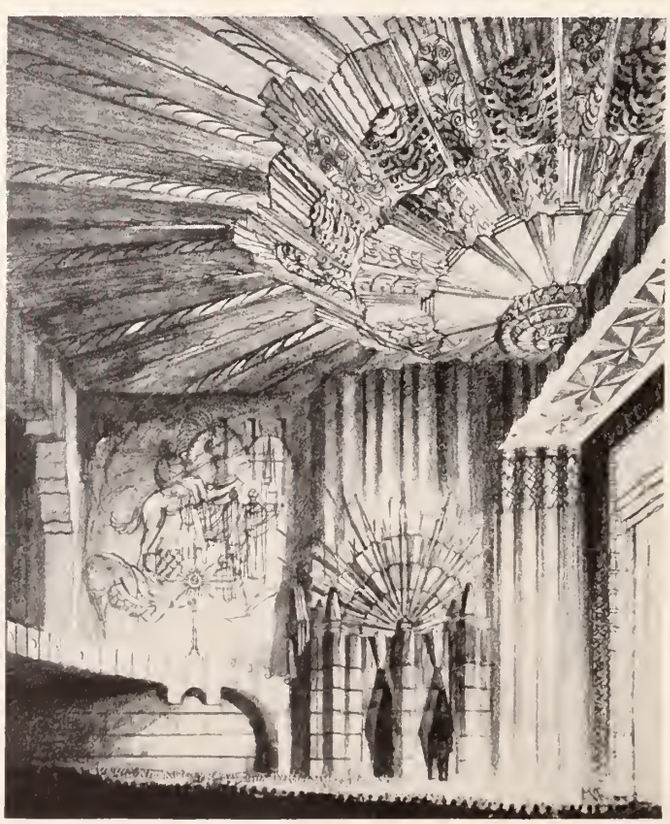
White Glass for New Effects



An Innovation With Which the Fox, Spokane, Proposes to Experiment As a Decorative Motif for a New Modernistic Theatre in the Pacific Northwest

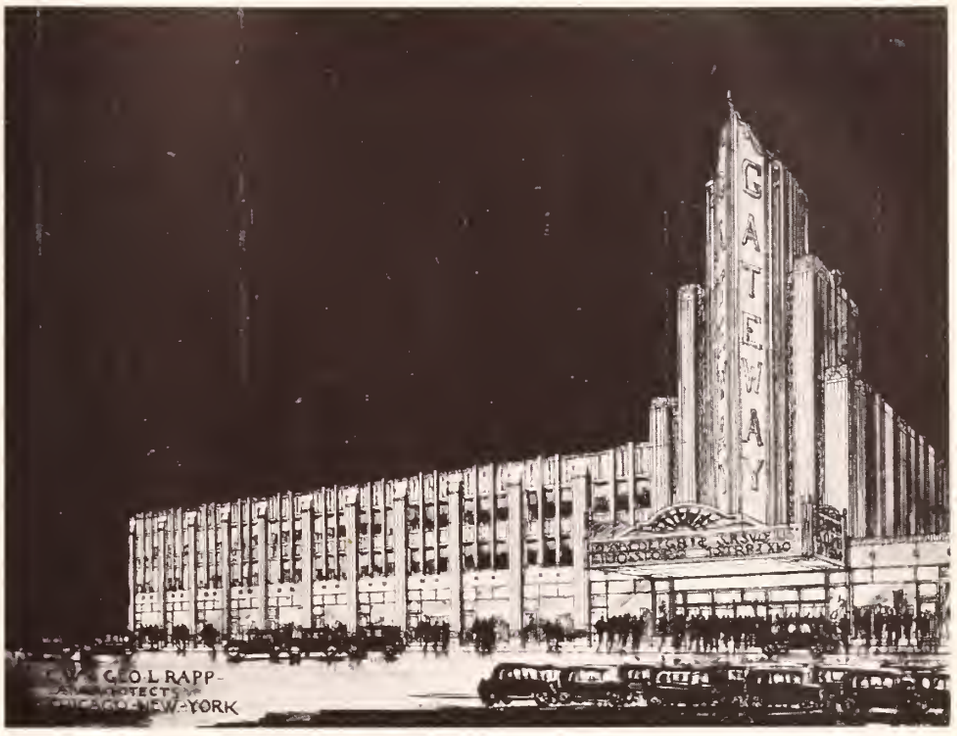
SPOKANE—New uses of marble, metal and glass, particularly white glass, in theatre construction together with innovations in exterior effects are to characterize the Fox Spokane to be built here.

The exterior is to be treated, as H. B. Franklin describes it, "with frankness of profile and material." Marble and metal will be utilized in the first story and concrete above, with carefully placed detail which will comply with the finished form of the structure. Ten decorative panels on the exterior of the building will commemorate what the circuit considers the ten greatest films ever produced.

A series of large windows on Monroe Street will reveal from the street a view of the lounge, and of the ceiling of the foyer. The display sign will revolve upon the corner of the theatre, like a modernistic lighthouse, topped with flashing jewel lights.

One grand foyer, running from Sprague Ave. to First Ave. will have a staircase which ascends to the lounge, which is in reality a mezzanine to the foyer. The design is modern, with the use of white glass illumination. The ornamentation will be in bright colors, but emphasizing black. The balcony will be reached from the lounge by an easy ramp. The railing of the stairway is to be of etched glass and ornamental silver.

The interior of the theatre as the architect envisions it. The decorative scheme will be preaominantly black, livened by brighter colors.



The interior of the auditorium will be approximately 120' feet square, with a shallow balcony which will afford full sight of the orchestra and give those occupying gallery seats the feeling of being a part of the main audience.

The problem of the proper acoustics is believed solved after the manner of the treatment evolved in the major studios, where, whenever possible, the walls are draped. Beautiful and heavy drapes will cover the walls of the Spokane.

The proscenium arch is designed to be a center of interest with strength of detail. Flanking it will be the organ grilles and the exits, all treated in the modern manner. Over the center of the arch will be a sunburst composed of colored glass in modern masses, indirectly lighted from behind, and incorporating a ventilating grille of unusual pattern. Radiating from the sunburst will be a great fan of bold colors. The whole design will combine an impression of restfulness.

Robert C. Reamer, Seattle architect, has developed the plans for this unique theatre.

Add to Theatre As Neighborhood Grows; New Slant

This architectural study of the new Gateway, Chicago, shows maximum expansion possibilities of the theatre. The unit, as it now stands, does not include the store fronts to the left of the theatre entrance.

CHICAGO—Publix set a new style for its neighborhood houses in the construction here of the Gateway, located on the northwest side of Chicago. The theatre, which seats 2,000, was opened June 27. Other neighborhood houses to be constructed will be patterned after the general plan of the Gateway.

The house differs from other large Publix units here in that in two particulars it has been designed as much for the future expansion of the neighborhood in which it is located as for its immediate requirements. The original theatre unit now in use does not include the store fronts shown in the architect's drawing. Publix, however, has acquired title to the Lawrence Avenue property adjoining the theatre entrance so that, with the expansion of the neighborhood, ten store units may be built onto the present theatre building without interruption of the theatre's functioning. These units may be three stories in height and may be added in separate groups as well as in a block of ten, as the commercial growth of the neighborhood warrants.

Large Stage Eliminated

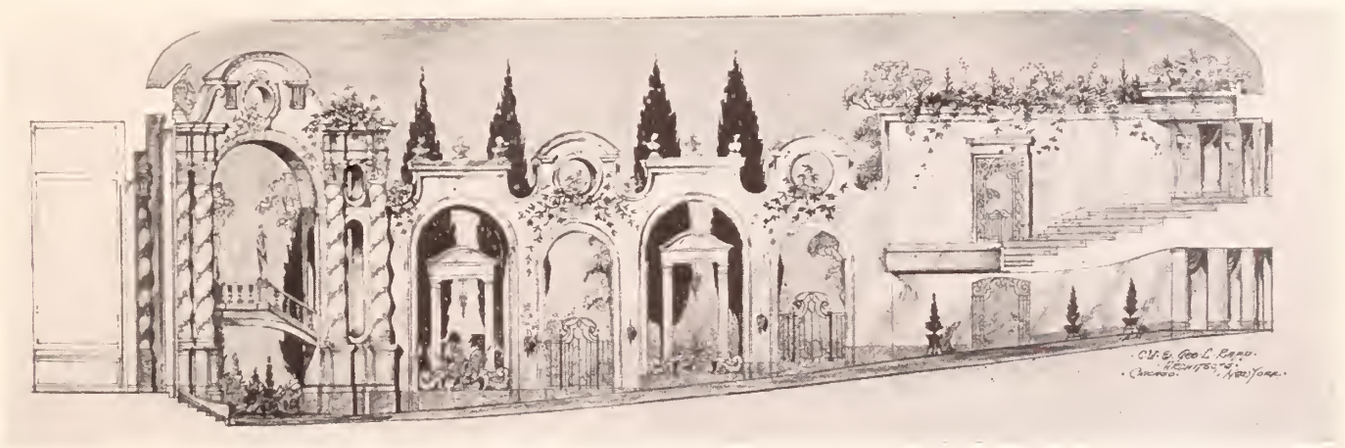
A second interesting provision for future requirements to be found in the Gateway is the elimination of a large stage. The stage space at present provides only for the screen and sound room, as the house will be conducted initially on an all-talking program exclusively. If, in the future, the theatre's patronage warrants a change in the policy to include stage presentations, a full-size stage can be constructed at moderate cost and without encountering construction problems of any kind.

This has been made possible by acquisition of additional property at the rear of the auditorium. At the outset it will be utilized for parking space for the theatre's patrons, but a portion of this space will always be immediately available when and if need for stage construction arises. The original sound room possesses a stage effect, with its sides and back decorated in a garden treatment, with statuary, etc.

The general design of the Gateway is Italian Renaissance, with an atmospheric type auditorium. It was designed by C. W. and George L. Rapp, architects of Chicago and New York.

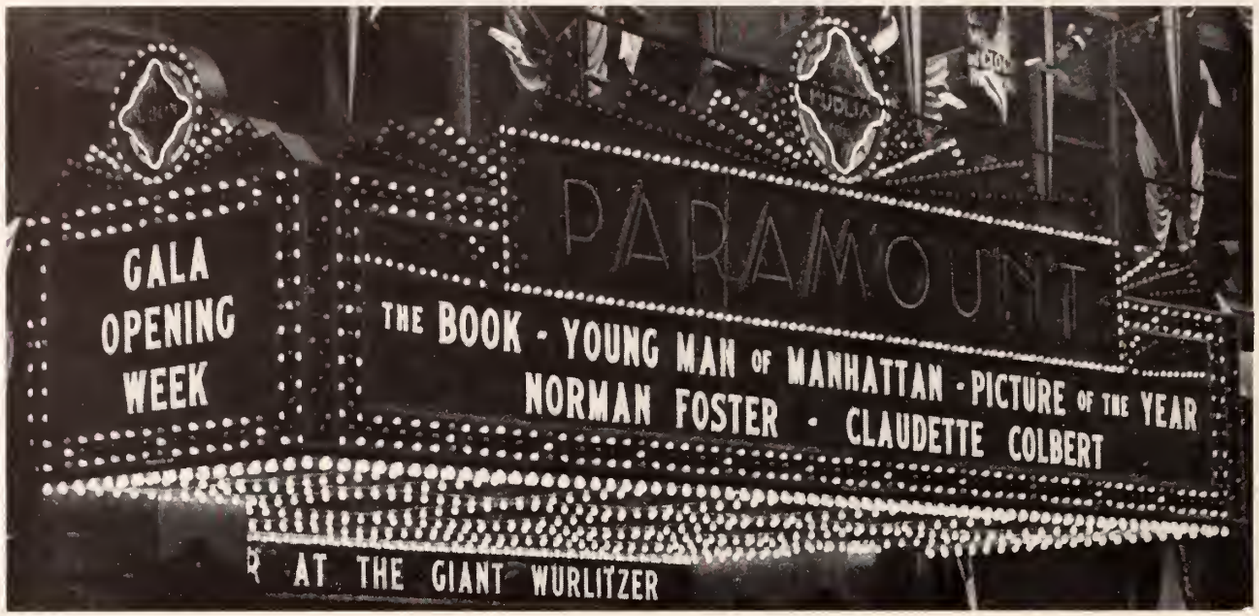
Barrel Vault Ceiling

The ticket lobby is lavishly decorated in imported colored marble. The grand lobby, likewise designed in marble, is 60 feet in length, 35 feet in width and 40 feet in height. Its ceiling is of a barrel vault style, semi- modernistically decorated. Walls are furnished with mirrors and have been finished in bronze and decorative painting. At the end and right side of the lobby, which runs diagonally to the foyer, is the grand staircase which turns within a large niche at the inner lobby to give access to the mezzanine foyer which, likewise, has been treated in the grand lobby manner. From the mezzanine level other flights of stairs lead to the balcony foyer, public rooms and tunnels.



The mirrors and etched ornaments which decorate the grand lobby side walls enhance a general color scheme of golden tone. Many of them are emphasized by their brilliant colors. The spirit of design is thoroughly modern here as in the balance of the fore part of the house where, as in the ticket lobby and individual foyers, painted canvas ceilings and painted wall ornaments are featured. In addition, specifically chosen furniture and bric-a-brac of brilliant colors and fabrics conform with their modernistic background.

Atmospheric Color



In the auditorium proper a sky effect has been so arranged that different hues and different atmospheric color effects are obtained. These effects originate at the floor and surround the entire auditorium. This innovation, unlike the conventional arrangements of sky effects, contributes to a definite illusion of a widened auditorium. Porticos, colonnades, trees, flowers and garden furniture play an important part in the side wall decoration scheme, as shown in the accompanying illustration.

On the main floor, in addition, are a number of small lounges, wash rooms, rest rooms and manager's offices. Rooms of this

Photographed at the opening of the Paramount, Providence. The illumination is furnished by 1,700 incandescents. Directly above the Publix trade-mark is a sign reading "Paramount" which is 38 feet high, one of the largest upright signs in New England.

An Old House Reconstructed

With Walls and Foundation to Play With, the Paramount at Providence Emerges as a Modern Theatre

PROVIDENCE—Coziness and intimacy are the keynotes Publix strived for and achieved in the new Paramount, which is the reconstructed Strand. Only the four walls and foundation of the old house were utilized for the new theatre. Marquee, lobby, interior posts and pillars have given way to the new order of things, all constructed with the double aim in view. The house seats 2,300. Of these, 1,350 are in the main auditorium and 950 in the two balconies.

In achieving the effect of intimacy, the designer has relied upon the width of the auditorium to help convey the impression sought. It has been discovered and proved by designers that width of auditorium adds to the feeling of intimacy with the stage, a psychological factor which is having an important influence on theatre construction.

This note is emphasized in the luxurious tapestried corridors, the subtly lighted auditorium, and the subdued velours which grace the stage itself. Colorful velour drapes of blue and white upon which are projected vari-colored lights during the organ prelude, help achieve the intimate effect. They supplant boxes, which have been eliminated.

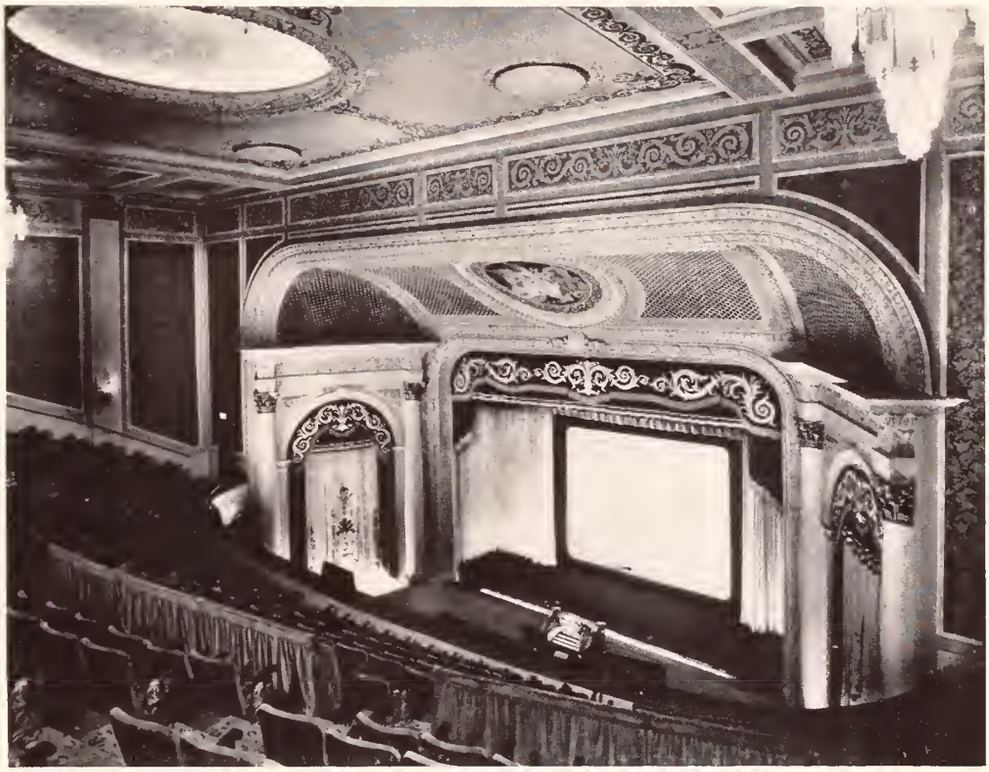
The lobby of the Paramount, showing "transparencies" used for exploitation of coming attractions. The color scheme here is gold with hangings of old rose.

An unusual feature is the hanging lamp shade in the center of the lobby, which surrounds a large center pillar where posters of coming attractions are in transparent effect. The ceiling is of irridescent gold. The electric fixture on the lobby pillar supplements four other light clusters hanging higher in the ceiling.

Cove lights, with chronium-plated reflectors, all major equipment, are used throughout the theatre. The screen is of fire-proof material, black-bordered, and capable of being extended to take care of the projection of any size film. For the present, however, regular size pictures will be shown.

With a depth of 35 feet the stage is unusually large and and is fully able to accommodate unit shows and vaudeville presentations. Such offerings, however, will not be attempted this summer, the theatre confining itself to pictures.

Handling of patrons is expedited at the new Paramount by a "money" box office, located on the sidewalk, and four roped lanes which afford direct passage to seats. The balcony is reached via a heavily-carpeted stairway which leads to corridors made comfortable by numerous easy chairs, divans and an occasional chaise lounge. Walls of the corridors are studded with portraits, illuminated with indirect lighting which sets off the mural design of old rose.



On the mezzanine floor is the cosmetic room, which serves also as a lounge. The men's lounge also is on the floor, which has old rose as a predominant note and fixtures of silver and gold.

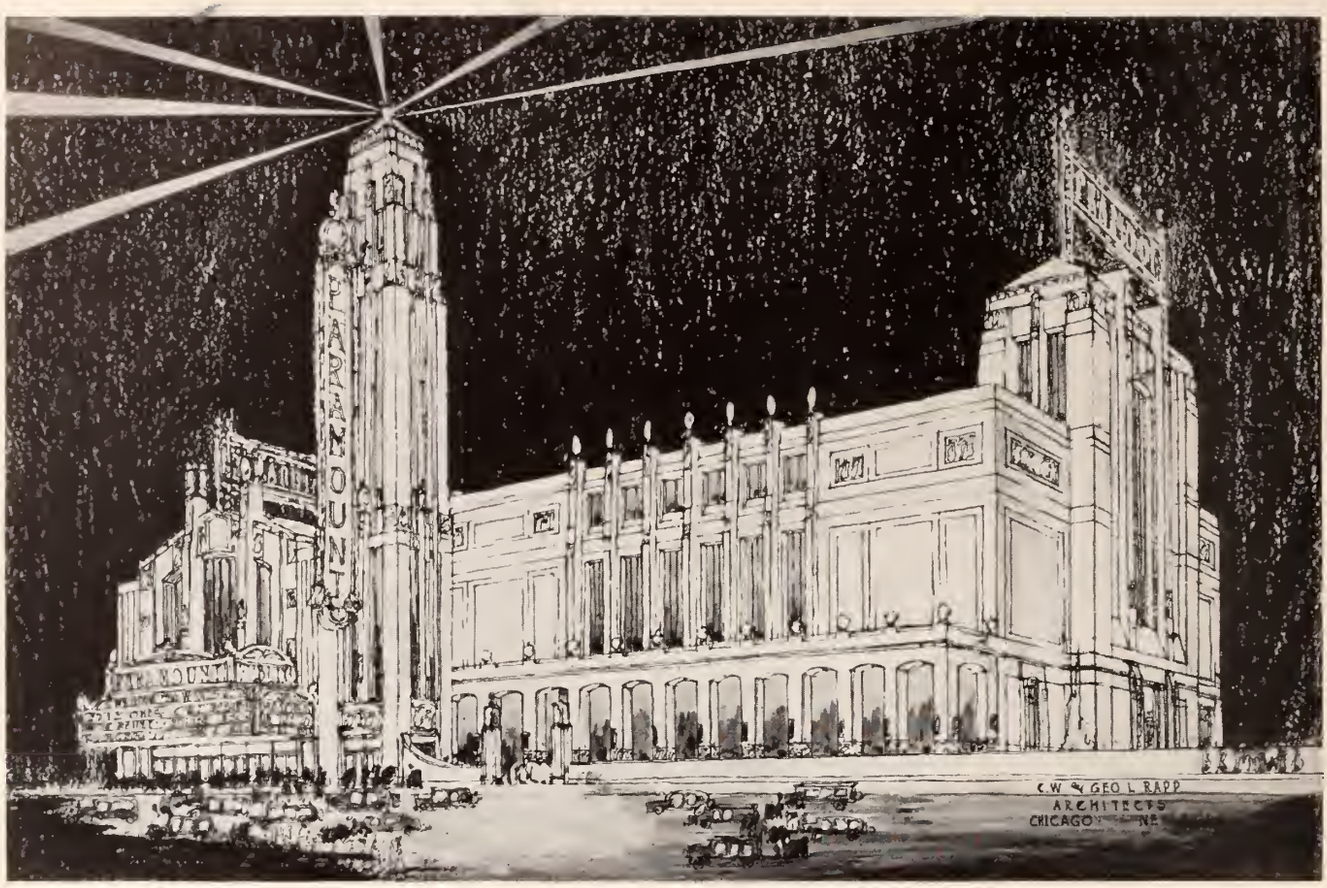
Green and red is the general color scheme of carpets and rugs throughout the theatre. Tapestries are of a rich, greenish mixture and these entirely cover the walls in the main auditorium and balconies. They combine beauty and usefulness, for they aid greatly in absorbing sound.

Tapestried backs for the chairs also are employed for the dual purpose of beautiful effect and the killing of reverberation. This method of handling the problem of acoustics was extended to the walls and ceiling which took four weeks to bring to their present state of development. A huge dome in the center of the building also is designed to aid acoustics. Other special features to improve sound have been embodied in construction of the house.

Sells Cooling Plant

The booth is equipped with sliding panels which can be closed in case of fire, confining the blaze to the projection room. The organ is of the elevator type, permitting it to be raised to the stage level for recitals, after which it is lowered into the well, out of sight of patrons. All transformers throughout the house have been changed and new grilles for the organ chambers installed.

This "shot" takes in the stage, Wurlitzer organ and portion of the balcony. At either side of the stage are two velour drapes of purple and white against which vari-colored lights are thrown during organlogue.



Close-up of the effective murals directly above the stage of this rebuilt theatre.

Outside the theatre, the lights are arranged in square effect, providing an arresting marquee. In addition to the sign overhanging the front of the house, used for billing of attractions, there is an additional name upright 38 feet high. This is said to be the largest sign in New England. The marquee has 1,700 bulbs, while the upright has 3,000 incandescents, concentrating enough brilliancy in light to make the theatre an attraction-getter at night.

The sound equipment was installed by Western Electric.

Strung across the top of the lobby, a bit back of the marquee, is a green sign with "frosted" trimmings which informs the patron that at all times the temperature in the new theatre is 15 degrees cooler than the street.

All construction was supervised by Julius Convisor, of Boston.

Built With Moving Stairs

Escalator Designed as Feature of the Proposed Paramount in Chicago— Stage Lobby for Standees an Innovation

CHICAGO.—New features of interior and exterior lighting, an auditorium embodying revolutionary effects, moving stairways, and a stage lobby for the entertainment of standees, are among innovations which will be introduced at the Paramount, to be built here by Publix. The theatre, it is said, will be the most colorful and picturesque of the Publix houses in Chicago.

A series of luxurious entrance lobbies will lead from the main portal to the auditorium. The first lobby will be equipped with stage-like platforms for lobby entertainment, and with miscellaneous feature booths. This grand lobby will give onto the grand rotunda, which will be a hall of mammoth size and proportions.

In it will be found illuminated waterfalls and pools, sparkling fountains and garden features with retiring alcoves. In addition, it will contain children's rooms comprising completely equipped playgrounds and nurseries. Amusement features for adults which, the theatre owners assert, have never before been employed by amusement house operators, will also be located in the grand rotunda.

The hall will be equipped with moving stairways giving access to water-side lanes, bridges, garden nooks and other picturesque lobby innovations.

The grand rotunda will give onto an orchestra foyer which will be elaborately decorated and furnished, and thence into the auditorium proper, which will have a seating capacity of 3,200.

The architects, C. W. & George L. Rapp of Chicago and New York, state that the plan of this auditorium will be totally different from that of any other in existence. Its unusual design will be based on reproductions of seaside and tropical garden features. It will provide dimly lit promenades screened from auditorium seats; electrical dispays, sunset effects, features in action, and long corridor vistas through tropical garden settings, in which will be imported tropical birds. All of these will play a very important part in the color scheme of this unusual theatre.

Equipped for Wide Film

One of the largest stages will be provided, equipped with latest devices for sound picture reproduction. A large-size screen, suitable for wide film use, will be provided. Elevating platforms and movable stage equipment will be installed and elaborate stage shows will be presented as a regular policy.

Obviously, color will play an important part in the interior execution. It will be matched on the exterior by illuminating effects. The Paramount will be of an unusual modernized treatment of Italian and French Baroche, introducing other style features of modern and semi-modern motifs.

The exterior will be finished entirely in white materials, and will be one of vast illuminating possibilities. An enormous tower adjoining the main entrance will be brilliantly illuminated at night time, and will serve as an electric flasher for signs, searchlights, beacon and decorative lights. A myriad of additional lighting effects will follow the outlines of the building and the whole will be bathed in floodlights. The tower will be so arranged as to be visible from all parts of Chicago.

The site for the Paramount is at Sixty-Third and Wallace Sts., near a busy south side intersection. The main entrance will be a grand portal, 70 feet in width, on Sixty-Third St.

An unusual feature of the Paramount will be a large automobile parking space which will be maintained at the rear of the theatre. It will accommodate 3,000 automobiles and will be brilliantly illumi-

Spotlight! IMMEDIATELY appears a strong, clean-cut, perfectly focused spot. The Edison MAZDA* Prefocus Base Spotlight Lamp has ended the difficulties that have always attended the adjustment of spotlights. It is in focus at the start, and it CAN'T get out of focus.

No longer need the harassed electrician despair over wobbly equipment whose mirrors refuse to retain any adjustment. No longer need the mirrors—and half the light with them—be discarded to make adjustments easier. It is no longer necessary for a player to work in a «double» spot, half the brightness of which is lost in a second or outside ring of light. For with this new lamp the mirror never requires readjustment, and a sharp, bright spot is available when it is needed.

Most progressive manufacturers are ready to furnish equipment designed to use this new lamp. If you are not familiar with this valuable improvement, write to Engineering Department, Edison Lamp Works of General Electric Company, Nela Park, Cleveland, Ohio. Stage Shows in Picture Theatres Out, Says Roxy

Foremost Exponent of Presentations Predicts Houses Will Be Smaller and Run All-Film Programs

SMALLER theatres, more luxuriously appointed and with better acoustics, are visualized for the future by S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel. Although he probably is the foremost exponent of stage shows, Roxy believes the day is coming when picture houses will show films exclusively. Roxy believes that vaudeville will stage a comeback and that wide angle pictures will be adopted. Television, he believes, will be a helpful adjunct to the theatre.

Roxy's views on potential developments in the industry were outlined at length at the recent Universal sales convention, where he conducted an open forum for the assembled sales force, expressing, in response to questioning, his views on various phases of the industry.

In response to a query as to his opinion of what the theatre of the future will be "five, ten or 15 years from today," Roxy replied:

Expects Wide Angle Film

"That is a difficult question to answer. I am of the opinion that the theatre of tomorrow, so far as motion pictures are concerned, will be decidedly different from the theatre of today. I think the day of merging the so-called presentation idea with the picture is past, and that the pictures will to be able to stand on their own. The house will not be as large, but will be built more luxuriously and have better acoustics. I think the day of the so-called dark house with the screen and all that stuff will be done away with. I think you are going to see wide angle production and wide angle pictures. I think you are going to have purely a motion picture entertainment without any other form of entertainment that may go with it.

"I am firmly convinced that that is coming, especially as the universal thing. I think the theatre of tomorrow will not be as large but more luxurious and confined entirely to motion pictures, as far as you are concerned. I think, on the other hand, that entertainment is coming back, and very strongly in another form. I think that variety, that is, vaudeville, in a much finer way will have a tremendous field in the next five years.

"So, there will be two distinct fields of entertainment, the motion picture on the one side, and the rehabilitation of what is known as variety, but in a much greater and different form."

Shorts a Problem

Short product, comedy and especially the newsreel which fit in with the feature presentation, "is greatly desired sometimes, but it doesn't always work out that way," Roxy declared.

"We are subject, of course, to what we get in the newsreel and in the short product," he said. "Unfortunately, the time that we can allow a presentation or a show is limited, because if we make the show too long, naturally our turnover will not be as great, and we can't use as many short products and as much of the news weekly as we would like to.

"It has always been a great source of trouble to us to be able to fit in, as it were, the feature picture within a space of two hours and ten minutes. Most feature presentations take from 65 to 95 minutes, which gives us a short time to put into play the things that are available.

"Let me give you an illustration of how that works sometimes. The record picture to date at the Roxy (and I believe it is a world's record) was 'The Cockeyed World.' When we got all through running 'The Cockeyed World' and using a very short magazine, we found we had four minutes left for entertainment. We had to use a big symphony orchestra, a line group, and principals in four minutes. We got away with it. We had to think fast. I don't know how many of you saw the presentation of 'The Cockeyed World.'

"We evolved a scheme whereby we painted a world that was cockeyed, literally. Then we used for the first time in history of presentation five projection machines simultaneously on two surfaces; one was a scrim and the other was a rear projection screen.

"We culled from the magazines of the past little excerpts that we thought might portray the life of today. You saw airplanes hopping off, you saw trains rushing, you saw steamships ploughing, you saw explosions—and they were all superimposed on this screen.

"Of course, they had to be so arranged that they had a dramatic value. They simply couldn't be put there without some thought. Then, behind this scrim, we arranged our ballet corps and our little group. The ballet corps and the line group created agitation like the letter carrier, the street cleaner, the postman, the hustle and bustle, while the girls kept doing this all the time (indicating) to represent the motion of time. In the rear we presented a little climax of the troops marching home.

"We created a sort of optical illusion of the third dimension by cross-lighting a third projection. The motion behind with the orchestra playing created a very remarkable effect. In fact, I can tell you gentlemen that the results of that presentation, that little effort, was so great that we received letters from all over the world about it.

"There is no definite plan, no set plan to use short subjects. Unfortunately, we cannot use as many as we would like to, for the simple reason that there isn't enough time."

Big Field for Remakes

Roxy said he believes there is a field of big possibilities in the remaking as talkers of great silent successes. Speaking on the value of brand names, he said:

"I have always been a believer in institutions. I believe an institutional name is more valuable than anything else we have in this industry. I believe that is what we need to obtain the greatest measure of success. After all, this is not a sprint, it is a marathon. You must build up the institution so that when they come and see your trademark, it will mean a certain quality, and they will go blindly to the theatre to see the picture instead of coming to see the picture at the theatre. Do you see the point?

"Institutions cannot be licked. Every great success that we have, whether in the picture business or any other business, is based on institutional value, institutional foundation."

Wide Screen Coming

Declaring that he wished he knew what is the future of the wide screen, Roxy declared that he does know "that eventually we have got to come to it."

"We looked forward to the big screen even before we opened the Roxy Theatre, and had equipped our theatre for wide angle projection. But once more that will have to be determined by the getting together of the different interests and agreeing on something that they can standardize on.

"I think that television like every other progressive thing that has come to us, when it finds its level and its proper place will be a decided adjunct and a help rather than anything else. I think this is a good time to tell you men this: Don't fear anything that is progressive. I can't help but think back to the time when radio first came into the picture field. There was a narrow-minded view that it was going to hurt the motion picture business. Today we could hardly run our motion picture theatres without the aid of radio."

Telling truth is the best form of advertising to use in exploiting pictures, Roxy believes, pointing out there is a peculiar psychology about it and "You never can go wrong telling the truth." Roxy believes the theatre is the showman's leading advertising medium. "If you are telling the truth."

They build PROFIT FOR YOUR HOUSE!

TODAY it's good sound plus good seats! The talkies have placed metropolitan and neighborhood theatres on a more even basis than ever before. No longer does the small house have to compete with so many "presentations," "jazz bands," and "vaudeville novelties." Nowadays, the battle for profits depends largely on the comfort you offer to your patrons. That is why Heywood-Wakefield seats will pay big dividends at your box office. They have been developed to give luxurious, restful comfort—the kind that builds "IT" and "PROFIT" for your house. . . . . Publix, Warner Brothers, West Coast, Roxy, and scores of others have specified Heywood-Wakefield seats because they have "IT"—patron appeal—box office pull. These smartly and comfortably designed chairs will do the same for your house, too. Rear Projection Ready for Debut PROJECTION from the rear of the screen is the revolutionary principle embodied in the new Trans-Lux sound system just placed on the market. It is the invention of P. N. Ferber, who has spent ten years developing the equipment. The equipment, which is portable, weighs but 40 pounds.

Better definition, minimizing of distortion to give an effect of third dimension, reduction of eye strain, reduction of fire hazard, use of less current and daylight projection are among the advantages claimed for the new Trans-Lux equipment.

The new apparatus was demonstrated recently at the Assembly Theatre, New York, where a number of subjects from several different distributors were shown. Emphasis was laid upon the clear definition of color subjects shown. While no price had been set upon the equipment at the time, Ferber states it will undersell other sound and projection equipments by a wide margin.

For the present, he states, activities are to be concentrated in the non-theatrical field, although the company anticipates equipping of a number of small theatres. Ferber estimates a potential market of 800,000 non-theatrical accounts, among them 300,000 churches and 250,000 schools, Y.M.C.A. buildings and other non-theatrical establishments which show films. He anticipates considerable sales resistance in the theatre field, due to the strong position now held by the big electrics.

How Trans-Lux rear projection works. Backstage view of the standard projection booth, located 15 feet behind the screen. The principle is one foot of throw for every foot width of picture. Thus, the 15 foot throw illustrated projects a picture 15 feet wide.

The Trans-Lux rear projection screen is one of the units of the new equipment. It is 12 by 15 feet, which the company claims is ample size for a theatre seating up to 2,000. The theatre may be illuminated to any degree the manager decides is best for his patrons. With this screen, the theatre may be lighted to a degree which at all times enables patrons to read their programs, thus doing away with the necessity of ushers' flashlights, and reducing dangers attendant upon a dark auditorium, it is claimed.

The initial Trans-Lux daylight screen was developed and completed early in 1927, in time for installation in the Roxy, New York, where it has functioned ever since. The Roxy on occasion has used rear projection in connection with stage and screen effects.

The Trans-Lux rear projection daylight screen installed on the stage of the Assembly Theatre, New York. The screen is 12 by 15 feet and is declared to be of ample size for a theatre seating up to 2,000.

Uses Wide Angle Lens

The system uses a wide angle lens, which makes possible a picture with only one foot behind the screen for every foot width of picture. Thus, a 15 foot picture requires only fifteen feet from the lens to the screen. This contrasts with a throw of about three and one-half times this distance or 53 feet, which would be required through use of an ordinary lens.

The reproducing equipment is placed in front of the screen, rather than behind it as is common to other systems. This, Ferber claims, contributes to even distribution of the sound. Other systems, however, have experimented with various locations for the amplifiers, and contend that the behind-the-screen location is best. This, of course, is impractical with the Trans-Lux system, because it would place the equipment between the lens and the screen.

Reduction of fire rates by at least 50 per cent. is anticipated by Ferber for theatres using rear projection. The overhead throw, he declares, constitutes fire and panic menace. In addition to cutting the fire hazards, the new equipment, he says, prevents the audience from knowing a fire is under way, should one occur.

Clarity of Trans-Lux projection is obtained through projection of a yellow ray of light upon a screen of green or blue. The combination produces white, Ferber explains.

IN ORDER to discuss properly some of the transitions in theatre lighting, a brief review of the older forms of light and control may be in order.

Naturally, all theatre lighting developments began with the stage and it is to the nineteenth century that the first evolution in this lighting belongs. More progress was made in this period than in any preceding era, and we are all, of course, familiar with the stupendous progress of late years.

In the early theatres, general lighting was dependent upon the chandelier studded with candles, and a row of candles along the edge of the stage constituted the first footlights. This system prevailed for over 100 years, and was then replaced by the oil lamp, which was used in much the same way.

In London, in 1803, an attempt was made to use gas for lighting the stage of the Lyceum theatre, and this led to further development in Paris in 1821. Numerous objections to the use of the gas lamp existed because of the fire odors and flickering of the flame. The introduction of the lamp chimney improved this condition greatly.

The Birth of Color Lighting

In 1816, another form of light came into use. This was called the limelight, and was produced by bringing a piece of lime to a high temperature, making it incandescent. This type of light came into general use about 1850 and since the source of light was so concentrated, it was soon adopted for use as a spotlight. Color effects were produced with the aid of this limelight, but did not come into general use until the introduction of the incandescent gas mantle. Henry Irving, a noted English actor of the late nineteenth century, was first to use color lighting with any marked success.

In 1846, an interesting experiment was made in Paris with an electric arc placed at the focus of a parabolic reflector to project the beam of light on a screen. From that day, experiments were continually conducted to improve the electrical lights for use in the theatre. In 1879 it was noticed that the priceless paintings in the foyer of the Paris Opera House were being slowly destroyed by gas fumes, and for the first time in the history of the theatre, electric lights were considered for general illumination.

Section through entire building showing position of coves and main luminaries

The advantages and possibilities of lighting a theatre by electricity were clearly exhibited at the Electro exposition at Munich in 1882. A small model theatre, completely lighted by electricity, was erected in the Crystal Palace at this exposition. Both arc lamps and incandescent lamps were employed, and, for the first time a diffused light was used for general illumination. A number of arc lamps were suspended above the ceiling and the light projected through circular panels of ornamental glass. This method of illumination was extremely effective, as the unsightly lamps were concealed and a wonderfully soft diffusion of light produced. The walls were illuminated with incandescent lamps arranged to form artistic designs.

The stage was lighted entirely with incandescent lamps, arranged with screens that could be mechanically operated to change from one color to another.

In this same year, installations of electric lighting were made in the Savoy theatre at London and the Bijou theatre in Boston. The first New York theatre to install incandescent lighting was the People's theatre on the Bowery, in 1885.

The introduction of electric lighting in the theatre greatly increased the opportunity to obtain flexibility in the control of lighting effects. In the early theatre the lighting circuits were so arranged that the stage could be flooded with any one color at any time. This arrangement, however, did not allow blending of colors. To accomplish this, a device called the dimmer was brought into use. This allowed various intensities of any one color or a combination of various colors. But even greater flexibility was demanded in the lighting of the theatre, and as a result individual floodlights, spotlights, and large and small strip lighting units were used extensively. This arrangement has been greatly developed in recent years and today individual control of each of the units is common practice.

Stage Lighting First Use

The early developments in lighting the theatre were made for the purpose of improving the stage lighting. The increased flexibility of light control brought about the use of elaborate colored scenic effects on the stage. However, it was soon discovered that flexible light control in the auditorium of the theatre was also desirable. In this way the same elaborate color effects and variety in intensity of illumination could be obtained throughout the auditorium as well as on the stage. Thus, an atmosphere adapted to the scene on the stage envelopes the entire audience and brings them into harmony with the actors. This is very effective in dramatic and musical productions, but of course cannot be used while motion pictures are being produced on the screen. It is used in movie theatres only during elaborate vaudeville acts and orchestral features.

Aiding Decorative Scheme

The use of color lighting in the theatre has enabled the architect to carry out extensive and elaborate decorative schemes. Decoration alone may be dull and lifeless, but illuminated with warm light it springs to life, and new beauties and charm are found in the decorative contrasts. An architect never designs two buildings alike, especially where elaborate architecture and ornaments are used, such as in public buildings, churches, and theatres. This is essential to avoid monotony and the principle applies to the lighting effects in a building as well as to the architecture. In the present day we have a great variety of types of architecture and ornaments which makes the field of illumination almost without limits. The movie theatre is becoming more elaborately decorated and the value of well designed lighting for utility and decoration as well as to provide comfort for the patrons is appreciated more and more by those interested in this industry. There are many types of theatres and in each theatre special problems occur, such as mural decorations, color and material used in decoration, seating arrangements, and other peculiar conditions that might affect the lighting scheme. For this reason it is quite necessary that a paper on theatre lighting should deal with specific examples rather than theatres in general. It is hoped that through these examples other ways for effectively using the electric light in a theatre may be suggested.

The Byrd theatre at Richmond, Virginia, recently completed, typifies very well the trend in motion picture theatres and illustrates modern practice in the matter of theatre illumination. Although this theatre is located some distance from the center of the city, it has ELECTRIC potential may be produced by several means other than by the chemical action present in dry and storage batteries. However, before we can progress into such devices or machinery it is necessary to consider several subjects which are linked with such devices so as to explain the function of these units. Furthermore, one must become familiar with the symbols of elements employed in electrical circuits and we shall devote the foreport of this lesson to the components of the elementary electric circuit.

We are, by this time, acquainted with the fact that the battery, be it of the dry or the wet type is a source of electric voltage, of electric potential. The illustrations designated as Figures 12 to 15 inclusive are those of batteries of the dry type. While it is true that these symbols are to be found in electrical circuits, they represent the elementary picturization of such devices. The wet or storage battery would be shown in a different form.

There is, however, a different form of illustration which is common for all types of batteries. As a matter of fact, it represents potential secured from batteries, irrespective of type of form. This symbol is shown in Figure 16, a short heavy line parallel to a long thin line. Two such lines are general understood to be the equivalent of a cell, sometimes of a battery. A number of such parallel lines as in Figure 16A represent a bank of batteries. Either form may be employed.

With respect to polarity, it is customary to represent the positive pole of the battery or the bank of batteries with the long thin line and the negative pole of the battery or the bank of batteries with the short heavy line as shown in the illustration.

The contents of previous lessons stated that when such a battery is connected to an electric circuit we have a flow of electrons. Since the polarity of the battery is fixed and remains constant, it is natural that the flow of electrons in the electric circuit will be continuous in one direction. Such a circuit is known as a continuous current or direct current or D. C. circuit. All battery circuits are D. C. circuits.

The Electric Circuit

In order that we have current flow in a D. C. circuit, it is necessary that the circuit is connected to the source of potential be complete. If this source of potential is a battery, it is necessary that the circuit be complete. We make this reference to the battery because all D. C. circuits are not limited to battery types of potential sources. By complete circuit we mean that a path be provided for the flow of electrons.

It is necessary at this time to dwell to a little greater length upon the significance of a complete circuit relative to a path for the electrons. An electric circuit is devised to perform a certain function. In order to perform this function properly the current flow or the electronic flow in that circuit must be at a definite rate. If we express this condition in a different manner, the current flow must be of a definite quantity. Insufficient current will interfere with the proper function and excessive current flow will do the same.

Now the statement relative to a complete circuit being necessary in order to have current flow encompasses the above mentioned three conditions, but only on of these three conditions is correct. Thus one must differentiate between a complete circuit and the correct circuit. In many instances the correct circuit will be found to be the one which is not complete. This will receive more attention later in the text.

Current Flow in Electric Circuit

The current flow or the electronic flow in an electric circuit is governed by two factors. First, the source of potential and second, the remaining component parts of the electric circuit. (Refer to Conductors and Non-Conductors in Lesson 3.) Let us assume a constant value of potential and consider the remaining parts of the circuits. It is not necessary at this time to mention specific parts or forms of parts, i. e., the exact units in the circuit.

We understand one condition wherein the parts located in the circuit and connected to the source of voltage are such that the magnitude of the electric current is correct. Incorrect selection of the parts of the electric circuit exclusive of the battery will interfere with the correct flow of current; that is, it may be excessive or insufficient.

Lesson Seven

The Projectionists' Round Table resumes with this issue of THE SHOWMAN.

The Rider series has been absent from the columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS because of the absence of the author from New York and the loss of the manuscript in transit from Los Angeles.

THE NEWS regrets this unfortunate occurrence and now informs its readers that the series will continue weekly and without interruption from now on.

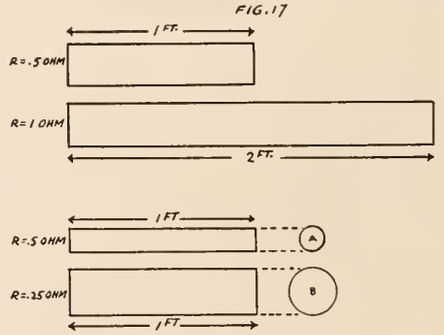
A defect created in one of the parts of the electric circuit exclusive of the battery will likewise interfere with the correct flow of current, resulting in either excessive or insufficient current depending upon the nature of the defect. And last but by far not the least, a break or an interruption of the circuit in the form of an "open" will also interfere with the correct current flow, in this case causing a great reduction in current flow, generally no current.

It might be of value at this time to carry on in the discussion of breaks in electric circuits. The general understanding of a break in an electric circuit is total interruption of current flow. While this is true in the majority of cases, numerous instances have come to light wherein interruption of the circuit because of a break did not cause total cessation of current flow. To be exact, there can be no interruption of an electric circuit because everything, even air, is a conductor and would, therefore, allow the passage of an infinitesimal value of current, but such small values of current are useless and the circuit is classed as open.

However, to get back to the original subject, quite a few electric circuits employed an sound projection systems are closed by means of terminal blocks, an arrangement of connecting terminals upon a support. An interruption of the metallic link between two such terminals does not at all times open the circuit because of conduction through the support upon which are mounted the two connecting terminals. These terminals are close together and cracks in the material or deposits of lint and dust close the circuit. It is true that the magnitude of current is much lower than normal, but the circuit still displays the effect of being closed.



Voltage and Current

If a voltage secured from a battery or some other device capable of producing a similar potential is applied to an electric circuit which is normally closed, current will flow through that circuit. Assuming a unit value of potential, say one volt, the value of current which will flow through that circuit is dependent upon the conducting properties of the remaining parts of the circuit.

This property of these parts is expressed as the resistance of the parts or the resistance of the circuit. The condition of electrical resistance of a wire is, as has been stated (See Lesson 3, Conductors and Non-Conductors) a function of the electronic affinity of the atom constituting the material. If the resistance is high it may be said that the rate of electronic flow is low, therefore the current flow will be low. If the resistance of the conductor is low, it may be said that the rate of electronic flow will be high and the current flow will be high.

Assuming a definite atomic structure for a finite length of conductor, the resistance of the conductor is proportional to length and inversely proportional to its cross section. That is to say, if we have two lengths of the same conductor, A being one foot long and B being two feet long and if the resistance of A is .5 ohm, the resistance of B will be one ohm, since B is twice as long as A. See Figure 17. On the other hand, if we have two conductors of the same length as in Figure 17A, but the cross-section of B is twice that of A, the resistance of B will be one-half of that of A. The above relation may be expressed in the formula

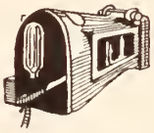
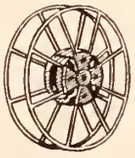
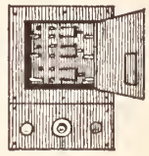
$$R = \frac{k\,L}{S}$$







Where R is the resistance, k is a constant depending upon the material of the conductor, L is the length in centimeters, S is the cross section of the conductor in centimeters squared. R in this case is expressed in michroms.

The Ohm

The above introduces us to the term ohm. The reason for the property of resistance possessed by a conductor has been explained. It is, however, necessary to provide a numerical

Australia on A Construction Spree; Market for U. S. Equipment Grows

America Leads Now, But Chances for Additional Businesses Are Considered Good—Germany and England, Chief Competitors

Countries of the East and Africa are developing into important markets for equipment of American manufacture, it is pointed out in an exhaustive analysis of those countries just completed by the Department of Commerce at Washington.

Hundreds of theatres are operating with antiquated projectors, most of which, the survey reveals, have outlived their usefulness and are ready for replacement.

The situation and the competitive factors which enter into analyses of these territories are covered fully in this Government report, based on data gathered by Government representatives overseas and compiled by Nathan D. Golden, assistant chief of the Motion Picture Division of the Commerce Department.

AUSTRALIA

From Report by Charles F. Baldwin, Assistant Trade Commissioner, Sydney

The great popularity of motion picture entertainment in Australia and the consequent rapid increase in the number of cinemas have made that country an important market for projecting machines and other motion picture equipment. Throughout Australia the construction of new theatres is progressing at a rather astonishing rate, and in each new house emphasis is being placed upon modern equipment and advanced ideas of exhibition. In many characteristics the Australian market is similar to the American, and the growing tendency to emulate the American example in theatre management increases that resemblance.

Australia's cinema equipment demands are supplied principally by the United States, Germany and England, in order of importance, and by domestic manufacturers. Australian manufacturers compete mainly in the trade in accessories and projecting machines. In the latter they have been very successful and are offering strenuous competition to imported projectors.

Three projectors of American make are the most widely used imported machines in Australia. Other foreign machines on the market are the Goertz and the Ernemann, of German manufacture, and the Kalee, made in England.

Projectors of Australian manufacture are the Cummings and Wilson (C & W) and the Garvey. The latter is not an important competitor, but the C & W machine is selling well and offers the most effective competition to imported projectors. Assisted by a protective import duty, Cummings and Wilson (Ltd.), has developed a machine which is rapidly gaining in popularity, not only because of its Australian manufacture, but also because its price is lower than that of the imported machines. It is reported that 200 C & W projectors were sold during 1929. Selection of these machines by several large new theatres, including the Regent in Sydney and the Auditorium in Melbourne, is a further commentary on their popularity.

In addition to theatrical machines, the following non-professional projectors are sold in Australia: Two American machines, Pathé, and Butcher's Empire. Because of its design, another American projector is often also included in that category. Generally speaking, American amateur machines suffer because of their relatively high price, although vigorous efforts are being made to increase their sales.

The American standard projectors retail in Australia from $950 to $1,090 and a semi-portable projector sells from $290 to $415. The Cummings and Wilson machine sells for approximately $875 and the Garvey for $485. The Goertz sells from £175 to £195, the Ernemann from £185 to £215, and the Kalee from $850 to $950.

Among the so-called non-professional projectors, one American make sells for $440, the Pathé for $220, Butcher's Empire for $290, and another American make for $315.

U. S. Projectors Popular

In spite of their relatively high price, American projecting machines are popular in this market because of their advance design and improvements. Because of these refinements, they are regarded throughout Australia as the highest grade projectors sold in the country. The popularity of the domestic C & W machine is attributable not to new improvements, but rather to sentiment and lower price. The machines are not equipped with such devices as speed indicators and loop setters which appeal to exhibitors. In some cases the inclosed feature of an American machine is preferred, while other exhibitors favor the open machine of another American make; sentiment in that regard is about divided.

In general, the two above-mentioned American projectors embody all the features which appeal to the Australian buyer, an advantage, however, which is offset by a price which often acts as a sales obstacle.

Projection Equipment.—Virtually all large urban and most large suburban houses in Australia operate two or more projecting machines. The motion picture industry is conducted on so extensive a scale, and audiences are so accustomed to efficient exhibition, that interruptions caused by failure of one projector could not be permitted. It must be remembered that the Australian motion picture world is dominated by the American influence, and houses are operated after American methods. In all representative theatres, and except in the smallest communities, the use of more than one projector is customary. In most of the larger houses, three machines are used.

Modern Machines Used

Because of the absence of definite information, it is difficult to say whether or not the majority of projectors in use in Australia are old or new models. The recent opening of several large theatres in Australia has naturally resulted in the installation of new machines; it is also known that most of the older leading houses operate modern machines. Where older machines are in use, they are made as modern as possible by the addition of new devices or by remodeling. The manager of a large Sydney firm which represents one of the leading American projectors says that the remodeling of old machines has developed into a service of considerable importance. In general, therefore, it may be said that either new or improved machines are in operation in practically all leading Australian theatres, and that obsolete machines are in use only in the smallest city houses or in some of the more remote small towns.

Generators.—There is a good field for the sale of American generator sets in Australia. One large American company is well established in the market and does a considerable business in sets ranging in price from $390 to $475. Another American set sells complete with switchboard and all accessories for $1,580. The principal competition to American generators is offered by the Compton set, of British manufacture, which ranges in price from $390 to $485. There is no domestic competition of importance, and the prospects for increased sales of American equipment are believed to be good.

Incandescents Gaining

Arc Lamps.—High-intensity and mirror-reflector arc lamps are in wide use, but they are being superseded to some extent by incandescent lamps, although comparatively few of the latter are yet in operation because of their shorter range. The mirror arc is used in most of the larger houses, while the incandescent lamp is becoming increasingly popular for smaller theatres.

Screens.—Practically all screens used in Australia are of domestic manufacture. Attempts have been made to sell imported screens, but their higher price has militated against their sale. Domestic producers, assisted by a protective tariff, dominate the market, and the domestic screens have proved satisfactory. There seems to be little hope, under existing conditions, of stimulating a demand for foreign-made screens.

Visual Education.—Visual education is in a relatively early stage of development in Aus-

NEED any old rags or bric-a-brac?

Chet Miller of the Fox, North Platte, Neb., solved the problem when he needed oiling and dusting rags for his operators and janitors. He sent tickets to all grade schools which read:

"This ticket and five cents and a handful of nice clean rags will admit one child under 12 years of age to the Fox Theatre Saturday matinee."

The result was that nearly every kid in town turned up with a nickel and plenty of rags.

Innovations in Entertainment World To Feature 4 "Radio City" Theatres

Home of Television a Major Development—Largest House in Group to Seat 7,000—Broadcasting Stations to Total 27

NEW FEATURES of theatre architecture, innovations in equipment, which will include latest advances in the broadcasting and receiving of televised pictures, are to be embodied in the four theatres to be built in the "Radio City" project to be built from 48th to 51st Sts., fronting Fifth Ave., and from Fifth Ave. across to a similar frontage on Sixth Ave., New York. The project, to be built by the Rockefeller interests, is to cost an estimated $250,000,000 and will be leased to RCA and its subsidiaries. It will be started in fall of this year and be completed in the fall of 1933.

On the site will arise a complete architectural unit that will include four theatres, devoted to sound pictures, musical comedy presentations, and to dramatic productions. A symphony hall is also under consideration. Twenty-seven broadcasting studios, some of which would be three stories in height will be built to accommodate the requirements of music, entertainment, education and information that would be radiated from this center. New office buildings in architectural harmony with the rest of the development will be built to house the various industries and services associated with the development of the electrical communication and entertainment.

The plan of construction considered by THE SHOWMAN to be of interest in that it embraces on a scale perhaps never before attempted in the industry methods of combining commercial business structures with theatres, is outlined herewith:

Fronting Fifth Ave. and forming the central structure on that side of the development will be an oval building of moderate height. Shops will be located on the first floor. The second floor will be occupied by a banking institution, and on the roof a restaurant will be built, with an outdoor promenade running around the entire building. This oval building will extend to a garden plaza that will be cut through the development and will run parallel with Fifth Avenue, from 48th to 51st Sts. The plaza, the width of which will be almost as large as the length of the average city block, will be a boulevard. Fountains, statuary and garden plots will intersperse its whole area.

60-Story Office Building

Over the entire development will tower a 60-story office building in which 27 broadcasting studios will be located, extending from the west side of the plaza through to Sixth Ave. From this central office building a corridor, about three stories in height, will run to the other office buildings from Fifth to Sixth Aves.

The streets surrounding the new development will be widened, to give the new structures fronting them more light and air, to provide better curb facilities for shops and buildings and to add to the beauty of the whole architectural unit.

Transportation arteries from various directions will lead to and from "Radio City," but the traffic problem will be reduced by underground bus terminals and by subterranean parking arrangements that will take care of thousands of cars and form underground boulevards for automobile traffic. In addition, plans are now being drawn for a parking tower to give additional facilities for motor parking. All deliveries within the radio metropolis will be effected from underground.

The Secret

"RADIO CITY," sponsored by the Rockefeller interests in association with the Radio Corporation of America and allied companies, will be the national home of television. Construction and engineering plans are progressing with that objective in view.

Details of what the development will look like are outlined in the accompanying article.

The significance of the new project from the standpoint of the new entertainment arts, it is explained by David Sarnoff, RCA president, lies in the greater facilities and services which the development makes possible.

"The public service," he says, "which the new arts envisioned in the era of electrical entertainment can render, it is becoming increasingly clear, will depend more and more upon the liaison they are able to maintain with the entertainment and educational arts. Technical development must go side by side with artistic development. Both are vitally necessary to each other. Research and technical progress in the communication arts would be largely vitiated if the artistic output carried did not keep pace with the needs of advancing intellectual progress. On the other hand, the entertainment and educational arts can only find their greatest expression through the vast public which the modern facilities of communication provide for the artist and the educator. The more intimate relationship between the radio on one hand, and the stage, the screen, the concert hall or the rostrum upon the other, the greater the progress we can expect in the entertainment and educational arts.

Preparing for Television

Broadcasting must look towards the day when both sound and sight will be transmitted through the medium of the air, it is pointed out by Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Co., which will operate the new studios in the Rockefeller development.

"Television, it is true, is still largely in the toddling stage," he states, "but the vast possibilities of sight added to sound in nation-wide broadcasting cannot be ignored in planning for the future. We are building our new studios, therefore, for tomorrow, as well as for today. We are taking into account in the development of our plans the fact that broadcasting, established upon a democratic basis in the United States, is not only a medium of mass entertainment but that it has added to the cultural and educational values of modern life. With the great theatrical and musical enterprises to be created in this development, the broadcasting center of the country will be joined in a vast artery of communication with the dramatic stage, with opera, with variety, with talking-motion pictures, with the symphony hall. The artist will be at the door of the broadcasting studio, and broadcasting facilities will be at the side of every artist whose performance deserves a wide audience.

"Radio broadcasting has become the recognized means for the syndication of entertainment, education and information upon a nationwide and on occasion, upon a worldwide scale. It has far from exhausted all the services that might be rendered through the medium of sound; it will have vastly greater opportunities when television emerges from the laboratory to give radio the new dimension of sight. The technical and artistic experience which the National Broadcasting Co., has gained in years of operation will be embodied in the 27 new broadcasting studios to be completed within the next two or three years. Some of these studios, to be two or three stories in height, will be concert halls in effect. In addition, however, every one of the four great theatres to be erected on this development will be equipped for broadcasting service.

"All the theatres, in effect, will be broadcasting studios; all will be equipped for the broadcasting of sound, and eventually, when technical progress has made sufficient headway, for the broadcasting of sight directly from the stage.

"Ten of the 27 broadcasting studios will be designed for photography and recording. The broadcasting building will be constructed so that radio fans may have the opportunity to see the artists at work.

"Thus, with the entertainment and cultural project now announced, broadcasting will have at its call new reservoirs of dramatic, musical and entertainment service."

Says R-K-O Looking Ahead

The four theatres to be erected within the new radio city will be leased and operated by R-K-O, according to the statement of Hiram S. Brown, president.

"With sound which has revolutionized the motion picture art, and with other technical developments in the offing the motion picture has become a relative by marriage to all the entertainment arts," Brown points out. "True, it has developed a technique and an artistry that is peculiarly its own, but it has at the same time widened enormously the opportunities for the stage, the opera and for other forms of entertainment.

"In leasing and operating a theatre devoted to variety, a second devoted to sound, a third devoted to musical comedy, and a fourth to dramatic productions, the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. is providing itself with the facilities for the greatest possible development of its business. It proposes to use the technique of all the arts in the creation of its entertainment programs and it will obtain this first-hand under this new plan.

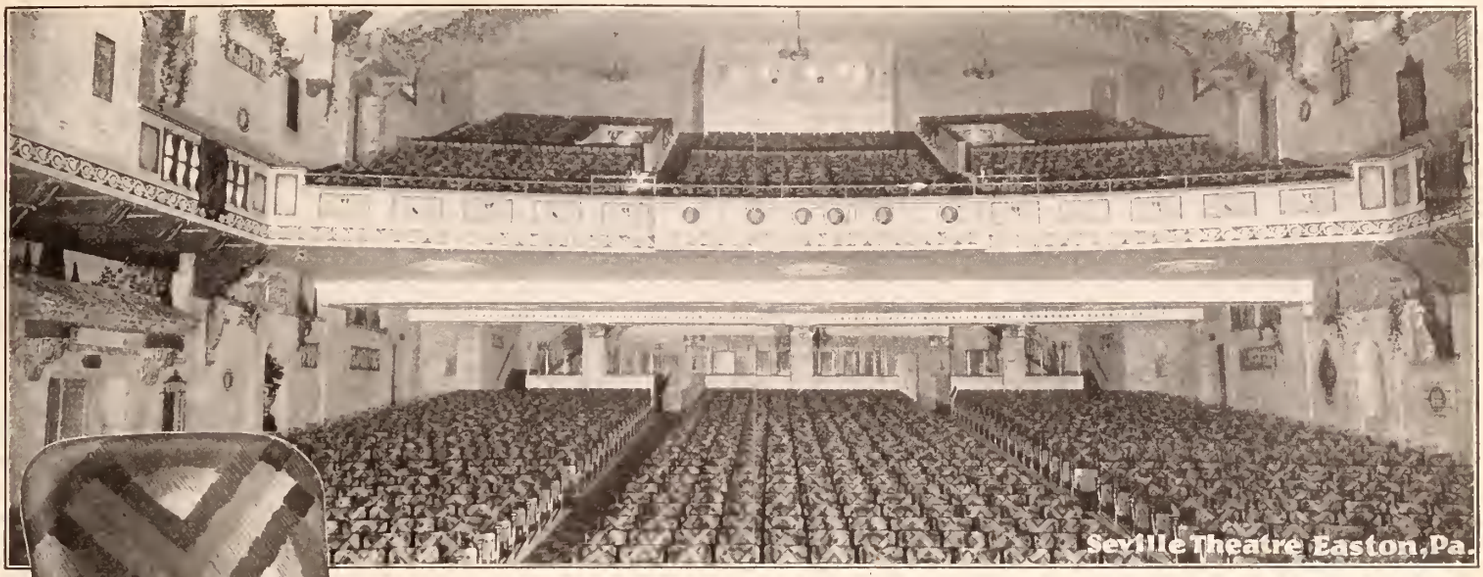
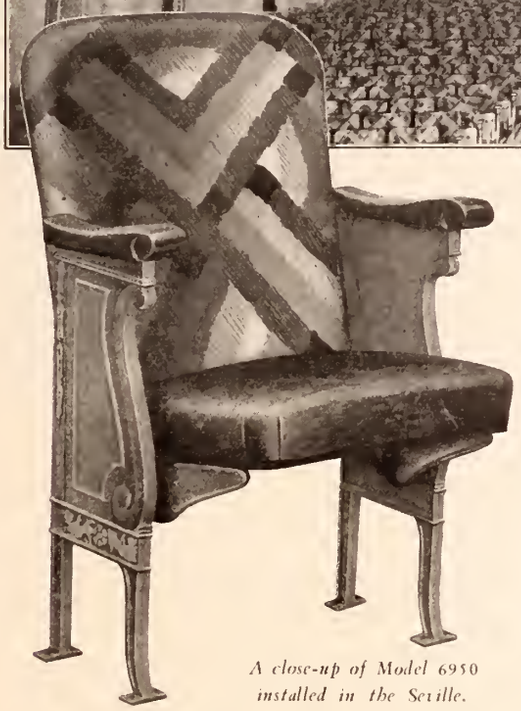
"Of the four theatres to be leased and operated by RKO, one will be a variety theatre with a seating capacity of over 7,000 that will introduce many new conceptions in variety entertainment—an entertainment program that will reflect all the forms of the entertainment and musical arts. Lighting effects made possible by recent electrical progress and a stage built upon an engineering principle that will make it visible from all parts of the house, will be among the new features.

"The second theatre which will have about 5,000 seats will be especially designed for sound motion pictures, and will set new standards, we believe, in this form of entertainment. Theatres built heretofore have been built upon the acoustical and visual principles of the older forms of motion picture entertainment, although sound has since been added to all the larger theatres. This time we shall create a beautiful theatre structure around the radio and electrical developments that have recently revolutionized the motion picture art. It will be a theatre built for the opportunities that sound has brought to the motion picture, and the possibilities that may flow from further technical developments.

"The third theatre will be especially designed for musical comedy productions. Sound has welded music to the screen. This theatre will provide us both with a source for the development of creative talent, and with a public experimental station that will guide our motion picture directors in the presentation of better entertainment for the screen.



"Finally, we shall have a theatre devoted to drama: tie productions of a selective character for the same reasons that apply to musical comedy productions."



To House All Units

In addition to the theatres, more than 1,000,000 square feet of space will be leased in the various office structures to be erected in the new Radio City by RCA, R-K-O, the National Broadcasting Co., RCA Victor Corp., Radio Pictures, and RCA Photophone, Inc. RCA will have its executive offices in the 60 story central office building.

The architects appointed for this project are Reinhard & Hofmeister; Raymond Hood, Godley & Fouilhoux; and Corbett, Harrison & MacMurray.

Patents: Their Function and How To Handle Them by One Who Knows

The Showman Inaugurates a New Feature—Questions and Answers Column Gets Under Way with the August Edition

By RAY BELMONT WHITMAN

A New Department

WITH The Showman for July, Motion Picture News inaugurates a new department—devoted to patents.

Arrangements have been made with Ray Belmont Whitman, patent attorney of New York, to advise of the latest patented inventions in the motion picture field and to write frequent articles on the subject of patents and its allied fields of trade mark and designs. These articles will be written in the laymen's language.

Mr. Whitman was for many years the chief patent counsel and consulting engineer for a large American corporation and is the author of a widely circulated book on patents.

THE subject of patents is one about which we are all concerned, for practically every manufacturing company in this country has been founded directly or indirectly as the result of the monopoly obtained through patents for inventions.

Over 1,700,000 such patents have been issued in the past 100 years or more, and at the present time some 40,000 patents issue each year and an equal number of applications are filed which never issue into patents. In addition, probably another 100,000 inventions are conceived which, for one reason or another, never reach the application stage.

In these articles we will attempt to give some interesting and valuable information to the general reader on the subject of patents and inventions, and also on trade marks and designs.

The founders of the country were indeed wise men to encourage invention by putting into the Constitution in 1790 that provision which now gives to the patentee of a new invention an exclusive monopoly to prevent others from making, using and selling it, for the first seventeen years after the issue of the patent in return for its mere disclosure to the public and free use thereafter.

Our patent laws are the most liberal in the world. Nowhere else can a poor man with a good idea so easily acquire both fame and fortune as the result of protecting and marketing it.

There is now scarcely a town, village, or hamlet throughout our broad land but what has at least one prominent citizen living on Easy Street in a mansion purchased from the profits of a patented invention. In fact, some of our greatest fortunes have been made through the outright sale or royalty of these rights.

It has been well said that practically all of us are original enough to have conceived, sometime in our lives, at least one really valuable invention. The trouble usually is that we don't realize this and, therefore, take no steps to patent and market it.

The Real Nature of a Patent

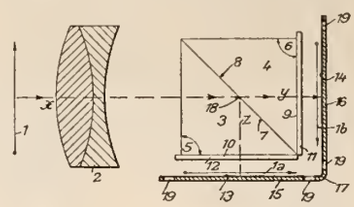
In the beginning, it is important to correct an almost universal misconception which alone is responsible for many serious losses to the uninformed.

A patent does not, as many believe, give to its owner the right to make, use and sell the invention. It merely gives the right to exclude others from making, using and selling the invention as specifically covered in the claims of the patent.

The inventor who has conceived an invention, providing no one else has previously been granted a patent on it, has already the right to make it, use it, or sell it, as he chooses. This is his common law right. And everyone else, as well, has the same right. The Government, by enacting our patent laws, has sought to encourage invention by granting to every inventor who applies, an exclusive right for the first seventeen years to prevent others from making, using or selling the invention claimed. It, however, this right has been previously granted to another on any part of the invention, then the later inventor is just as much estopped from using the previous invention as is the rest of the public.

Most inventors, and indeed many otherwise intelligent manufacturers and purchasers of patents, fail to grasp this situation. As a result, they proceed on the basis that the patent, having been granted by the Government, gives them the right to use the invention. But as most patents are in the nature of improvements over older devices, it is frequently necessary for the inventor to employ also one or more of such older devices in order to make use of his own invention.

And, as it sometimes happens that some such former device or method is already covered by a patent to a prior inventor, the later inventor then finds himself in the unfortunate position of not being able to use himself what he can prevent others from using.



This very important point should always be kept in mind when dealing with patents. Later, under the heading "Infringement Searches," it will be explained how to determine whether or not a patent owner has the right to use the invention without risk of infringing any such prior patents of others.

Next month the Patent Editor will discuss who may obtain a patent, when it may be obtained, and on what, and will comment briefly on patent failures and patent successes, and try to point out why some men get rich and others stay poor in the field of invention.

Beginning with the next issue, also, Mr. Whitman will conduct a column under the heading "Questions and Answers." Everyone is invited to make use of this free consulting service. Address your questions to the Patent Editor, in care of Motion Picture News; write on one side of the paper only, and sign your full name and address. Only initials will be published, if requested.

Science Pointing the Way to New Standards in Field of Exhibition

Equipment, Theatre Design, Lighting Constantly Undergoing Improvement, Progress Report of S. M. P. E. Indicates

THE possibilities for raising exhibition standards are far from exhausted. New developments, thrown into the lap of the industry by factories and laboratories in this country and abroad, offer the wide-awake showmen opportunity to reach out into the new fields by applying to his own problem improved types of projectors, screens, and lenses and by utilizing new theories in lighting and theatre design which are constantly springing to the fore.

Glenn E. Matthews, chairman of a committee of fourteen knows as the Committee on Progress of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, makes it an obvious procedure to draw this conclusion from that portion of his report which dwells at length on exhibition and its attendant problems.

The report lists the source material from which the facts were gleaned, thereby opening the door to additional information by reference to the original. Included in the authorities mentioned there is frequent reference to Motion Picture News and The Showman.

As the first topic, "General Projection Equipment" is discussed. The text:

A—General Projection Equipment

Projectors and Projection.—Fox and Richardson[150] have commented on the projection equipment used for showing 70 mm. film. The projector is built more sturdily than older projectors and is equipped with a rotating shutter between the light source and the film aperture. Maintenance of uniform screen illumination is found to be a delicate job at the Roxy where 150 amperes are required for the long throw.[151]

An attachment weighing less than 100 pounds has been announced for installation on a universal projector base for the showing of a film 56 mm. wide, giving a picture ratio of 1:2 for projection on screen 24 feet wide.[152]

A new model Simplex projector,[153] as well as a new assembly for older models, was announced in 1929 which incorporates as a special feature a rear shutter between the lamp house and the gate. The shutter blades are set at a slight angle to create a current of air on the gate which is claimed to lower the temperature of the gate considerably, to reduce to a minimum the tendency for film buckle, and to lower the general fire hazard. Some other features of the new model as claimed are easy and rapid change-over from disc to sound-on-film, and means for maintaining accurate focus and centering of the picture.[154]

Hardy[155] applied the results of a consideration of the conservation of energy principle to a discussion of the optics of motion picture projectors. Jahn[156] has given interesting data on transformers for use with motion picture projectors. A cue meter, consisting of a dial attached by a flexible shaft to the shutter shaft on the projector, has found practical use and eliminates the need of a long written cue sheet. The dial is graduated in feet and is traversed by two hands, geared ten to one.[157] Descriptions have been given by Lasally[158] of two Berlin theatre projection rooms, in one of which are installed two non-intermittent projectors. A projector is available for projection of Ozophane film which is 0.02 mm. thick. It employs a claw pull-down movement and 750 runs were made successfully at a speed of 25 frames per second.[159]

Improvements in pressure, plates, claw pull-downs, change-over devices, automatic rewinds on the projector, take-up fittings, sprockets, comprise the essential features of many patents related to projection mechanisms.[160]

Sound Picture Reproduction

During the winter of 1929-30, sound motion pictures became such an integral and vital part of regular theatre exhibition programs that their discussion is included at this point under general rather than special projection equipment, as in past reports. The problem of eqnipping many thousands of theatres for sound reproduction during the comparatively short period of a year and a half was a serious and gigantic task both from the engineering as well as the economic standpoint. The economic problem, according to Franklin[161] has been a particularly serious one for the small exhibitor, for, while the large houses could eliminate their symphony orchestras and introduce a saving, the small house had only a small investment in its orchestra in comparison with the cost of installation of reproduction equipment. A lowering of costs on such equipment alleviated this situation to a certain extent. In the meantime, many small exhibitors installed inferior low-priced equipment with a resulting lowering of the quality of sound reproduction and an inevitable falling-off of box office receipts. On the other hand, the steady improvement in sound reproduction quality noted in the better equipped theatres stimulated public appreciation and, according to a report by Hays, resulted during 1929 in an increased attendance of 15 per cent or 15,000,000 persons per week in the United States.[162]

The advent of the sound picture apparently offered the producers a plausible excuse for the removal of concert orchestras which many of them believed had been appreciated only by an aesthetic minority. Surprisingly few complaints from theatre goers and no noticeable loss of revenue apparently substantiated this opinion.

Schools for theatre projectionists have been established to acquaint them with the handling of sound equipment and elaborate servicing staffs have been formed for the assistance of the theatre. Numerous practical articles have been written on analysis of sound reproduction troubles, such as care of equipment, location of electrical supply generators relative to the loud speakers, causes of hum sounds in reproducers, acoustic nature of draperies and seats in the auditorium.[163]

A survey of the literature indicates that considerable attention has been paid to the problem of theatre acoustics during the early months of 1930 as the importance of this problem was fully realized. Of interest to the theatre patron is Marrisson's[164] method for estimating by ear, frequencies from approximately 50 to 400 cycles. Norris[165] has described an electrical instrument called an "acousticeter" for measuring sound intensities.

Use of Talkers Spreads

Sound picture projection apparatus is in active use on trans-Atlantic liners, in a Chicago hotel dining room, and even in railway cars. A successful showing on a Union Pacific trans-continental train was arranged during the fall of 1929.[166] A Delaware corporation has been formed to promote a fleet of specially designed railway coaches as the first unit of a projected nation-wide system of mobile sound theatres to present pictures in small villages.[167] The first theatre for the exclusive showing of sound newsreels opened early in November, 1929, running a continuous show from 10:00 a. m. to midnight.[168]

A description has been given of the Tobis projection equipment which is used in Germany and France.[169] The sound record is of variable density type. Loud speakers are mounted in sets of six on each side of the screen. Five of each set are of the electro-static and one of the electro-dynamic type. Various projectors available in Germany have been described by Fischer[170] and Pander.[171]

The adoption of a standard projection aperture for sound-on-film prints ot 0.600 by 0.800 inch is of importance as noted previously in this report. It was proposed by a joint committee of technicians and engineers and represents a forward step toward better screening of sound pictures. Microphone installations connected with the loud speakers on the stage have been made available for theatre managers' offices to permit the manager to give personal announcements about coming programs, sport events, and elections, as well as to assist in the prevention of panics in case of fire.[172]

Several articles have been written on that important subject of volume control, so vital to the interest of the theatre patron.[173] A special fader installation operated from the orchestra floor of a New York theatre has proven an effective means of controlling sound volume during the showing of the picture, "Rio Rita."[174]

The proper location of horns and other types of loud speakers is still somewhat of an open question.[175] Analyses of types of loud speakers have been made by Vogt,[176] and by Blattner and Bostwick.[177] An audible frequency selector has been designed for use in the projection room which it is claimed permits the projectionist to accentuate, attenuate, or eliminate certain frequencies delivered to the amplifier.[178]

Details have been published on the technical characteristics of all the sound reproducing equipment on the French market.[179] The only French process which is complete from the taking to the production end is that of Gaumont. Their projector, known as "L'Ideal Sonore," uses a selenium cell illuminated with a 220-watt lamps, for sound-on-film reproduction, and is also equipped with a synchronized disc for records. A special amplifier for the selenium cell is provided, located on the projector, and a three stage andio amplifier delivering a telephone power of 150 watts which may be located anywhere desired.

Dunoyer[180] has reviewed the characteristics of photo-electric cells with especial mention of a cell manufactured in France. Nason[181] has dealt with the design of audio frequency apparatus in a series of three articles. Electro-magnetic pickups were discussed by Crouse,[182] and Hatschek[183] treated the subject of amplifiers and hook-ups to minimize distortion.

Sound for the Deaf

Additional installations have been made in theatres to make sound pictures audible for deaf patrons. The equipment consists of a network tapping the sound energy in the reproducing system with a separate amplifier capable of supplying sufficient power for thirty headsets.[184]

The number of available types of turntable reproducers continued to increase monthly for each one of which certain meritorious claims were advanced.[185]

Various improvements in sound reproduction equipment have been patented[186] relating to synchronization of disk records with pictures, constant speed control of film projectors mechanisms, tension regulators. Two other patents are interesting because of their novelty: (a) Broadcast sounds are synchronized with cinematographic films, illustrating the subject broadcast and projected in one or more theatres, by the aid of duplicate strips, on which the speech and music are marked so the projectionist, by means of his copy strip and speed regulator, can adjust the projector to synchronize with the received sounds.[187] (b) Motion pictures have been reproduced on metal film, and projected by reflected light. The sound track is produced either photographically, mechanically, or magnetically.[188]

Projector Lenses, Shutters

Improved efficiency has been claimed for a projector shutter which consists of three cut-out disks on separate shafts.[189] The center of the lens is uncovered first and covered last. A number of patents[190] have been issued both here and abroad on improvements in lenses and shutters.

The introduction of sound and color pictures has resulted in increased amperage for sscreen illumination with greater accompanying trouble from heat on the gate aperture. This excess heat causes the film to buckle and increases the fire hazard. To overcome these difficulties the manufacturers of the Simplex projector designed a rear shutter assembly for use on existing projectors which, it is claimed, effectively reduces the heat incident on the gate from a 170 ampere high intensity arc more than 65 per cent.[153]

A 500 watt lamp for general studio illumination and a projector incandescent lamp have been announced in France which are silvered on one-half of the bulb interior as a means of increasing their efficiency.[191] Naumann[192] studied the light distribution over the face of a condensing mirror in relation to each part of the picture area. In another paper the same author gave results of tests with a novel photographic set-up which indicated that the mirror arc under average working conditions gives unequal illumination of the center and edge of the film aperture.[193]

A unique generator known as the Rosenberg cross-field generator is being marketed by an Austrian firm located in Vienna. An arc, such as that in a projector, may be connected directly to the generator and the voltage and current are self regulating. Two of the four commutator brushes are short circuited. When the outer circuit is closed, a magnetic field and an armature field result in the same direction, but opposed, the former increasing slowly, the latter rapidly. The resulting field strength then becomes weaker, the potential at the brushes grows less, and the current is lowered.

A new high intensity arc was designed which is especially suitable for the projection of wide film.[194] Jay and Downes[195] presented a useful paper at the Toronto meeting on the characteristics of high intensity arcs. Only three patents dealing with projector light sources have been noted since the last report.[196]

Fire Protection

Ignition tests were conducted by the Los Angeles Bureau of Standards and Research on several different motion picture films; the lowest ignition temperature found was 250°F.[197] Cabourn[198] reviewed various methods for minimizing fire risks during projection. A non-inflammable substitute for nitrate film is considered the real solution. Alteration of projector design so that the shutter would operate between the lamp house and the gate is strongly advocated for reducing the heat reaching the film. This scheme is incorporated in the new projector design previously noted under the section on Projectors and Projection. In case of a film fire, one type of fire extinguisher releases a gas from outlets in the projector which smothers the fire.[199]

The importance of the question of fire prevention is indicated by the number of patents which have been issued dealing with automatic means for closing apertures, operating douses, disconnecting electrical lighting circuits, prevention of burning of the film in case of breakage, etc.[201]

B. Special Projection Equipment

Portable Projectors.—A new Sound-on-film portable projector equipment made by RCA was announced in October, 1929.[201] The projector and sound reproducer is housed in a metal cabinet 24 inches square and 12 inches wide mounted on four telescopic legs. The magazines are attached to the outside of the housing. The amplifier is housed in a separate metal cabinet and permits volume control in graded steps of 2 TU from zero to maximum volume. Accommodation is made in the amplifier for a second projector to permit smooth change-over. The speaker is an electro-dynamic moving coil cone type. The equipment takes about an hour to assemble.

Further details have ben made available on the portable sound equipment supplied by Western Electric.[202] The delivery and take-up reels are included on the same shaft inside tralia, but a promising start has been made. Several large colleges have purchased projecting machines, and efforts are being made by Harrington's (Ltd.), a large Sydney company, to stimulate interest among other educational institutions. The great popularity of motion pictures as entertainment in Australia induces the belief that the country should eventually devote more attention to education by means of the film.

At present, however, stills are more widely used than motion pictures for visual education, largely because of the lack of suitable educational pictures. Motion picture production of any kind has not been particularly successful in Australia, and aside from the "Know Australia" series of films, sponsored by the Australian branch of a large American film organization, little has been done in the direction of filming educational pictures. It is believed, however, that a demand for these films could be stimulated, and American producers of scientific, technical, or other instructive pictures would do well to keep in touch with developments. While the demand at first would probably be small, a carefully planned campaign of propaganda might stimulate more widespread interest.

Government departments which have under their supervision matters pertaining to education are Education Department, Bridge Street, Sydney, New South Wales; Education Department, Treasury Gardens, Melbourne, Victoria; Education Department, Flinders Street, Adelaide, South Australia; Public Instruction Department, Brisbane, Queensland; Education Department, St. George's Terrace, Perth, Western Australia; and Education Department, Public Buildings, Murray Street, Hobart, Tasmania.

Portable Projectors.—There is a fairly large field for portable motion picture projectors in Australia, and the market is considered to be open for the introduction of makes which have not yet been sold there.

No portable projectors are made in Australia, but German competition is keen. The main German make on the market is the Goertz. Some English machines are imported, but their competition is not considered serious. The machines having the largest sales are of American manufacture.

American projectors are well liked. There is, however, as in the case of the tariff generally a preferential tariff rate applying to projectors manufactured in the United Kingdom.

The most satisfactory way for an American exporter to sell in Australia is generally through appointing a resident agent. German competition is so keen that it is very difficult to sell to most importers direct by correspondence unless the product is already well known.

The oversea manufacturer of portable motion picture projectors grants a maximum of 50 per cent discount to his distributor. The latter grants not more than 33⅓ per cent discount to dealers.

Terms of credit are conventional and differ widely. It is understood that some manufacturers grant terms of 30 days after sight and that others require cash against documents. The terms depend upon the standing of the local importer, how well he is known to the exporter, etc. Many importers of American commodities in general in Australia pay by establishing a letter of credit in the United States.

The purchaser of a portable motion picture projector generally receives terms of 30 days.

Publix Patrons Now Can Make Own Voice Tests

In accordance with its policy of making lobby and foyer space pay for itself, Publix is installing Melograph outfits in 300 of its key houses throughout the country. The Melograph enables patrons, at a cost of 25 cents, to have their voices recorded on small discs. The customer speaks into a microphone, the recording being electrical. The record itself is 4¾ inches in diameter, of a very thin composition and is indestructible.

The Melograph was given a try-out at the Rivoli, New York, and within the first three weeks 25,000 patrons had visited the booth on the mezzanine, the stunt being given a strong plug on the screen. The company owning the device, a foreign concern, provides an attendant and there is no expense to the theatre, which collects half of the proceeds.

Theatre Sign Sold in Golf Course Hook-up

Watertown, N. Y.—Selling the sign of the theatre is one sure way of implanting institutional advertising, and Gus Lampe got a real break out of the stunt he arranged on a local golf course. At 300 yards from the tee, Lampe placed a sign for the Fox Olympic and the Fox Avon. Anyone who could hit the signs with a driven golf ball was given a free ticket to the theatres. The rarity of 300-yard drives held down the number of gratis tickets.

basis for the discussion and comparison of resistance. Simon Ohm, a physicist, investigated the relation between current and voltage in electric circuits and the unit of resistance bears his name. It is the ohm. Expressed in a quantitative manner, the ohm is the unit of resistance offered to an unvarying electric current by a column of mercury weighing 14.4521 grams, having a uniform cross-section and of 106.3 centimeters in length at 0° centigrade.

The resistance of a conductor is expressed in ohms or a fraction of an ohm, depending upon the conductor. Just as the volt may be expressed in decimal values, so can resistance be expressed in decimal values of the ohm or in multiples of the ohm. However, in contrast to the volt, the prefix "milli" or "micro" to express a fraction or a decimal part of the unit value is seldom employed in conjunction with resistance. As a matter of fact the regular numerical value is applied to all values of resistance up to 5,000 ohms, as for example:

1,000 ohms=one thousand ohms
3,000 ohms=three thousand ohms
5,000 ohms=five thousand ohms

The general method of stating resistance is to employ a fractional value of 1,000,000 ohms. This, of course, applies to values in excess of 5,000 ohms. For example, the prefix "meg" is applied to denote millions of ohms, thus,

1,000,000 ohms=1 megohm
2,000,000 ohms=2 megohms
3,530,000 ohms=3.53 megohms

and

50,000 ohms=.05 megohm
10,000 ohms=.01 megohm

In rare cases values less than 5,000 ohms are quoted as being decimal values of a megohm, as for example

2,500 ohms=.0025 megohm
500 ohms=.0005 megohm

As was indicated in the formula stated in this lesson, the letter R, represents resistance. When designated with a numerical value, the ohm is frequently indicated by means of the small Greek letter Omega. When applied to denote megohms the capital Greek letter Omega is used.

Ohm's Law

If the resistance of a circuit is that force which retards the flow of current in a D.C. circuit, there must be some relation between the voltage, current and resistance present in that circuit. This relation is known as Ohm's Law and employs letters to designate the three quantities mentioned. When expressed in the form of a formula it is

$$\text{Resistance } R = \frac{\text{Voltage } E}{\text{Current } I}$$

$$R = \frac{E}{I} \qquad (1)$$

From this relation are derived two others for voltage and current, viz:

$$E = R \times I \qquad (2)$$

or voltage is equal to the current times the resistance and

or current is equal to the voltage derived by the resistance.

These three equations indicate a very definite relation between the three quantities. Referring to equation (1), the resistance varies inversely with current when the voltage is constant and is proportional to the voltage when the current is constant. Referring to equation (2), the voltage is proportional to either the resistance or the current when either one is constant. The current, as shown in equation (3), is proportional to the voltage with the resistance constant and is inversely proportional to the resistance with the voltage held constant.

Generally speaking, all electrical circuits possess resistance and it is possible, as will be shown later, to consider the components of electrical circuits by a study of the various elements which control the current flow within that circuit. Resistance in any circuit is represented by a vertial or a horizontal zigzag line, as shown in Figure 18. The two straight lines joining the extremities of the zigzag lines represent the connections thereto. The plane of the line representing the resistance is optional on the part of the illustrator.

Ohm's Law of Importance

Before closing the subject of the relation between current, voltage and resistance in this lesson, we take this opportunity to stress a few facts. First and foremost is the tremendous importance of a thorough understanding of Ohm's Law. It should be known frontwards and backwards. It is present in every electrical circuit. A study of current or voltage in any circuit is impossible without Ohm's Law.

Although we are still in the very elementary part of this course, we warn the reader that this relation is vital when considering A.C.; when studying the action of the vacuum, tube, when studying the action of amplifiers, the process of amplification and sundry other details. Too much time cannot be spent upon Ohm's Law. The greater the degree of comprehension the more readily will one understand what is taking place in an electrical circuit.

Resistance of Electrical Devices

Wire constitutes a large part of the devices employed in electrical systems. Carbon and graphite also find application and, in some cases, vaporized metals are also used. But whatever the device, all circuits possess resistance. Hence some current controlling influence is to be found in each and every system. If we can consider the simplest electrical circuit it would be a battery or even a single cell with a very short piece of wire connecting the two terminals, as in Figure 19.

That piece of wire connecting the two terminals of the battery would allow the flow of current, yet it would not allow the flow of an infinite value of current, since as small as it may be, it still possesses the property of resistance and, as such, introduces a limiting agent upon the current flow. It is, therefore, possible to illustrate the electrical circuit shown in Figure 19 in the form shown in Figure 20, where R is the resistance of the circuit. Of course, R can be a special resistance present in the circuit, introduced to deliberately limit the current flow. If such a resistance were present in the circuit shown in Figure 19, that shown in Figure 20 would still remain as illustrated.

The three quantities present in Ohm's Law are present in Figure 20. E is the voltage of the battery, B; I is the current flowing through the circuit and R is the resistance of the circuit, or, if the reader so desires, the resistance of a resistor deliberately introduced into the system. If we allot arbitrary values for two of these three quantities, say for the voltage and the resistance, we can solve for the third. Suppose that the voltage is one volt and the resistance is 10 ohms. The current can be determined by means of equation (3) or

Suppose that the voltage is 100 volts and the resistance is 5 ohms. According to the formula the current will be 20 amperes.

Let us now imagine that the voltage remains at 100 volts, but that the resistance is changed to 10 ohms instead of the original 5 ohms. The new value of current will be 10 amperes. It is evident that if the voltage is held constant and the resistance doubled, the current will decrease to half its original value. Thus, with the voltage constant, the current varies inversely with the resistance.

Suppose that we do not know the value of the voltage, but know that the current is 10 amperes and the resistance is 10 ohms. According to equation (2)

$$E \times 10 \times 10 = 100 \text{ volts}$$

If we now reduce the resistance to 5 ohms and note that the current increases to 20 amperes the voltage E will be

$$E = 5 \times 20 = 100 \text{ volts.}$$

Let us now imagine that we do not know the resistance of the circuit, but know that the voltage is 100 volts and the current is 10 amperes. What is the resistance. According to equation (1)

$$R = \frac{100}{10} = 10 \text{ ohms.}$$

Suppose that a change ensues in the circuit and with the voltage held constant at 100 volts we note that the current has increased to 20 amperes. According to the formula for resistance, the circuit resistance has been lowered to 5 ohms. It is evident that with the voltage held constant the resistance varies inversely with the current.

The fact that the values of current or voltage or resistance are less than unity displays no influence or causes no change. The fact that one value is expressed in units does not mean that some other may not be expressed as a decimal. Thus if $E = 10$ volts and $R = 1{,}000$ ohms,

$$I = \frac{10}{1000} = .01 \text{ ampere or } 10 \text{ milliamperes}$$

As in the case of resistance and voltage, current values in many circuits are frequently less than unity and certain prefixes are applied to denote a decimal part of the unit value. Thus the prefix "milli" signifies a thousandth part and the prefix "micro" signifies a millionth part. Sometimes the term "milli" is abbreviated as "mil."

Photophone Offered With Film Reproducer Only

Sound-on-film reproducer only now may be purchased from RCA Photophone in its small house equipment. The sound-on-film reproducer is to cost $2,500. The combination film and disc reproducing equipment is priced at $2,995. There is to be no change in the equipment, according to Sydney E. Abel, general sales manager of the company.

he continued, "every word that you write and speak will have a lot of meaning and sincerity about it. If you slash a lot of adjectives and try to bolster something up that you don't believe in yourself, you are doomed to failure. It never works. The truth fundamentally, and always the truth. You can't go wrong if you tell the truth."

No one can tell, said Roxy, what is the prevailing type of picture, taking occasion to rap the "follow-the-sheep" practice in production.

"I hope the producers won't rush pell-mell into the production of a certain kind of story that has proved its success on a previous occasion," he declared. "One producing company may build a picture, a gangster picture, that has been a success. Then, all producers try to run gangster pictures. It is a peculiar thing in the show business, gentlemen, but a thing may be a success on Monday and a flop on Wednesday. You never can tell. The psychology of the public is such that it moves so rapidly you can't just exactly tell what is the best type.

"Any picture that is well made, beautifully directed, with sincerity of purpose and thought, and that has the elements of interest, pictorially and otherwise, will be a success. It all depends on how well it is made and how cleverly it is presented to the public as to the nature of its success. It would be silly for me to come to you and tell you that this or that kind of picture is the greatest kind of a story you could give to the public.

"That brings me to another point. The axiom of the showman of yesterday was to give the public what it wanted. That is, to a great extent, the by-word of every showman of today. However, it can't be done for two very good reasons. The first is, you don't know what the public wants; and second, the public does not know what it wants.

"I would say this: that it is very difficult to get a new story; get a new angle, because the whole thing revolves upon this premise: it is how the story is told. Some people can tell a story and it won't be funny at all. Another fellow can tell it in his own way and you will holler your head off. That is true of production. It all depends on how it is treated. The elements of a good picture are: good story, good photography, well directed."

Color Called Great Problem

Color in pictures, Roxy feels, presents a great problem, pointing out that color "is again to pictures what sound is; it is almost identical. Of course you know that the color pictures, just like the sound pictures, are an illusion. There isn't any question about that. It is simply an illusion so cleverly done that you really don't know the difference until you hear the real thing. Color takes away some of the things you saw in the picture and brings in other things without any effort.

"Color, in my opinion, is all right if intelligently used. There is a great development coming in color. I would rather not say much about color. Some of us like to see pictures in color while others don't. It would not be fair, I think, to express an opinion on it, especiallly in its present stage. Let us see what happens. Sound is going through a great improvement, too."

nated at night time. Attendants will always be in charge and it will be reserved for the use of patrons exclusively. Decorative fencing, offset by shrubbery, will surround it, as the parking space will front on a residential thoroughfare which it was necessary to re-zone for business purposes in order to make the project possible.

The deal for the Paramount site was but recently consummated. The initial lease consideration was $340,000. Final details of the plans for the theatre now are being worked out by the architects and construction will probably be begun this summer, with completion by the fall of 1931.

Projector Aid to End Fire Hazard?

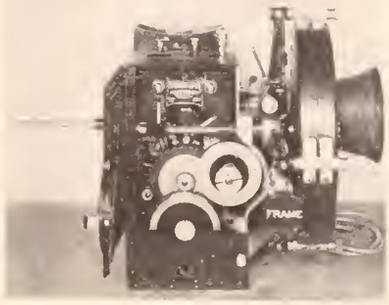
A REAR Shutter Assembly, designed to eliminate fire hazard by reducing heat and to remove buckling of the film, is being placed on the market by International Projector Corporation for all booths equipped with Simplex machines.

The new assembly includes a number of features claimed by International to be exclusive with the Super Simplex, such as a new type gate framing device, a pilot lamp assembly and a shutter adjusting mechanism.

The advent of sound made it necessary to discard the old type of opaque screens in favor of perforated screens to pass through. It has been estimated that porous screens have reduced the light from one-quarter to one-half, thereby making it necessary to step up the amperage in order to secure the necessary brilliance on the screen.

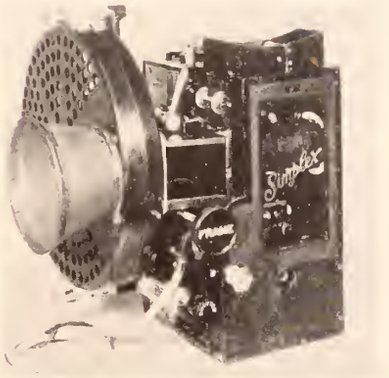
This resulted in warpage and damage to the rear of the mechanism, tended to develop buckling of the film and a corresponding percentage of distortion on the sound track.

Elimination of these two defects has been a problem, but the increased fire hazard developed through use of the higher amperage has been far more serious.



It has been realized that the film has never been adequately protected by cooling devices during its transit through the projector, but due to relatively lower amperages and various protective devices on the projector, the fire hazard has not been a particularly serious problem. With the introduction of sound, the greatly increased amperages increased the hazard to such an extent that fire authorities throughout the country have become very much interested in the matter. This may in the near future culminate in laws being passed, which will compel users of equipment to provide adequate means for cooling the film.

International claims the Super Simplex has anticipated this and now provides "a certain solution" for the fire hazard problem.



"Attempts have been made in various ways to reduce heat and eliminate buckling," said a company official, "but the results have never heretofore been satisfactory. The most successful efforts to cure this serious evil have been through the use of the rear shutter but practical difficulties were encountered which required long and careful study and much engineering skill to overcome. It is a great satisfaction to the International Projector Corporation to make this device available to users of regular Simplex equipment. The rear shutter assembly entirely meets the exacting demands of present-day projection by providing more light and at the same time reducing the heat at the aperture.

"Illumination is increased greatly, the percentage increase depending on the focal length and type of lens being used, and the heat at the aperture plate is reduced between fifty and seventy-five per cent. This remarkable improvement is due to interposing the new shutter assembly between the arc lamp and the film thereby making it unnecessary to use heat plates or shields in proximity to the film. The blades of the shutter in their new position immediately eliminate fifty per cent of the heat from the arc and, in addition thereto, further large decrease in heat is obtained by using this shutter to create a partial vacuum at the aperture and set up an air disturbance in the beam of light which accomplishes the desired result.

"The air current set up by the shutter will positively keep the film cool and therefore prevent buckling. The width of the near shutter blade no longer depends on the size of the lens so that a shutter using a ninety degree effective blade can be used with a lens of any diameter, while with the old type shutter a minimum of one hundred and two degrees was necessary."

Television Films on Regular-Size Screen

London—Demonstrations of televised pictures on a regular-size picture screen are planned by the Baird Television Co., which is said to have a new process enabling projection of a screen image as brilliant as pictures seen on ordinary television apparatus.

Handling C & W Projector

Sydney—Greater Australasian Films, cinemachinery division, has taken over the distribution of the Cummings & Wilson projection machine for Australia and the Far East. A price of $560 has been set for the mechanism, top arm, and magazine. It is reported that there are 440 of the C & W machines already in use in Australia out of a total of about 2,000 of all makes.

Offer Hearing Device Stock

Hearing Devices Corp., which manufactures and distributes the Theatrephone, device used to enable the deaf to hear talking pictures, is issuing $200,000 of preferred and common stock. The stock is sold in $50 units.

Armstrong Offers Masking Device

San Francisco—Armstrong Studios has completed development of a complete, flexible sound screen unit, electrically controlled from the booth. It consists of an all-steel frame with maskings, enabling the projectionist to change the size of the screen from standard to Movietone, Grandeur or Magnascope size by push button control. It can be counter-weighed and taken away, the same as an ordinary curtain.

Maskings are made in black velour operating on a slot and lift arrangement and can be changed to any desired size, through use of preset contractors. The entire operation is handled by chain drive over sprockets, eliminating possibility of slipping of cables or ropes over pulleys, a drawback of some devices of the kind.

The steel frame is built with sufficient bracing to permit installation of new type shallow horns which fly with the screen, and clear the stage with one operation.

New Amplifier Marketed By Amplion Corp. of Am.

Amplion Type PA50-P power amplifier has been placed on the market by the Amplion Corp. of America, New York.

The technical details of the invention will not be disclosed until patents have been granted. However, it is said, it now is possible to modulate two 50-watt power tubes with one type-224 screen grid tube. The 224 tube operates directly from a standard phonograph pick-up. The Amplion amplifier utilizes two stages. A 224 tube is used in the first stage and two 545 tubes (50 watts each) are used in the output stage. Two half-wave 566 rectifiers are required. If it is desired to use smaller power tubes, 511's may be substituted for the 545's by changing a few registers.

This two-stage amplifier has a gain of 65 T.U.'s, it is said. The two 50-watt tubes are driven at their full wattage capacity by the 224. The latter, when in operation, is excited by the standard phonograph pick-up.

Australian Device Will Be Offered by New Firm

Washington—Marketing of the Magna-Cousta reproducing equipment under a flexible four-year leasing plan is being undertaken at Sydney, Australia, by a company being formed for the purpose, state advices to the Dept. of Commerce.

The machines will be sold under a leasing system aimed to fit the buyer's financial situation, extending terms over four years without interest. If a buyer can not afford standard rates, they will be altered so that payment can be made as a running expense rather than heavily taxing the purchaser's finances.

One feature of the unit is a clutch system of bringing the biograph into line with the movietone and the power. The tendency for film buckle and wear is lessened by a full-elliptic gate, it is said. Only four valves are used in the equipment.

Pyroloid Adds To Athol Plant

Athol, Mass.—Pyroloid, which is specializing in dresser ware for distribution in theatre contests, is adding a new unit to its factory here to take care of the increased business which followed its advent into the theatre field. All types of theatres now are featuring Pyroloid contests, it is stated. Jack Bullwinkel is New England representative and E. D. Deutsch of the Import Film Co., Cleveland, is distributor through the Mississippi Valley. Pyroloid campaigns are from 26 to 36 weeks in length.

Richmond.—A. O. Budina, formerly with John Eberson, and O. E. Hempel are opening an architects' and engineering office here.

Sentry Now Handling Home Talker Device

Philadelphia—Sentry Safety Control has taken over distribution of Sentrola, home talking device. The equipment was demonstrated at the radio show held in June at Atlantic City. Volume production is planned. The apparatus can be attached to any radio set, Sentry declares.

Minnesota Supply Firm Moves

Minneapolis—Northern Theatre Supply Co, and the Synchrotone Co. has removed headquarters to Minneapolis from Duluth. Safety Projector Co., manufacturer of Zenith projectors and Zenith sound equipment, is remaining at Duluth. Northern Theatre Supply was founded nine years ago by S. J. Segal. Two years ago he formed the Synchrotone Co. Segal is general manager at headquarters here.

type are also to be found on the mezzanine foyer.

The architects have achieved something distinct in their design of the theatre's name sign above the marquee. Its height from base to tip is 80 feet. It is V-shaped, angling back to the wall line of the building on two sides against large stone pylons with ornamental decorations. The sign proper is painted to harmonize with the color of these stone pylons at the sides. It is illuminated by both bulbs and neon tubing. The marquee, likewise, is painted to harmonize with the building. Thus, both marquee and perpendicular street sign are included in the main facade as one integral part of the building.

Facade Called Inexpensive

The architects state that it has been shown by the Gateway that a great saving in cost can be effected by this facade design. Moreover, they state that inasmuch as the large vertical street sign plays such an important part in the theatre's function, they endeavored to make of it a feature, and in so doing subordinated every architectural element thereto.

The canopy contains myriad lights which, because of the theatre's location, provide both a colorful and spectacular display which can be seen at night for miles around.

Special precaution was taken in planning the Gateway in both shape and proportions so as to obtain the best possible sound reproduction. The results are manifested in the opinions of sound experts here who declare the acoustics of the house to be on a par with that of any theatre in the city.

The latest supplementary equipment has been installed throughout the house. Heating is by the down-feed system of ventilation, by which air is forced at the top and rear to find outlets at the lower portions of the auditorium, foyers and lobbies. The latest type cooling system has also been installed and is in operation.

Chenille Rugs Standing Cited

Amsterdam, N. Y.—Chenille construction in rugs is holding up in theatre popularity, despite the competition of broadloom production in all other types of weaves, according to the Mohawk Carpet Mills.

Introduced into the United States as late as 1909 and not getting into quantity production until about 1916, the chenille weave is being used in a number of theatres. The United States biennial census of manufactures for 1921 gave a national production of 397,000 square yards and a total value of $3,000,000. This production increased in 1923 to 552,000 square yards, in 1925 to 437,000 square yards and 1927 to 456,000. The census for 1929, which is to be made public some time this summer is expected by the Mohawk firm to show a marked increase over the 1927 figure.

New orders placed show an increase in the use of color and a wider acceptance of design motifs.

New Enterprise Projector Ready

CHICAGO—A projector for both sound-on-film and disc, complete in itself, has been developed by the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Co.

This new projection machine is placed on the market fully equipped for use with either reproducing method. It requires no further assembly of separate units or additional accessories. Complete in itself, it is ready for use at any time.

O. F. Spahr

"Good sound and good projection must go hand in hand," declares O. F. Spahr of the manufacturing company, in announcing the new projector. "Any betterment of the one is offset in the event a comparable improvement does not take place in the other. It was with this belief, and on this principle, that the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Co. undertook to develop a projection unit which would be suitable for all modern projection and sound reproduction requirements in itself. In this way, the maximum benefit of sound and projection improvements are linked together and incorporated in a single projection machine having a dual use."

For Large or Small Houses

The new Motiograph equipment is of such design and dimensions that it can be installed in large and small theatres, the assembly requiring no more floor space than the regular standard projection equipment. In the design, special care has been taken to eliminate noise and produce a smooth running unit. The base of the projector rests on rubber cushions. It houses a one-third h.p. motor operated by an automatic push-button type switch having a lag of approximately two seconds.

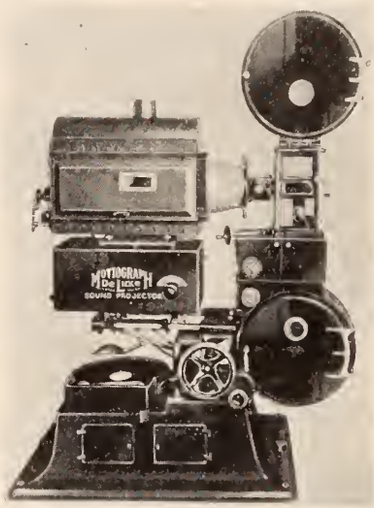
The turntables are mounted on a base under the lamp house in a manner which, according to the manufacturers, eliminates any transmission of machine noise through the loud speakers. The reproduction of needle scratch has been reduced to a minimum without the aid of filters.

A new feature of the equipment is the type of disc weight used. It operates by means of a button on the top of the weight which is depressed when it is applied to the turntable spindle and which has an automatic locking feature.

All power for the motor is transmitted by means of a chain drive through a jack shaft on the front of the base. This jack shaft transmits power to the projector and sound-on-film unit.

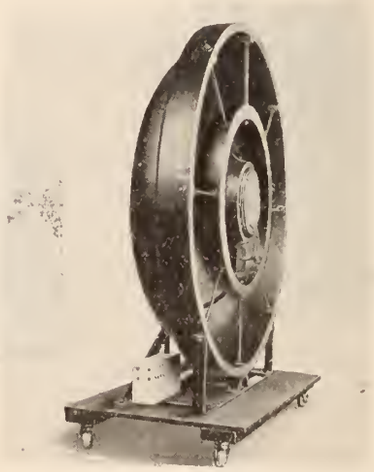
It is possible to tilt the machine through twenty-eight degrees without altering any of the power-driving units, the manufacturer says, which permits it to be adapted for any degree of projection angle without mechanical alterations. A hand-wheel coupled through bevel gears permits this function and provisions are made so as to lock equipment into place after the proper angle is obtained.

At the end of jack shaft there is mounted another hand wheel which is knurled and permits the operator to frame and time mechanism without reaching around to the opposite side. All wiring for sound and power are brought through the base and terminate on accessible terminals and fuse blocks.



Some of the Features

The sound box mounts directly under the projector head, and is driven by means of chain through a twenty-two pound flywheel filter. The mechanism for film travel through sound box over the aperture block is continuous at ninety feet per minute. The film travels over a series of sprockets and the aperture block. A gravity tension roller is used so as to permit the proper tension on film as it travels over block. Accurately adjusted end rollers permit the film at all times to be in the proper position for sound track register.



The P. E. cell is mounted and housed in a specially designed case so wired and arranged that the so-called "surface noise," sputtering, crackling, etc., are reduced to a minimum. Another feature is the sound lens unit assembly. It consists of a common barrel mounting approximately ¾" x 3"—into which is incorporated the lens system in conjunction with a ground glass prism. This arrangement is claimed by the makers as an exclusive feature of their sound-on-film unit.

According to Enterprise it permits the use of low amperage, low voltage exciter lamps, and permits them to be worked below their specified ratings and transmits at least 300 per cent more light flux and is not critical in adjustment as it cannot become clogged up with dust, dirt or grease. It projects a rectangular beam instead of forming a slit beam by the mechanical means of cut-off.

The exciter lamp unit is so arranged that any position of adjustment is possible for good optical alignment of filament with sound lens. Two exciter lamps are provided, one being used while the other is in reserve, pre-focussed.

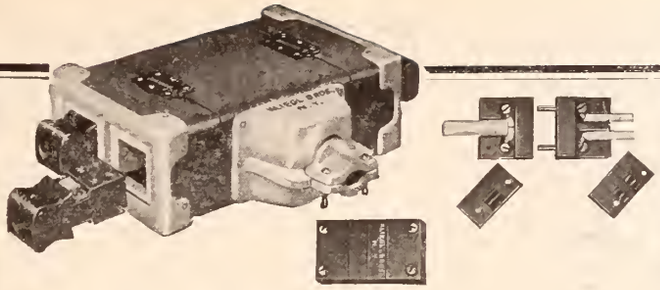
Tied In With Model "H"

The Motiograph De Luxe Sound Equipment comes equipped with the latest type Motiograph projector mechanism, known as the Model "H" which uses the rear type, horizontal-cylindrical shutter. It is claimed for this shutter that it is of efficient and economical design and a marked improvement in the aid of good projection over that of the rotating, front-type of disc shutter heretofore used. It is designed to keep the film cool and clean, keep the aperture cool and free from dirt and fuzz; it is said to reduce the heat on film 62½ per cent, and to increase the light value of projection 15 per cent plus.

The amplifier equipment is of a recent development, described as employing less tubes than heretofore thought possible to obtain sufficient power output. In designing the amplifying equipment a circuit was developed reputedly capable of reproducing with a high degree of fidelity all frequencies from 60 cycles to 10,000 with 20 watts of undistorted quality output.



Only four stages of amplification are employed for the reproduction of sound-on-film, and two stages for disc reproduction. The amplifier is of rack design and assembly.

The Operadio speaker used is of the latest design, of uni-directional features, and is approximately 5' 6" high by 18" deep, and is of a bowl shape. It takes up a minimum space behind screen and has incorporated in it features of both the dynamic and horn type speakers, according to Enterprise officials.

Building To Aid Seating Company

Chicago—Resumption of theatre building and re-equipping is expected to reflect favorably in business of American Seating Co., during the remainder of 1930 and in 1931. The company now is declared operating at a profit, although the second quarter net is not expected to overcome the loss of $108,460 suffered during the first quarter. This compares with profit of $41,645 in the corresponding quarter of 1929. Regular quarterly dividend due July 1 was omitted.

The company's first quarter loss is attributed directly to the curtailment of theatre building activity during 1929, due to mergers in the industry. Twenty-three per cent of the company's business is theatre, lodge and auditorium seating furniture, 45 per cent school and church furniture and supplies; church seating, 18.5 per cent, and miscellaneous seating furniture 13.5 per cent.

Don't Use Wrong Lamps, Warning

Outlet voltage tests made with a socket voltmeter, which can be obtained from any power company, are suggested by A. D. Bell, General Electric lighting engineer, as a means for determining whether outlets are delivering proper current voltage for the wattage of lamp required.

Bell stresses the importance of using lamps of the proper voltage, stating the use of the wrong type causes loss of efficiency and is extravagant. Voltmeters now are available, he says, which will record average voltage delivered over a period of hours, noting all fluctuations and denoting the proper lamp required for maximum efficiency.

Even though a power company may deliver the voltage the theatre orders, inability of the house's wiring circuit to carry the load to which it is subject may cause several volts' drop in delivering the current to outlets, according to Bell. In the older houses, particularly, difficulty along these lines is experienced.

A constant ratio of 1 to 3 exists between the percentage of voltage lost and percentage of illumination decrease, Bell states. Thus, where there is a drop of one per cent in voltage, there will be a three per cent drop in lamp efficiency and a resultant three per cent drop in illumination.

This, he warns, often leads a theatre manager to order lamps of higher wattage than are required, wasting current and money.

Atlantic City, N. J.—One of the features of the "Hollywood Motion Picture Exhibit" on the Steel Pier is a permanent display of the Brooks Costume Company, consisting of original costumes made for stars. The idea suggests duplication by showmen either through store tie-ups or by utilizing their theatre lobby space.

Sound Trailer's Spot After News

Atlanta—Sound trailers of special entertainment value should follow the newsreel on the program, in the opinion of Emmett Rogers, district manager of Publix. Trailers on other subjects should follow the last subject on the program, he says.

"I have noticed many instances of sound trailers containing revue scenes which preceded singing and dancing shorts," he declares. "Such trailers have a tendency to be hurtful to this type of unit when placed in close proximity, and probably can best be used at the end of the program.

"If the talking trailer has little entertainment value, judgment should be used as to whether or not it should be utilized following the news.

"In every possible instance, particularly in houses with effect machines, special treatment should be given to the sound trailers. We want to keep the shows moving in proper sequence and without any draggy spots, if it is within our province to eliminate them."

65 Per Cent Boost in Sound Sales Claimed

Philadelphia.—Increase of 65 per cent. in sales is reported by Universal Sound System, subsidiary of Sentry Safety Control. The report, made by President Joseph E. Cohen, covers the last six months.

—Keep the Lobby Crowds Amused—

THERE is nothing like good reproduction of music to keep the waiting crowds in theatres in good humor and in the right frame of mind to enjoy the show. This is a vital point as the waiters, when too weary, fail to appreciate the picture and then, also fail to boost it.

How Can You Get Proper Lighting? Two Experts Diagnose the Method

proven to be a commercial success. The Empire style of architecture, the entire decorative scheme, and especially the unusual lighting effects reflect great credit upon the owner and designer. The noteworthy lighting installation is the result of the splendid co-operative spirit among the parties involved, including the contractor, fixture representative, architect, and the lighting bureau of the local power company.

The exterior of the building is well illuminated by the various accepted methods, and is an attractive spectacle to the passing crowd. The electrical sign is a double faced, 5-kilowatt, flashing type using daylight lamps in the exposed letters. Surmounting the sign is a large red ball having a revolving effect. Underneath the marquee are 500 twenty-five-watt lights. The terra cotta niches on the facade are illuminated by 500-watt floodlights mounted on the roof of the marquee.

Crystal Fixture for Foyer and Lounge

The foyer is illuminated by a large crystal fixture 60 inches in diameter, having 30 forty-watt flame type lamps inside and 36 candelabra lights in ten units of three fifteen-watt lamps each mounted around the outer frame.

The first pond is wired for color lighting under the surface of the pool. The wall of the pool is lighted in four colors with twelve, fifty-watt lamps in mirrored glass reflectors, three to each color.

The mezzanine or lounge of the main foyer is illuminated by three eighteen-inch crystal fixtures, each using ten flame-type lamps. These fixtures are supplemented by seven three-light wall brackets which harmonize with the decorative scheme of the foyer. Illuminated directional signs of the silhouette type, appropriately located, are connected to the emergency circuits as well as to the regular service. Exit lights of unique design are also connected to the emergency circuits and greatly assist the patrons of the theatre in quickly locating the place of exit from the building. The softly tinted light harmonizing with the decorations has created in the lounge area an extremely restful atmosphere where patrons can relax with comfort and pleasure.

Harmonizing with Auditorium Design

In designing the auditorium, a definite plan was followed in anticipation of the lighting effects. A huge crystal luminaire is suspended from the center of the main dome, and is the predominating feature in this immense auditorium. It is of such design as to harmonize beautifully with the artist's scheme of ornaments. This luminaire, of course, is of the direct lighting type, and the sparkle from the crystals presents a very pleasing contrast to the ceiling of the dome which is softly illuminated by indirect lighting in the coves. The objectionable glare usually produced by the use of direct lighting luminaries is avoided in this case by the use of small lamps, and all of the colors used are of pastel shades. Thus, the producing of an effect without calling attention to the cause, which is essential in a theatre, has been very successfully carried out.

Supplementing the illustration provided by this fixture is the cove lighting over the balcony, wired on 25 circuits for four colors, using 1,000 twenty-five watt lamps. The dome area around the center fixture also has cove lighting, with 25 circuits using fifty-watt lamps in four colors. The proscenium coves use 100 fifty-watt lamps arranged in four colors and the footlights use the same number in similar arrangement. Silver mirrored glass reflectors with heat resisting color lenses are used in all the coves.

On each side of the auditorium are three mural paintings recessed in the wall panels. From the top of each recess is suspended a crystal luminaire 14 inches in diameter, using 16 small lamps of the four colors. Indirect lighting in colors is provided in these recesses by small lamps in reflectors, concealed in the bottom of the recess. Below the mural, the background of the recess is a paneled window of opal glass. These windows are illuminated from behind by small lamps, silhouetting the artificial vines which appear to be climbing up the panels.

Located at intervals on the walls of the auditorium are 22 three-light brackets, using 15-watt flame-type lamps. These are connected to the emergency circuits as well as the regular service. Supplementary lighting has been provided in conjunction with the ventilators on the ceiling under and over the balcony. Crystal baskets with twenty-four 50-watt lights camouflage the ventilation openings and provide the four color combinations.

Design Overcomes Glare

Crystal fixtures often produce objectionable glare, but in this installation it has been overcome in the design of the luminaires. The glitter of the crystals merges into the architectural treatment of the ceiling, and the cove lighting in the dome supplies the proper contrast in color. The usual aisle light located at every other row helps the ushers to quickly seat the patrons. These might seem small and unimportant details, but they are really paying dividends to the owner of the theatre, because the patrons appreciate them.

Throughout the entire scheme, an effort has been made to provide lighting for safety as well as beauty. The auditorium can be lighted with a low intensity, desirable when showing pictures, yet it can be instantly flooded with a relatively high intensity of illumination when desirable. In case of an explosion, fire, or other mishap, the audience can, with the aid of adequate lighting, see the proximity of the dangers, and chances for panic or accident are reduced. Contrary to past impressions, it is possible today to provide sufficient illumination to allow for reading programs and finding seats in the theatre without affecting the appearance of the screen projections.

Wiring Installation and Operation

The wiring for all the cove lighting employed a well known standardized wiring device. The use of this wiring device, in place of the customary conduit, saved considerable labor and expense and has provided an installation which is readily serviced.

The control board in the operator's room is complete in every detail and is supplemented by a similar control in the manager's office, both operating the main switchboard by the remote control system. Individual control of each of the four colors in all the coves, alcoves, fixtures, brackets, and wall panels is thus available at two points in the theatre. This general tie-in of circuits gives the most flexible and co-ordinated control possible. The operator's room is illuminated by four 300-watt semi-indirect fixtures, giving an average intensity of fifteen foot-candles.

The main service to the theatre is three-wire, 2,300 volts, No. O lead cable. From the customer's transformer vault, there is 1,500,000 circular mill wire service to the main distribution point and from here a 500,000 circular mill service is run to the main control point in the operator's room. There are in all 250 branch lighting circuits with about 180 of these for the main board alone. The motors for the dimmers are located above the board and the dimmers are located just below the floor.

The cove lighting is maintained from the top of the cove by means of removable sections which allow room for cleaning and relamping.

The wiring and lighting equipment in this theatre represents an investment of about $40,000 or approximately eight per cent of the total cost of the theatre. Motors and their installations, other than those required for the lighting equipment, are not included in this figure. This percentage of total cost is a good standard for electrical work on such jobs, as it includes a reasonable profit and at the same time it assures a satisfactory installation throughout.

The excellent lighting results obtained in the Byrd theatre just described are due entirely to co-ordinated efforts of the architect, the contractor on the job, lighting equipment salesmen, and the electric service company. Every step in the construction, preliminary lighting sketches, accepted designs and installation, is a direct result of this finely co-ordinated effort.

If the lighting men would but get the architect's point of view, they could more easily formulate their own ideas in harmony with those of the architect, as in this case. The lighting man must ably represent the company he works for, see to it that the architect is relieved of unnecessary details and in this way gain his personal interest and complete confidence. With such a procedure much less trouble will be encountered in obtaining the co-operation of the architect and better lighting progress will result.

Paramount Theatre and Office Building, New York. Theatre equipped throughout with comfortable, acoustically correct American Seating Company Chairs. C. W. & Geo. L. Rapp, Architects.

So your patrons may enjoy the play or movie infinitely more ...Reseat!

Illustrating Theatre Chair No. 7860

A chair of this type was installed in the famous Chicago Civic Opera House. Full upholstered back, spring edge seat and Moderne Standards. A triumph in building into theatre chairs maximum absorption values. Only one of the many American Seating Company types and styles of theatre seating.

"CAME THE TALKIES"... sound reproduction to synchronize with photography. Theatres dressed up... another era dawned. Beauty, harmony, comfort and acoustical perfection. That is what the public asked of theatres.

Electricity had wrought another miracle. Architects made contribution. Sound to be understood, must carry without reverberation, without echo.

So, American Seating Company saw a modern problem. They undertook acoustical research. They found that chairs of certain types have greatest sound absorption. That seats could aid the ear—as well as make for comfort and beauty.

And soon the motion picture industry found that chairs meant more than physical comfort—more than beauty to harmonize with the design and decorative charm of interiors. That to attract patrons—to keep them coming to the theatre, new sound equipment was not enough. New chairs were needed . . . chairs whose acoustical properties brought to their audiences the speaking or singing voice—clearly and undistorted.

To many, reseating—the replacing of old chairs with new—corrected sound distortions, and brought the bigger box office receipts that new sound equipment failed to bring. New, acoustically correct chairs paid for themselves in attracting capacity crowds.

How many exhibitors over in Johnny Bull's sticks booked the picture which prompted this comment in a recent issue of a British trade paper?:

"While the screen story lacks verisimilitude, it sedulously avoids the banal, and the star injects aplomb, for she is a trick little packet."

Old Time Hurts Milwaukee B. O. But Exhibs Stick

Milwaukee — The fact that Milwaukee theatres are operating on standard time, while practically all business and industrial concerns are running on daylight saving time, is not helping the box-office receipts any.

Practically all of the downtown theatres as well as the deluxe neighborhood houses offer lower price rates during certain periods of the day. In the case of the downtown theatres, a lower price scale prevails before 1 o'clock, which to 90 per cent of the citizens means 2 o'clock. Consequently many people who were unable to avail themselves of the lower prices before 1 o'clock under standard time, are now able to do so on daylight savings.

Deluxe neighborhood houses, opening at 6:30 in the evening, offer a reduced price to people attending between 6:30 and 7 o'clock. Here the difference is more keenly felt, because patrons observing daylight saving time can now get into the theatre at reduced prices until 8 o'clock. This means a considerable loss in revenue at the box-office.

Despite this fact all theatres are firm in their stand concerning operating on standard time. A number of the houses are using trailers announcing that they are operating on standard time "in accordance with the laws of Wisconsin," while many others have placards in their lobbies stating this fact.

Orpheum, Seattle, Drops a Show and Policy with It

Seattle—Radio-Keith-Orpheum's local New Orpheum, already the butt of many jokes among Pacific Northwest theatre and film men because of the rapidity with which the house has changed prices and operating policies during the two years it has been open, changed policy again this week.

Manager Ellis C. Bostick, newly appointed, has just announced discontinuance of the four-a-day vaudeville policy in vogue for the last few months. The house will revert to a three-a-day stage show program, opening at 12:30 P. M. instead of 11:30 A. M.

Added cost of the four-a-day policy because of overtime salaries for musicians, stagehands, operators, not offset by added revenue, is said to be the reason for the change.

Stage Shows Get Cold Shoulder in Publix Theatres

San Antonio—Publix officials are visibly disappointed at the reception given in Texas Publix houses to the stage shows recently resumed for the purpose of building up business. Their expectations that flesh-and-blood attractions would draw the old-time crowds have been dashed. As a result, it is predicted, they will be withdrawn after a thorough try-out.

A curious angle to the situation is the fact that although several managers desired to exploit the return of the shows, they were forbidden to do so by headquarters. There was an entire absence of ballyhoo marking the return.

Business has increased somewhat in the Houston, San Antonio and Dallas houses selected for the resumption of stage shows, but the increase for the first two weeks is far below that anticipated. No box-office figures are available—they being taboo in the South—but the increased attendance is slight, probably no more than 10 or 15 per cent.

Texas theatre managers are of the firm conviction that it is the feature picture solely that draws crowds into theatres. While flesh-and-blood entertainment is welcomed, it has no great box-office value, unless the show contains a name star.

Business depression and lack of outstanding pictures, as well as stars, are the primary causes of the present slump, in the opinion of managers. Added to this are the hundreds of miniature golf courses already in existence and the great outdoors which during the summer months lures thousands of Texans, not only at night but principally Saturdays and Sundays—the two big days in the show game.

On top of all this, Texas league teams in a short time will be playing night baseball—some teams already are.

"Hell's Angels" in Two Towns at $1

Hollywood—"Hell's Angels" opens an extended run at the Warfield, San Francisco, on July 18, with picture set for opening at the Fox, Seattle, on August 7.

Sid Grauman completed the arrangements and both houses change regulation policy of top price grind to twice daily at $1 top. The regulation Grauman prologue will not go into either spot, Grauman figuring the picture big enough to get by without the stage show in the particular cities.

"Hell's Angels" is reported already set for a Chicago booking in a Loop house towards the end of August, with Grauman figuring to premiere in New York early in September with both picture and prologue at $2 top.

Fooled

Oklahoma City—Decision of the city board of censors to pass "Ingagi" without any mention of objectionable material surprised many showmen in this town, who expected plenty of scissor-work when civic authorities took a look at the gorilla rape of the negress.

Federal Officials Yawn as 'Foul Go' Runs in Seattle

Seattle—Pictures of the recent Sharkey-Schmeling tussle in New York were being shown here this week at John Danz's downtown Winter Garden without interference by city, state or federal authorities. The films were widely advertised and attracted good patronage.

The city has no ban against the screening of fight pictures, but it surprised a great many local film and theatre men to find that the federal forces did not object to the films being transported across state borders to get into Washington.

Perhaps it was the fact that the Winter Garden was formerly operated by Frank Edwards, present mayor of Seattle. Or, again, maybe the federal forces didn't consider the Sharkey-Schmeling "go" a real prize fight!

Business Depression Kicks "All Quiet" in Cincinnati

Cincinnati—"All Quiet on the Western Front," which opened at the Shubert for an indefinite run, and which at the outset seemed destined to break attendance records, making an extra showing necessary at the end of the first week, suffered a sudden reversal of trend during the third week, and folded. Gross for the second week ran around $6,500, which was about one-half of first week's takings, with final seven days falling considerably short of this figure.

Hottest weather of the season, with no cooling system in this 2,200-seat house, was a contributing factor to the decline, although failure of two prominent local banks, resulting in temporary but heavy runs on other similar institutions here, together with opposition of amusement parks during torrid spell, accelerated the nose dive at the Shubert. Picture was playing at $2 top, with admissions scaled down to 50 cents. Other theatres, excepting those having cooling systems installed, reported some slowing down in business during same period, although not to an alarming extent.

Schram and Schultz Open Cleveland Branch

Cleveland—Local list of independent exchanges has been augmented by formation of Selected Pictures Co., organized by Fred Schram and Nate Schultz as a subsidiary branch of Ivanhoe Film Exchange. The new company will distribute state right releases in Ohio and Kentucky.

Whoopee

(United Artists — All Talker)

Big Hit Rating

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

SAMUEL Goldwyn, Eddie Cantor, Flo Ziegfeld, gorgeous scenery, beautiful girls, eye-appealing settings in Technicolor, tuneful music, brief but standout dance ensembles, clever comedy executed by Cantor—put them all together in a fast-tempo picture and you make "Whoopee"!

There is no question that "Whoopee" will hit heavy when it finally reaches the theatres. It's a cinch for $2 scales in the big centers and should turn in substantial runs and business in those spots. At top prices in the extended runs and regulation houses, Cantor is going to tear them right out of the seats—and the settings and music will make the natives open their eyes wide.

Caught in first preview form at San Diego, Calif., "Whoopee" was pretty nearly down to release footage, running a total of 95 minutes. From the looks of things, the picture was very close to final cut, with very few draggy moments apparent. The San Diego audience is the average of towns and cities of from 10,000 to 500,000 population. How they took it can best be explained that this reviewer "clocked" 22 general laughs in the first reel—and then stopped counting, figuring it would be too much arm exercise to chalk up the entire picture.

"Whoopee" cannot be classed with the general run of filmusical comedies that seemed to be on the downgrade with audiences generally. It's a standout comedy with laughs toppling over each other continually and brief respites given the audiences to recover for the next spasm via brief effective songs or dance ensembles. Cantor is in front of the camera over 75 per cent of the time, and never misses a chance for laughs.

The picture opens with a most effective shot of cowgirls and cowboys in colorful costumes riding across the desert towards the camera. This laps into courtyard of rancho, with boys and girls doing fast dance number; made more effective by unusual camera angle shots from sides and overhead.

Soon after, Cantor makes his entrance as the anemic and medicine-consuming invalid who is continually being given up by the medics. After his opening comedy routine, Eddie exits to the courtyard to sing a brief ditty, and walk off to the wedding with the bridesmaids. After brief footage for introduction of other characters who are to carry the story thread, Cantor comes on again to be persuaded into a fake elopement with the bride, who wants to escape the marriage because of her love for the half breed Indian.

The pair start out in a Ford and run out of gas on the narrow mountain road, giving Cantor an opportunity to get over more laughs through his attempts to discover the trouble. A Lincoln comes down the trail, with Cantor continuing his clowning for additional roars, finally holding up the party for enough gas to get him on his way.

Then Cantor and the girl bump over the desert to a palatial rancho, and the two are induced into service by the caretaker to help prepare for the arrival of the owner and his expected guests. Cantor assumes the post of cook—more gags and laughs.

The owner and his party arrive—the same crew that Cantor had held up on the mountain road. Soon afterward, the sheriff and his crowd turn up looking for Cantor and the girl. Eddie gets into an argument on operations with the millionaire owner and duplicates the operation sequence of the stage show that keeps up a continual roar for nearly five minutes. Then, to avoid detection, Cantor dives into the gas oven, and comes out soon after in blackface via the stove explosion.

He finally escapes and goes to the Indian camp, donning a brave's outfit at that location for more comedy. Finale at this point after tableaux, with Cantor agreeing to marry his nurse who has been chasing him through the entire picture.

"Whoopee" is not a filmusical comedy as the screen has previously known this type of entertainment. It is strictly a comedy with plenty of gags and laugh situations and sequences—with a slight auxiliary story to hold things together logically, plus only six songs and about three ensemble dances. Of the song numbers, three are comedy renditions by Cantor himself: "Making Whoopee," "The Girl Friend of a Boy Friend of Mine" and "My Baby Just Cares for Me."

Nothing to equal the dance ensembles has so far been seen in pictures. Instead of using large numbers to put these across, a group of only 24 girls was used, and the various dances were kept to minimum footage. The 24 girls were said to have been selected from about 700 of the best lookers in Hollywood and New York, and they sure are the last word in pulchritude.

Goldwyn went for the bankroll in presenting the finale, an Indian tableau that perhaps surpasses anything yet produced on the screen.

Eddie Cantor carries practically the entire picture on his own shoulders and makes an excellent job of it. The balance of the cast is unknown to picture audiences, but nevertheless is satisfactory. Ethel Shutta is a particular standout as the comedienne opposite Cantor; while Paul Gregory scores with his singing of the love theme song. Chief Caupolican, noted Indian singer, renders "The Song of the Setting Sun" effectively at the finale.

Thornton Freeland turned in an excellent job on the directorial end.

Technicolor, used entirely, was good and poor in spots. As print seen was first positive, it is likely that general release prints will be brought up evenly through proper color processing.

Newsreel and cartoon sufficient.

Produced by Samuel Goldwyn and Florenz Ziegfeld. Released by United Artists. From the musical comedy by William Anthony McGuire. Screen adaptation by William Conselman. Directer by Thornton Freeland. Photography by Lee Garmes, Ray Renahan and Gregg Toland. Music by Walter Donaldson. Lyrics by Gus Kahn. Busby Berkeley, dance director. Length, about 8,550 feet. Running time at preview, 95 minutes. Release date, Sept. 7.

Doesn't Hold Up

Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" has been dusted from the shelf and, with a synchronized score and several song interludes applied, again goes into distribution via the American Trading Association.

The picture reveals its age at every turn. Lighting and photography are very patently of the vintage of 1916 and the acting seems quaint and very ham-like as compared with the standards of today.

Scored by Chromotone and analyzed on the basis of what a projection room showing revealed, the musical score is mediocre and indifferently handled.

"Civilization," in its new form, can't hold up against 1930 product.

KANN

Grumpy

(Paramount—All Talker)

Delightful Comedy Drama

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

THIS talker is one of those sincere and delightful pictures that are sometimes made from a stage play. It is done in an exceedingly light manner and will provide clever entertainment for all audiences.

"Grumpy" is played by Cyril Maude, whose 1,600 performances as this character on the stage seem to make him live the part of the grouchy, yet lovable, "Grumpy" Hullivant.

The story deals with the robbery of a large and valuable diamond from Phillips Holmes, who is much in love with Frances Dade, Maude's grand-daughter. The failure of Holmes to deliver the diamond to its owners will cost him his job and prevent him from marrying Frances. The diamond is stolen by Paul Cavanaugh, a house guest at the Hullivant home, and it is only through the detective work of Maude, who was formerly with the secret service, that the stone is recovered. In the romantic lead Holmes does splendidly. Paul Cavanaugh, Frances Dade and Doris Luray are capable in their parts while Holliwell Hobbes as the butler does a nice bit of work.

Ably directed by Cyril Gardner and George Cukor, this melodramatic comedy will meet with great approval if the public can be attracted by Maude's name as star.

Musical and novelty shorts will go well here.

Produced and distributed by Paramount Publix. Story by Horace Hodges and Thomas Wigney Percyval. Adaptation and dialogue by Doris Anderson. Edited by Jane Loring. Photographed by David Abel. Directed by George Cukor and Cyril Gardner. Length, 5,940 feet. Running time, 66 minutes. Release date, Aug. 23.

Lost Gods

(Talking Picture Epics—Synchronized)

Interesting

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

ANOTHER of those travel pictures of little-known parts of the world and made by the archaeologist and explorer, Count Byron Khun de Prorak, director of the Franco-American expedition in Libya. It was produced under the auspices of the Algiers Museum.

The production shows in minute detail the search for tombs of the headline figures of centuries ago, especially that of the Queen of the Sahara from whom the white races in that section sprang. The motor caravan is pictured traveling from place to place, at each spot managing to find relics of the ancient past, including skeletons and the handiwork of dead civilizations. Magnificent ruins are uncovered, demonstrating that the old boys weren't so slow after all.

As entertainment it is slow and draggy, but it will impart a kick to those interested in archaeology. Count Prorak delivers a synchronized lecture, with a background of oriental music, describing the work of the expedition.

Use plenty of comedy and musical relief in the line of shorts.

Distributed by Talking Pictures Epics, Inc. Produced under the auspices of the Algiers Museum. Synchronized lecture by Count Byron Khun de Prorak. Music score arranged from original oriental melodies by Sven and Eugene Von Hallberg. Running time, 53 minutes.

For the Defense

(Paramount—All Talker)

Gangsters and Underworld Again

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

IT SEEMS that Paramount is finding it extremely difficult to get William Powell away from the underworld atmosphere in his stories. This time they partially succeed, however, with Powell in the role of an attorney for gangsters and racketeers.

Audiences unsurfeited with the over-abundance of crime pictures will get somewhat of a kick out of "For the Defense"—mainly on account of its rather interesting story and several good performances among members of the cast. All in all, it's another underworld melodrama that rates slightly better than general program calibre.

Powell is cast as an attorney who has achieved a reputation for seldom losing his cases; with the result that his clients are mostly of the underworld class. The more reputable lawyers are hot on Powell's trail in an attempt to get something on him, as is the district attorney who does not relish continual defeats at the clever attorney's hands.

The lawyer is in love with Kay Francis, an actress, but does not wish to marry her because he feels she does not love him. The girl, in turn, is loved by the scion of a wealthy family who presses her for an answer to his proposal. While the pair are riding, they hit another car and kill a man. Kay was driving, and her companion, although somewhat intoxicated, makes her leave and takes the blame himself.

Eventually Powell is called in as the defense attorney. Neither the boy nor Miss Francis want him to know of their ride together on the fateful trip, for fear of hurting him. Powell realizes the boy is holding back something in his testimony, and it looks like a conviction will be returned. In the end, the attorney resorts to jury bribing—with the trailing detective getting the goods on him most convincingly.

Miss Francis tells her story to Powell then, but he refuses to believe it. Then the sharp attorney thwarts her attempts to get him out of the situation by pleading guilty and accepting sentence willingly—knowing the girl will be waiting for him when he comes out.

There are some dramatic highspots that sustain interest, but the picture fails to rise above general program classification. The combination of Powell and a capable cast does much to heighten interest.

Good comedies and musical shorts will round out this one nicely.

MAN FROM WYOMING" is another

(Paramount—All Talker)

Another War Drama

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

"A MAN FROM WYOMING" is another war picture that, although greatly handicapped by an incongruous story, becomes fair screen entertainment, mainly through capable performances and good direction. Geared to hit normal business in the regular program week runs and succeeding split weeks.

Although the picture has numerous battle scenes, deftly portrayed, they lack the stark realism and horror of war scenes as shown in recent pictures. They are, nevertheless, forceful.

Gary Cooper, as a captain in the U. S. Army Engineers, gives a fine performance. He leaves the building of dams and bridges in far-off Wyoming and with his pal, Regis Toomey, joins the army. June Collyer as the much-petted and pampered society girl is a member of the Welfare Corps. Dissatisfied with the lack of excitement in this branch of service, she goes to the front. Here she finds plenty of excitement—and Cooper, who, after making the girl hike to the back lines on a forced march that was exhausting to the men, decides that June is a thoroughbred. At the rest camp they see a great deal of each other, fall in love, and secretly marry.

Cooper is called back to the front and June goes to rejoin her company. As she is awaiting court-martial for her absence, she reads in the paper of Cooper's death. Broken-hearted and ousted from the service, she opens up the family chateau and in order to forget her misery, entertains the men from a nearby hospital. This entertainment consists of one wild party after the other.

Cooper, alive but injured, is taken to the base hospital for treatment. There he hears of June's wild activities and decides to learn why she had seemingly forgotten him. He goes to her and she is much surprised at his appearance. He tells her that the life she leads is not his kind and that if she is not content to live on his $300 a month salary they should part. She rebels at this, saying he can live off her fortune, but he refuses to do so. They part and Cooper leaves for the front.

Toomey, finding out what has happened, goes to June and tells her what kind of a girl he thinks she is for throwing Cooper over. She sees the light and goes in search of Cooper. Finding him, they make up and all ends well.

Toomey and Miss Collyer handle their parts well, but it is Cooper's work that carries the talker over many rough spots in the story.

Those Who Dance

(Warners—All Talker)

Fair Crook Drama

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

THE work of William Boyd stands out head and shoulders above the rest of the cast, although this picture boasts a good line-up of players. This is the stage William Boyd, who made a big hit in "What Price Glory," playing the Sergeant Quirt role which Edmund Loew did on the screen. Boyd is a gang leader and he surely makes a hard-boiled racketeer.

During a robbery Boyd kills a policeman and frames a youthful member of his gang, who is sentenced to the chair. The kid's sister goes to live with Boyd and his girl, and when the latter, for revenge, tells her Boyd is the real killer, she enlists the aid of the police. The murdered policeman's brother is assigned to the case, and he poses as an out-of-town gangster and sweetheart of the condemned youth's sister. He finally gets the goods on the gangster, is rescued from death by the girl and rounds up the gang, to save the condemned youth from the chair.

Betty Compson is featured, but she hasn't a great deal to do as the gangster's girl, Lila Lee's part as the sister being considerably more important. William Janney is good as the framed youth and Monte Blue is fair as the policeman posing as a gangster. De Witt Jennings is the always reliable police inspector and Wilfred Lucas and Cornelius Keefe do good work.

Lila Lee and Betty Compson are featured in the billing, but the Beacon, New York, featured Boyd and Compson. Boyd certainly is entitled to top billing, particularly where he is known for his stage work, and always avoiding confusion with the veteran film star, William Boyd.

Musical shorts and comedy will balance well with this.

Exciting Melodrama

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

BETTY COMPSON and Ralph Forbes in a drama of the war, laid against the colorful background of Gibraltar. Both are in the employ of the British secret service, but this is not revealed until the final fadeout. There is plenty of suspense, meanwhile. Betty apparently is in the employ of the German government, and is despatched by the Kaiser's service to Gibraltar, where she poses as the friend of the general's wife, in order to obtain information which will result in the destruction of the British fleet. In Germany before the war, she had met and fallen in love with Forbes, but disappeared when war was declared. He appears on the scene at Gibraltar as a British officer and also seems to be a German spy. He tries to keep her from stealing the key, feigns suicide when he sees the real German spy behind a curtain and kills the latter while he is trying to pull the switch which will blow up the fleet.

Miss Compson gives a fine performance and gets an opportunity to demonstrate her ability as a violinist. She is a smooth operator and makes her difficult characterization ring true. Forbes also is good. Montagu Love as the general is a forceful personality, Reginald Sherland as Archie furnishes some fair comedy and Betty Carter as Lady Crandall is good. All in all, it's a well balanced cast, making the picture a considerably better-than-ordinary program attraction. Roy Pomeroy did a good job of directing.

Save for a few long shots of the fleet, there is no war stuff, so the usual battle unpleasantries are missing. Stress this in advertising, also the angle of mystery as to the real identity of the principals.

Musical shorts and comedy with this.

The Little Accident

(Universal—All Talker)

Plenty Good

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

THERE is no question of the box-office potentialities of "The Little Accident." It has been capably transferred to the screen to provide a wealth of genuine entertainment and plenty of laughs. Hitting a fast tempo at the very start, the picture maintains the pace right through to the finish—with comedy lines and sequences niccly spotted to get just about everything possible out of the farce.

"The Little Accident" rates attention from the largest de luxe week run houses for openings in the key cities. Subsequent split weeks will take care of themselves through word-of-mouth advertising. It's just one of those wholesome laugh pictures with chances of holding over for two or three weeks in the extended runs.

Story opens with Fairbanks, Jr., preparing for his wedding day. A mysterious letter arrives, asking him to come to a maternity hospital in Chicago. Doug then remembers a previous love affair and marriage which was annulled immediately after. Arriving at the hospital, the youth is subjected to a physical examination without knowing what it's all about.

Then he is told the former wife has a boy, and the youngster will be given out for legal adoption. Doug wants to see the baby, and is assigned to a chair in the reception room. There he finds Slim Summerville, a nervous and expectant father; and Henry Armetta, who is waiting to take his wife and child home. The situation of Summerville waiting for his first child, in contrast to the matter-of-fact father of six, Armetta—develops round after round of laughs.

Finally Fairbanks sees his own youngster—four weeks old—and decides it is wrong to allow the kid to be given out for adoption. Then he meets Anita Page as she is leaving the hospital, and tells her the youngster needs them. She remains firm, and finally departs. Through a ruse, the young father is able to kidnap his own child from the hospital, and secures an apartment to take care of it himself. Zasu Pitts does her best to housekeep and assist with the child's care.

They get into trouble in trying to figure out the baby's diet, and Zasu calls the hospital, asking for advice and giving Fairbanks' name and phone number. Then he is downcast—they will take the child away from him as he has no wife. Then Zasu offers to marry him, and he agrees that's the only way out.

Soon Anita Page arrives in a rage to regain her child. Argument between the young father and mother starts, with both obstinate. Then Sally Blane, Doug's intended bride, comes in to complicate matters. Doug finds himself with three women on his hand—but Zasu leaves in disappointment. Then Sally Blane departs, announcing to Fairbanks her engagement to Roscoe Karns. Albert Gran, Doug's father, puts in an appearance and gives his son and Anita the parental blessing. Finale brings the two together with resolve to start over again with the baby as the bond of affection.

Deft handling of the story itself and the various comedy situations, in both treatment and direction, has resulted in one of the outstanding farce comedies of the season. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., carries the major burden of the picture on his own shoulders, and turns in a remarkable characterization. Next in linc are Slim Summerville and Henry Armetta, both of whom score heavily in thc hospital sequences. Roscoe Karns is capable and good for many laughs as the best man "fixer" for the young husband, while Anita Page and Sally Blane are acceptable in rather limited parts.

Musical shorts ond cortoons would fit well here.

Last of the Duanes

(Fox—All Talker)

Good Western

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

"THE LAST OF THE DUANES" is just about the wooliest rough-riding, gun-barking western that has been released for some months past. It has all the elements of the good old Hart and Mix features wrapped into one package.

In figuring the box-office angle, the picture shapes up as a good western of program calibre that is rather light for the week runs, but an ideal attraction for the split weeks and daily changes where westerns and George O'Brien are favorites.

The outstanding feature of "The Last of the Duanes" is the marvelous scenic shots that were obtained in and around the Grand Canyon. The full scope of the startling vistas of the great gorge are caught in many of the backgrounds.

The story concerns a cowboy who returns home to find his father murdered by a shot in the back. He discovers the murderer—kills him—and becomes an outlaw. In the course of events, he is charged with various crimes, but always manages to elude the law.

Then he falls in with a gang of desperadoes, and finds a beautiful girl in the clutches of the gang leader. After several sequences developing thc story in the gang headquarters, the young bandit and the girl escape to the parson's home for the final clinch.

George O'Brien, as the young cowboy and bandit hero, looks and acts like a real he-man. His portrayal was excellent. Walter McGrail was satisfactory as the bandit leader, while Frank Campeau was acceptable as the tender-hearted outlaw. The girl, Lucille Brown, looked innocent and helpless enough as the heroine.

Good comedies needed to help this one along.

Worth a Play

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

IF WESTERN program attractions were produced with as much intelligent and high regard for the picturegoer's sense of entertainment value as this, many booking problems would be solved. In other words, this is a near-perfect Western of the program species. And as such, you'll agree that it's a rarity on a market flooded to the gills with cheap and sappy Western bunk.

The production is a splendid example of what effective fast-action sound and camera work can do, working hand in hand to enhance the entertainment qualities of an outdoor shoot 'em up yarn of the plains. And whoever picked the locations should be kept on the payroll permanently. They are not only beautiful but refreshingly different from the stock hill-and-valley locale found in too many outdoor adventure yarns.

Buck Jones, unquestionably, knows his saddle. Of course, the whole show is his, but Buck, at his best as he is here, will never be called a "camera hog" by lovers of Westerns. His performance is right, and the cast headed by Vera Reynolds give him good support from opening shot to "finis." They all work very hard to put over the thrills and horsemanship display which Director King injected at opportune spots.

The story is not new, but Buck's fans probably won't mind that. It concerns the decision of a crack shot in a gang of bad hombres to ditch the gang—all "rats"—and go it alone. On his first stage stickup, he encounters the pretty daughter of a judge from the neighboring town. As usual, she supplies the love interest to spur Jim on to "greater things in life," and he becomes the head of Gold City's vigilante committee which swears vengeance on outlaws.

Jim's old gang hear of a gold delivery to the town bank, make the break and force Jim to disappear. Naturally, the girl's father, knowing of his past, immediately fastens blame for the safe cracking job on him. But Jim, by tough fighting, shows 'em who the bad boys are, and the lovey-dovey clinch follows.

A cartoon and a good slapstick comedy will poir off great with this.

Program Underworld Melodrama

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

A TYPICAL underworld melodrama that starts off with the killing of two gangsters and ends with a most thrilling and realistic fight between Richard Dix and Mathew Betz.

The tale is built upon the reformation of Dix from a racketeer into a reformer. Dix, fleeing from the murder of another gangster, is seriously injured when the train upon which he is riding is wrecked. He is taken to the home of the town minister and his beautiful daughter. She nurses him back to health and they fall for each other heavy. She thinks that he is a famous reformer, as a purse belonging to a man of that calibre is found upon Dix.

Dix's love for the girl, Mary Lawlor, causes him to stay in the town and follow the straight and narrow path. Her brother, William Janney, has given a number of I.O.U.'s to Mathew Betz for gambling debts. Betz operates a gambling joint in the town and is running a crooked game. He tells Miss Lawlor of the money her brother owes and threatens to tell her father if she does not pay his price, which is not money. She finally agrees in order to save her brother, but Dix takes a hand and by using his gambling skill wins all the I.O.U.'s, Betz's money and lease. Betz, wary of Dix's skill, figures him to be "Lucky" Larry Sheldon and notifies the police. Dix gets hep to the game and he and Betz stage a furious battle, which Dix finally wins, but as he is leaving the place with Mary the cops arrive. They take Betz, who is wanted for a former crime, and let Dix go, another gangster having admitted the killing for which Dix was wanted. Dix is therefore free and he decides to go straight—with Miss Lawlor.

Dix does well in his dramatic role while Miss Lawlor and Betz are very capable. Robert Emmett O'Connor, George Cooper and William Janney are also well cast.

Audiences that like underworld stuff will find this one okay. Is satisfactory for week bookings and subsequent runs, generally.

Oh! Sailor, Behave!

(Warners—All Talker)

Decidedly Spotty

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

WARNERS started out to make a filmusical version of "See Naples and Die," by Elmer Rice. Somewhere along the line it was decided to inject the comedy team of Olsen and Johnson into the proceedings to bolster up the laugh angles of the picture.

The result as shown on the screen is a hodgepodge of story, comedy, music and slapstick with all of the cast struggling through as best they can with impossible assignments and providing a screen yarn that has the audience wondering just what it is all about by the time the final scenes flash on.

Loosely constructed and rather wild and trite at times, the picture can hope for only mild attention from the paying public. For the week runs, it needs plenty of assistance from either a stage show or excellent "name" shorts; in the program split weeks it will slip through without any fireworks.

Olsen and Johnson, former vaudeville team, make their first dive into pictures via the canals of Naples. They put in periodic appearances on the screen to carry all the comedy element, assisted by Lotti Loder, who looks like a potential comer, though she had little to do. Olsen and Johnson bring to the screen nearly all of their old-time vaude routine which was easily recognized by Los Angeles audiences, who had seen the entire bag of tricks of the pair in local vaudeville and musical comedy houses for several years. Some of the Olsen and Johnson sequences provided laughs; then again much of their sure-fire stage material failed to get a tumble.

It is reported that the team has signed a long-term contract with Warners for featured spots as a result of their work in this picture. Regardless of certain enthusiasm, it looks as though their stay in pictures will be just as long as they can dig up their old-time vaude routines and no longer. Many better, and more spontaneous, comedians have been given return fare to New York by Hollywood producers during the past year.

There's a love story, or the semblance of one, unfolded during the picture. Charles King and Irene Delroy attempt vainly to carry this section, with a few songs to help them along. Of the balance of the cast, Vivian Oakland stands out in relief with a vamp performance that clicks.

Dramatic shorts and cartoons will help here.

Okay—Programmer

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

THE strong spots in this one have sufficient strength to bolster up the weak moments, giving an average rating close to par on the scale of diverting screenfare. At the split week stands, it is questionable whether it will hold up, but for houses where breakneck horsemanship, stunts and action are welcomed, there's no doubt as to its pulling power, particularly with Ken Maynard followers, who can be promised a fast moving yarn in a colorful setting.

Only its treatment redeems the lack of originality of the story, a Spanish-California affair centering around the middle 1800's. They brushed things up a bit, trimming down the rough edges and fitting it very closely around Ken, who, with Tarzan, his horse, gives the fans enough thrilly hokum for any one evening. Sequences in which Maynard rides three horses, standing upon the backs of the outer two, are particularly commendable.

Maynard, accompanied by a team which supplies the comedy, wanders over southern California as a tricky holdup man, but he molests only the Madera family, harboring a desire for vengeance because of the ill treatment accorded his mother by Pedro Madera, head of the family, who is also the brother of Ken's mother. Ken keeps the nephew relationship with Pedro, played by Francis Ford, a secret until close to the end of the story, when the two are reconciled Doris Hill, a pleasing personality, offers the love interest.

Les Mason's dialogue is splendid, and very appropriate.

Trite; Program Stuff

(Reviewed by Sherwin S. Kane)

THIS is inconsequential program fare which apes—none too well—a half dozen other pictures which, in themselves, were unimportant. A casual cast goes through its prescribed gestures in the manner of doing just another job. Trite and unbelievable situations add to the general impression of this one's inferiority.

The comeliness of the mis-cast star, Mary Nolan, is a minor redeeming feature; as is a single sequence toward the close in which the star, in a grand sacrificial gesture, takes her life by leaping from a carnival balloon. The commendable staging and photographing of this scene revives an interest in the picture that has been waning progressively up to this point.

"Young Desire," adapted from the stage play "Carnival," is the story of a side show carnival dancer, dissatisfied with her lot as a "ten cents a look" girl and ambitious to become a "$5 a look" girl. Her ambition leads her to a small town where she meets with the naive scion of the first family—a lad of schoolboy age, played by William Janney. She is established in a comfortable apartment by the youth wherein they learn to love one another—undemonstratively. This clean thing in her life brings about her regeneration, manifested in her intention to look for work. Here the boy's doting parents enter the scene and with one of those familiar pleas to "think of his future," scare away the female menace to the family name. She returns to the carnival pursued by the youth, but solves everything by obliterating herself in the balloon leap.

The work of the supporting cast is uniformly undistinguished. Sound recording and photography are good. So are the carnival settings.

This one needs all the good short subject support possible.

Love Among the Millionaires

(Paramount—All Talker)

Spotty

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

CLARA BOW is starred in this attempt at something-or-other, but she's got tough competition in Mitzi Green. In fact, Mitzi practically steals the story and in one sequence gives an impersonation of Clara that ought to make the latter envious. Mitzi ought to be given Clara's roles in the future.

Clara plainly gives evidence of having gone all the way through the 180-day Hollywood diet and her slimness adds to her appeal, but what a sloppy role the boys in the executive cubby holes handed her. She smears her emoting all over the place, thanks to the scenario writer, and before the story is half over you hope she's been dropped. All you care to see thereafter is Mitzi, Skeets Gallagher and Stuart Erwin.

And, speaking of Skeets and Stuart, what a dandy comedy team they make. They're a pair of goofy small towners in this and the gags they net out of a flivver bag a bundle of laughs. Stanley Smith is the lovelorn hero and he and Clara indulge in a number of saccharine songs that are extraordinarily annoying. There's one exception—"That's Worth While Waiting For." Clara sings it with appropriate patter while slinging out the hash in a dump cafe, and the tune is almost good enough not to be in a picture.

The author must have taken a shot in the arm before he sat down to type out this vehicle.

Fast Worker

Film Hero—Every time I kiss you it makes me a better man.

Heroine—Well, you don't have to try to get to heaven in one night.

Old stuff.

Charles Sellon, Claude King and Theodor von Eltz give capital performances, but Barbara Bennett does not live up to the family tradition. She was ill at ease at all times before the camera.

Okay for hot weather entertainment. The laughs will carry it, but it's too bad that they have to be interrupted by a puppy love romance.

Good Program Offering

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

DESPITE the title, which would indicate something of a sexy nature, this is a clean and wholesome baseball yarn. The story is fairly obvious, the acting none too good and direction just fair, but it has some laughs and heart interest which put it over. As a program offering, it stacks up as an attraction which will satisfy.

Benny Rubin heads the cast and walks away with the picture. He manages to inject quite a few laughs and some heart appeal in spite of the trite story. Rex Lease is fair as the big-headed baseball pitcher, but his work in this is below that of "Troopers Three." Alice Day is just so-so, playing opposite. Natalie Moorhead is an effective vamp, in spite of the lines given her, John Ince is good as the manager and Paul Hurst injects some forced humor; Mary Carr is effective and Pert Kelton does her best with a silly part.

The speedy transition of the Pittsburgh team in the world's series game is pretty far-fetched and a lot of the other sequences are overdrawn, but Rubin saves the day with his comedy antics and dialect.

The story concerns a young pitcher, who gets high hat after developing into a star. He goes the whole route, ignoring instructions and training rules and falling for a gold digger. He is brought to his senses and wins the series, after his pal, the catcher, turns up for the game, following an airplane accident.

Sell this on its baseball angle and try to offset the adverse effect of the title. Rubin, veteran vaudeville headliner, is your best name bet, so plug him hard.

Singer of Seville

(M. G. M.—All Talker)

Novarro Singing a Hit

(Reviewed by Edwin Schallert)

THE strength of this picture lies in its operatic climax. Ramon Novarro does a Martinelli, singing the tenor aria from "I' Pagliacci" in a way to make even Lawrence Tibbett jealous. Ramon must have been holding out vocally heretofore, because while he has exhibited a light and pleasing quality in "Devil-May-Care" and "In Gay Madrid," the first time that he has really "burst forth" into song is in "The Singer of Seville."

Like several other pictures the star has made, this story, with a Spanish setting, is designed chiefly to exploit the Novarro vocal attainments. It is a romantic affair, somewhat confused by a religious angle that may possibly encounter some prejudice. Dorothy Jordan is again the Novarro leading woman, and other important roles are played by Nance O'Neil, Renee Adoree, Ernest Torrence, Mathilda Comont and Russell Hopton.

Novarro, at first, is seen as a cafe performer, a gay blood of Spain much pursued by his coworker Lola (Miss Adoree) but quite evasive of her amorous interest in him. He is a bit of a rapscallion too, as is shown when he steals a shawl at a carnival, and, by his other mischievous actions, turns the place into a rout.

Admiring Juan (Novarro), is the little novice in the convent, Maria. She has glimpsed him from atop the high wall of the religious institution, as he sang and danced in the cabaret, and has built up around him an aura of romance. She has adopted the religious life following her relative's wishes and her brother Enrique is insistent that she pursue it. When she makes her escape from the convent she meets Juan who is then fleeing from the fiesta and the police. Super-egotist that he is, he decides he will adopt and protect her. He has no romantic interest in her whatsoever, and in their dwelling together under the same roof they are chaperoned by his vocal teacher, Escoban, portrayed by Ernest Torrence.

It is determined that Juan shall go to Madrid for a try-out for the opera, and with Escoban and Maria he sets forth. The hearing is productive of no results, chiefly because of the arrogant impertinence of the young singer. Then Escoban, devoted to the boy, decides to buy a performance. "Not until he has a broken heart, and has suffered will he be able really to sing," is his conclusion.

Meanwhile Juan has fallen in love with Maria, and they are to be married. While they are preparing to celebrate the engagement the girl's brother enters, and after a duel of conflict with Novarro, finally convinces him that it is utterly wrong for him to take the girl away from her religious life. The spurned Lola is at the bottom of this plot, and Juan uses her conveniently to disillusion Maria by pretending to make love to her. The girl is glad enough then to return to her former seclusion.

Of course, the ending is ultimately happy. Juan, really broken-hearted, sings a triumphant performance at the opera, but collapses right after "Vesti la Giubba." Grief is preventing his recovery, and finally Lola straightens things out by appealing to the Mother Superior of the convent. Maria, who has taken no vows, is released.

The story has a certain artificial quality, even though the facts as set forth cannot perhaps be wholly questioned.

Short action or cartoon comedy preferred with this.

Shorts at Their Best

THE title is self-descriptive of this new Tom Terris "Vagabond Adventure," which rates equally as high as its predecessors as a purveyor of entertainment. Splendid; should be booked by every house. The caption tells the story. Running time, about 12 minutes.

Run this one with a feature comedy for best results.

Voice of Hollywood No. 13

(Tiffany-Sound)

Fair Short

STATION S-T-A-R with Ruth Roland doing her stuff as the guest announcer. Charley King offers a song, Jack Benny a few wisecracks, Estelle Taylor a few bows and Davey Lee gives his impressions of a visit to the zoo. Miss Roland also does a tap dance. The series is building up quite a following and this number holds up the average. Running time, 10 minutes.

Okay for any bill.

The Chumps

(Sennett-Educational—Talker)

Okay

TOO much plot in this short, which is based on a magazine story, reduces the opportunities for gags, with the result that anyone walking in during the middle of the offering would be under the impression that a feature was being shown. Franklin Pangborn and Marjorie Beebe, playing a pair of honeymooners, get roped in by a band of card sharps and lose all their dough. The groom gets it all back in a clever manner. Andy Clyde makes the most of a slight part and, as usual, is good for many laughs. This short proves that gags and lines are needed more than a story to get over a comedy. However, it's entertaining throughout. Directed by Mack Sennett. Running time, 21 minutes.

Excellent for a heavy feature.

Alaskan Knights

(Columbia-Sound Cartoon)

Very Funny

ANOTHER of the Krazy Kat cartoon comics, which has quite a few laughs. The dizzy antics, as the title indicates, take place in Alaska, where the boys whoop it up to a series of tunes, beer and the rest of the trimmings. A fine subject for any bill. Running time, 8 minutes.

Dandy for comedy relief.

Bully Beef

(Educational—Sound)

Average

THIS Paul Terry-Toon is not up to the level of some of its predecessors, but it manages to click a satisfactory quota of laughs. The idea rambles all over, the high spot showing a squad of soldiers playing football with a big shell the enemy has dropped, with their buddies shouting "We want a touchdown" from the trenches. Running time, 6 minutes.

Spot it into a bill that needs lightening.

Goodbye Legs

(Sennett-Educational—Talker)

Fair

NOT many laughs in this, due to a long-winded story and a paucity of gag situations. It contains a good cast, including Andy Clyde, Nick Stuart, Ann Christy and Daphne Pollard, but their time was wasted on the vehicle. It's the story of a theatrical producer's son who signs up a girl at $1,000 per week as a dancer on his own hook when he gets a glimpse at her face, but the old man welches on the contract when he sees her legs. At that particular moment, however, she is wearing a pair of leg forms which give her pins a fat appearance. The dame sues and most of the action takes place in the courtroom with Andy, believe it or not, acting as his own attorney. The girl accidentally displays her legs on the witness stand—and that ends the suit. The laughs are scattered, but the short will get by with the average audience. Directed by Mack Sennett. Running time, 21 minutes.

Will serve on any type of bill.

Audio Review, No. 28

(Pathe—Sound)

Better Than Average

COMBINING the beauty of nature, trick photography and the romance of old cellos, all blended into a well balanced subject overflowing with entertainment value.

Tinted stock enhances the artistic splendor of "Desert Giant," in which is depicted still life on the Arizona desert, with its tall Sahauros cactus growths standing by sentinel-like. The Wurlitzer collection of cello antiquities, all with colorful histories, precedes "Double Trouble," in which trick photography shots of Ann Pennington are brought into play. Running time, 10 minutes.

Suitable as novelty balance on a feature comedy bill.

Mind Your Own Business

Entertaining

LIGHT musical comedy stuff in which they use a female impersonator to give the subject a twist different from the stock vaudeville-type yarn, Director Monte Carter succeeds in turning out a two-reeler with plenty of pep and pleasing jazz tunes. Running time, 17 minutes.

It will resemble the Roxy, New York City, and will be located a short block from the present R-K-O house.

Exploiting Sex in Sex Pictures Is "Honest Policy"

To achieve the greatest honesty in advertising pictures it is necessary to exploit sex angles when they are preponderant in a picture in the same manner that less sensitized characteristics are exploited in lily white productions. That is the opinion given by Jack Hess, director of advertising and exploitation for RKO theatres from the Mid-West to the Pacific Coast, in commending on the recently adopted advertising code.

"If sex or profligacy is not to be treated in advertising a picture in which the two play a prominent part no genuine honesty in advertising is to be attained," Hess said. "It is essential to advertising honesty to tell your prospective audience what type of picture your theatre is exhibiting. A distinctly sex picture can be made unrecognizable by restrained advertising. That is as dishonest a procedure as representing a picture of a different type to be primarily 'sexy'."

"In either case," Hess pointed out, "the results are detrimental to the theatre. If sex angles of a picture are ignored, your advertising attracts an audience that may have avoided your picture were it frankly treated; but, having seen it, may be disgusted. At the same time, over-emphasis of sex angles in advertising pictures not preponderantly in that classification attracts an audience that will be just as disappointed in what it has seen.

Blames Hollywood

"True honesty in picture advertising gives an accurate estimate of the character of the production. If sex is not to be flaunted in theatre advertising, it should have no prominence in the production. The responsibility is Hollywood's. We have to sell, and sell honestly, what Hollywood gives us."

By way of illustration of his point, Hess reviewed his advertising copy on "Party Girl" (Tiffany).

"This was a distinctly sex picture," he said. "Were it not advertised as such it would have attracted audiences whose tastes it might have outraged. Advertised honestly for what it was, audiences had no one but themselves to blame if they were offended by it.

"On the other hand, the picture now current at our Woods Theatre here (M-G-M's "Richest Man in the World") is a drama of family life that incorporates a few minor sex sequences. To flaunt these sequences to the exclusion of all others would be to do an injustice to the production and to misrepresent the picture to your audiences. It would attract the sensation seeking patron who would be disappointed in it and exclude the lover of good drama who would enjoy it."

Hess's advertising of the latter picture consistently emphasized its dramatic and emotional strength and made no reference to its "sex sequences." By contrast, however, the Cosmopolitan advertising carried in the Hearst papers independently of RKO's advertising of the picture stressed its insignificant sensationalism.

Chi Trib Swats Floyd Gibbons' Byrd Film Gab

The Chicago Tribune, in a recent editorials, takes a rather pointed crack at its erstwhile war correspondent, Floyd Gibbons, in commenting on "With Byrd at the South Pole."

The Tribune editorial, captioned "We Want a Penguin," says in part: "We were reminded of penguins by the movie of the Byrd expedition. . . . The penguin is a bit pompous, perhaps, but he has dignity even if he waddles, and he takes pleasure in quiet conversation and good manners. He understands restraint. No one need admonish Mr. Floyd Gibbons (whose talk accompanies the picture of the flight over the pole) to go to the ant, but we lean to the belief that he might have acquitted himself more creditably had he gone to the penguin for poise before speaking his piece."

Gibbons was the Tribune's correspondent with the Pershing punitive expedition into Mexico in 1916, and likewise served the paper as chief of its war correspondents during the World War.

The Tribune's movie critic gave the Byrd picture five stars, as compared with a maximum merit award of four stars in the past.

Cite 26 Chicago Theatres; Charge Fire Violations

Twenty-six Chicago theatres have been cited by the Chicago Fire Prevention bureau for violations of fire ordinances. The alleged violations are based on the acoustical insulating materials used in the theatres which, the Fire Prevention bureau charges, are inflammable.

The theatres cited are: Orpheus, Jeffery, Hamilton, Harvard, Highland, Emmett, Jackson Park, Armitage, Chelton, Elston, Cosmopolitan, Irving, Grand, Famous, Portage Park, Parkside, Patio, Belpark, Senate, Vision, Biltmore, Archer, Brighton, Castle, Midwest and Pantheon.

Similar cases against four other Chicago theatres were dismissed in municipal court here two weeks ago.

Publix Theatres in Chicago Complete Plans for Luring in Children's Trade

Chicago — Irving Mack noticed a swell plug for cooling system trailers in the Managers' Round Table department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS some time ago. Irving lifted the copy, with credit, and put out a flock of pluggers on cooling trailers, featuring the reading notice. Not till last week, when he was visited by "Chick" Lewis, did Irv learn that the reading notice he had been flaunting had been originally contributed by National Screen Service.

Loophole Left For Injunctions By Court Order

Chicago—Legal interpretation of the state Supreme court's modified ruling in the "Alibi" case implies that, in some instances, injunction proceedings may be resorted to by distributors whose pictures have been denied a permit by the censor board. The ruling, while it is aimed at a curtailment of pictures which may play by injunction, takes cognizance of unusual or extenuating circumstances which might exist and make injunction a fair and proper resort. Chief among such instances, it was said, is the case of "time" pictures—productions based on current situations which may alter quickly enough to kill the value of the picture in the event it was subjected to lengthy court procedures.

The Supreme court originally, in upholding the permanent injunction as a legal resource of distributors, did so without qualification. The Circuit court, however, in the case of "Party Girl," ruled that mandamus and not injunction was the proper resource. The Supreme court then reviewed its ruling and modified it to the extent that mandamus shall be the first procedure except in unusual circumstances.

RKO Creates Midwest Office at Columbus

Chicago—RKO creates a mid-western office at Columbus, following acquisition of the Libson circuit of 28. The office will handle all advertising and exploitation for the newly acquired theatres, located at Columbus, Cincinnati and Dayton, O., and Grand Rapids, Mich. Bill Danziger, formerly of the Chicago advertising staff of RKO, will be in charge of the new office, working under Jack Hess.

Loop Openings to Be Speeded Up to Catch Transients Before Films Are Too Old

Chicago—Bookings designed to gain children's trade will plan an important role in the exhibition plans of Publix theatres in this section, a meeting of Detroit and Chicago Publix theatres' managers was advised last week. The Paramount product, with "Huckleberry Finn," "Tom Sawyer" and "Skippy" particularly, will be featured in these plans, but other companies' juvenile productions as well will be used, the managers were told.

Successful efforts to speed up Chicago picture openings have been under way for some time, the managers were told. The establishment of new box office requirements of all pictures opening in Publix-B. & K. Loop houses will reduce the length of runs of many, making them available to the outlying houses more quickly than in the past, and will make possible earlier and more numerous Loop openings. Chicago movie-goers in the past were frequently irked by the lateness of picture openings here. A good percentage of the traveling population of the city formerly had viewed pictures elsewhere weeks before their Chicago openings. This situation is destined, now, to be remedied, with considerable improvement already noted, the Chicago managers were advised.

A curtailment of the circuit's exploitation expenditures was also predicted by W. K. Hollander, advertising manager of Publix-B. & K., who told the meeting that advertising in the dailies was by far the most effective business getter. There will be no curtailment of advertising appropriations for this purpose, he said, but cautioned the managers about other forms of advertising and exploitation. Tie-ups, Hollander said, should be avoided in the future unless the second party to the stunt bore a full half of the expense. Even then, he said, the tie-ups must be good to be considered.

Twisting Leo's Tail in Chicago

Chicago—On the picture's opening day at the Chicago, B. & K. advertised "A Lady of Scandal" as "Paramount's all-talking romance." The slip-up was rectified on the second day, which was not soon enough to save the local M-G-M exchange from having one of those hemorrhages.

Laskers Add Fifth in Chi

Ticket Scandal

Chicago—"Raffles" was previewed to a near-capacity house at the United Artists Theatre. Eddie Grossman, United Artists manager, though pleased with the large attendance and the reception accorded the picture, accused Irving Mack, who printed the tickets, of taking care of his own friends too well. "But," said Eddie, "if, in the future, you deliver us half the tickets you print, we won't prosecute."

Eddie Grossman

Eddie, threatened with pneumonia recently, took two days off, and then returned with apologies for his absence and remained up most of the night for the "Raffles" preview—his first day back.

Tom Thumb Golf Courses to Be Taxed in Chicago

Chicago—Tom Thumb golf courses, already as numerous here as speakeasies and just as easy to find, struck their first snag in local operation last week after several months of clear sailing and a break from the local courts.

City attorneys are seeking legislation which will require the courses to pay a license fee and, possibly, an amusement tax in addition. Careful scrutiny of the courses in residential sections will also be advocated, where late closing hours and disturbances have already resulted in charges of constituting a public nuisance being placed against several.

Local courts recently authorized operators of the courses to open in residential sections of the city.

Hess Contract Ready as Endurance Flyers Land

Chicago—Waiting at Sky Harbor airport here when the Hunter brothers landed after establishing a new endurance flying record of 554 hours was Jack Hess of RKO with a Palace theatre contract in his hand. The brothers, including the two who maneuvered the re-fuelling plane, and the sister who prepared the meals for the four during the endurance flight, smiled and signed. The family went into the Palace for a week, after which they may do some time in RKO houses elsewhere, depending, of course, on how soon the public forgets them.

Squawk in Chi Over Lack of Kid Material

Chicago—Chicago parents are warned to "protect" their children from the influences of pictures unsuitable for juvenile patronage by Mrs. G. H. Bevans, authority on child care and education, who authors a daily column on that subject in the Chicago Tribune.

"Even if we try hard, we can't find enough good moving pictures for the children to go around," states Mrs. Bevans, who offers as a typical child's program: "A comic—children adore to laugh. The drawn comics are usually fine and entirely lacking in vulgarity. A news reel. Perhaps a short travel, or nature, or animal picture, and a good entertainment film, not as long as a film for adults."

"Undoubtedly if the producers would agree to serve the child public, which some one has estimated to be five million, the first trouble they would have would be in finding people who could write screen stories for children," says Mrs. Bevan. "It is an art in itself.

"This could not serve as an alibi to their getting started, for the reason that the literature of the world is already rich in stories which could be made into magnificent films. And now that we have the talkies, sepulchral though they still are, many stories could be included like 'Alice in Wonderland,' for instance, which depend so largely on their dialogue.

"In the classics alone the producers could find really gorgeous tales—some for the younger children, some for the older ones.

Lists Suitable Material

"There are for instance: Many of the fairy tales—full of action, dramatic, fascinating to the eye. Imagine 'Jack and the Bean Stalk,' 'The Sleeping Beauty,' etc. There are 'Mother Goose,' 'Lorna Doone,' 'Treasure Island,' Greek and Roman and Scandinavian mythology, selected myths, of course; some of Walter Scott; possibly books like 'Little Women'; the finer historical novels; the biography of great men when their lives had incident and color which could be translated into screen material; perhaps 'Huckleberry Finn' or 'Tom Sawyer,' 'Otto of the Silver Hand'; perhaps 'Hans Brinker," etc.

Baker, Hartung, Armst'g, Duell, Kennedy in Shift

Seattle—Following changes in the line-up of Publix executives on the Pacific Coast, several changes in local staffs have been made by Robert Blair, Pacific Northwest division manager.

A. W. Baker, former city manager in Dallas, will assume management of the Seattle Paramount, succeeding William A. Hartung, who will be moved to a Mid-Western spot for the same company.

Star Duell, former assistant manager of the Paramount in Portland, will manage the Metropolitan, Publix's second house in downtown Seattle, succeeding Robert Armstrong.

Armstrong, in turn, will become director of advertising and publicity for both the Seattle Paramount and Metropolitan, succeeding Arthur J. Kennedy, who will soon leave for an Eastern berth in a similar capacity. Armstrong was formerly advertising manager of the local Paramount until Kennedy's arrival here a few months ago.

Australian Arms Plant To Make U. S. Projectors

Washington—The motion picture division of the Dept. of Commerce reports that a small arms factory owned by the government at Lithgow, Australia, has obtained a contract from an American company to manufacture talkie projection machines, according to assistant American Trade Commissioner H. P. Van Blarcom. It is known that the Munitions Supply Board is opposed to the manufacture of outside orders, but the Minister for Defense is enthusiastic and has given assurance that every effort would be made to manufacture articles which are now imported.

Oldest Showman In U. S., Is Claim Of Clair Patee

Topeka, Kas.—This may force the line to form to the right, but it is, nevertheless, the claim of Clair M. Patee, owner of the Patee theatre at Lawrence, that he is the oldest exhibitor in the United States. Not only that, but Patee asserts that claim has never been contested.

"Colonel" Patee states he opened a picture theatre in Jersey City, N. J., in 1898, which he claims to be the first in the country. Later he opened the "Patee Nickel" in Lawrence, Kas., in 1903. In 1904 he opened, on Delaware St., in Kansas City, the "Nickel Theatre," claimed to be the first picture house in Kansas City.

Patee has never missed an MPTO convention—"since they have been having them," he adds. He has attended all of the twelve annual conclaves of the Kansas and Missouri unit. He personally published a pamphlet called "Facts," the sheets of which show publicity in early form. It was a four-page weekly, in which was a queer assemblage of reading matter, fashion notes, home hints, recipes, school news, and—carefully sandwiched in between—facts about the then new picture business.

In those days, Patee says, the public did not look with a very friendly eye upon pictures. They were in the category of "fakes." The purpose of "Facts" was to tactfully dispel this idea and to gain favor for the pictures.

In Lawrence, his home, Patee has been an exhibitor since the "Patee Nickel" was opened in 1903. His house now is called simply the "Patee." It is different from many houses in that it is on the English plan, with the choice, and highest-priced seats, in the balcony.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

WE'RE OFF

MANY thoughts crowd through our mind as we pull out of Grand Central Station for Chicago and points west. If this was our first trip to the coast we could hardly feel more thrilled. And why not? When last we viewed the Pacific Ocean, movies were just—movies. Now the show business has been entirely revamped and talkies have gained a firm foothold, on both the exhibitors and their bank books.

We have corresponded regularly with crack showmen from all over the world. Some have complained about this and some have gone into raptures over that product from the big producing companies. Other showmen have boasted about the beauty of their houses and they raved about them so much that we decided the first thing we would do when we made our trip would be to visit many of them. We know that they must have something to keep these men continually happy. Well, we are going to secure the low-down for the Club pages and we have a hunch right now that it will make interesting reading.

And Hollywood? What a change we expect to find out there! Sound studios, "mikes" and lots of other things so entirely different and unique, well, if we act like a farm-hand away from the old homestead we won't be a bit surprised. So you boys out in California must not be alarmed if we do act like one.

We have much to look forward to and expect to renew friendships with many of the boys we knew so well years ago. Then again, there are all these showmen who have been communicating with us for several years, and how we want to meet them personally is nobody's business.

Frank Whitbeck, George Landy, Tom MacDonald, Billy Gluck, Tommy Kane, Dick Moss, Randall Jerabek, Jack Rosenberg, M. G. Keller, Lloyd Townsend, Morris Rosenberg, and many others whose names we cannot recall at the moment.

There is much to be gained for all the followers of our Club pages by what we will observe at first hand.

Surely, when one stops to consider the broad field covered by Motion Picture News, one will agree that every angle of the business is of vital importance in trying to set forth our views with the idea that they will reach showmen over so wide an area. At any rate, we have much to learn and plenty to see—and will we see all of it? You tell 'em.

We had determined to forget all work until we reached the coast, but the urge to put these thoughts into print was too strong. We hope our future expressions on these pages will find an interested audience.

McSwinney Sprang ASurpriseThatWas Merchandising Aid

A stunt that helped his good-will stock with the female element in Needham, Mass., was engineered to good results by D. F. McSwinney, manager of the local Paramount Theatre when he announced by means of a trailer that ladies in attendance at the theatre would receive a surprise on the opening night of "The Vagabond King."

For one week in advance the trailer announcement was worded to the effect that the opening night of picture would be "Ladies' Night" and that during the singing of "Only a Rose" by Dennis King in the picture, a surprise token would be presented to each of the feminine sex in attendance.

The curiosity attached to this "Ladies' Night" by not telling in advance what the token would be resulted in the house doing exceptional business with two-thirds of the audience comprised of women.

While Dennis King was singing "Only a Rose," the auditorium was semi-lighted and the ushers distributed a rose to every lady present. The reaction was marvelous as it presented quite a dramatic moment for this picture, as well as the sensation caused by the appearance of the patrons leaving the theatre—going in all directions displaying so many roses. This naturally caused other people to inquire where they got them and how, thus gaining excellent word-of-mouth advertising for the picture and theatre.

The 800 roses given to the lady patrons were promoted from a local florist at no cost to the theatre other than a credit line on a slip of paper wired to the rose.

And from the comments he heard while the patrons were leaving the theatre, McSwinney gathered enough information to know that "The Vagabond King" was in for some capacity business as the word-of-mouth comment which would result from it, was all that he needed to pack them in. Incidentally, this is the first contribution we have had from this live-wire New England showman and we hope that he is going to keep up the 100% record he now holds. How about it, "D. F."? Are we going to hear more from you? And we'd like to have a photo and a little dope on yourself, too.

Jim Newman Built A Special Railroad To Plug Picture

The railroads were called into play by Jim Newman, manager of the Strand Theatre in Tampa, Fla., to plug his showing of "Thunder," and when he got through it looked as though his lobby was a real station yard with all the accessories.

For a lobby display he had a miniature train with a small painted background to give the effect that the train was much larger than it really was. Feeling that the best way to attract attention to this display was to keep working on it—he kept putting it together and then taking it apart again.

Every man, boy or child that came along would stop to offer their suggestions and often their assistance in assembling the parts to make the train run again. At one time there was actually ten grown men sitting on the lobby floor helping to put it together. And, of course, during all this fuss Newman managed to get in several complimentary remarks about the picture.

Three days before the picture opened, Newman went to the Seaboard Airline Railway Yards Shops and struck up quite a friendship with the shop foreman, whom the men under him rate sky high. The foreman agreed to sign a bulletin which was made up by Newman—and then later posted on all bulletin boards around the railroad shop. The bulletin carried a message about the picture, theatre and playdates.

The railroad also furnished an array of different train accessories which were put on display in the lobby. The list included picks, shovels, a train bell and red lanterns, which were hung around marquee and box office. The lanterns were lit at night to give a splendid illuminating effect.

In return for the splendid co-operation on the part of the railroad, the theatre gave a theatre party for the ten oldest engineers and this furthered the good-will that the theatre rated with the railroad, and it is our hunch that Newman is going to put this to use in future campaigns. Listen, Jim, we had been wondering why you didn't shoot stuff into Club headquarters more often, because a showman who puts these things across the way you do should want to be represented as many times as possible. What do you think about it?

Ernie Smithies Is Now Handling The Tivoli, Kingston

We are sure that his many friends, both in Canada and the States will be pleased to hear that E. O. "Ernie" Smithies, is now handling the new Tivoli Theatre in Kingston, Ontario, for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, and from what we learn is doing a fine job of it.

The new house cost over $50,000 to build and features Northern Electric Sound Equipment. All of the latest innovations have been embodied in the theatre. It is interesting to note that Ernie is largely responsible for the building of the new theatre as it was through his untiring efforts on behalf of the residents of Kingston that the theatre was constructed. He felt that in order to aid the growth of the city it was necessary that a new theatre be added.

As most of his friends know what he accomplished at the Capitol Theatre in Kingston they too will feel that he is going to continue his showmanship work at the new house and by doing so hold onto that enviable reputation he has earned for himself by his courtesy and personality.

We want to congratulate him on his new assignment and we are sure that he will keep us posted on what he does to keep them coming into the house. You know that you have plenty of opportunity to display some ace work Ernie and we've an idea that you will do it.

Earle Oscar Made Sure That Patrons Knew About Sound

Opportunity is certainly knocking for Earle Oscar, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Athens, Ala., and by opportunity we mean that he is going to show some fine stuff along the merchandising line, due to the fact that the installation of sound equipment recently at his house will give him all of the big pictures to plug.

Just a little while ago we told you how he secured front page publicity in the local newspaper by having the sheet send their photographer to take a picture of the sound equipment that he placed out front of the theatre especially for the occasion. At the time the story appeared we had no picture to use with it, but Earle has been kind enough to procure one for us and if you'll look at it you will see what an effective flash it made. This angle, was also used to show the residents of the town that the Ritz endeavored to give them nothing but the latest and best.

Another angle that Earle uses often is his flivver ballyhoo which plugs the coming attractions at the Ritz. This flivver has the back knocked off and a box, holding three one sheets is used to plug the week's attractions. The car is painted in white and a picture of a man in a plug hat and wearing a monocle, painted on the sides of the car is used as an institutional plug. The ballyhoo is well known in Athens and the neighboring towns and its appearance is always greeted with interest. While we are about it, we'd like to say a couple of words or so on the newspaper advertising that Earle is turning out on his new policy. By the use of mats and attractive copy he manages to create ads that would sell in any town and we know he'll be fashioning bigger and better ads. Right, Earle?

WHITBECK'S ADVERTISING SKILL

Remember Whitbeck's "Ace" advertising on "King of Jazz" and "All Quiet on the Western Front"? Then surely you know what a tremendous human interest wallop they packed. We want to state right here and now that if it is at all possible, Whitbeck has outdone himself in these few samples of his latest campaigns. There's no getting away from the fact that these ads have the "goods". And the kind of "goods" that a twentieth century show merchandiser cries for.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

A Pen Portrait of FRANK WHITBECK

by Sidney Larschan,
Manager, Meserole Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A man in every sense of the word. Very modest. Has won success in a style of work that keeps him on the jump. Hates to have his picture taken. Is soft spoken and chooses his words carefully. Reserved almost to the point of coldness. Dresses conventionally. Tackles every task with the zeal of a Roman warrior. Enjoys the distinction of being the first press agent to land a story in serial form on the front pages of the New York Evening Journal. The story was Laura Jean Libby's "Parted on her Bridal Tour."

Headed the "Busy Izzy" company for years. George Sidney was one of the company's stars. Piloted Cecil Spooner, Harry Blaney and a number of other old timers. Has a powerful personality. Is well liked by every man on the Fox West Coast payroll. One of the finest men I have ever met.

Creagh Enrolls In Club; Has Had Lots Of Show Experience

Step up and meet our latest member from South Africa, H. B. Creagh, who manages the Empire Theatre and Town Hall Cinema in Kroonstad. Mr. Creagh was nominated for membership in the Club by Jack Stodel and when Jack proposes a showman for our organization we know that we have acquired a member who will be very active.

Creagh has been in the show game for a great many years, and though he originally started out to be a journalist, he found the lure of our racket to be too appealing and he deserted the newspaper game for the show business. From his many experiences we learn that his first assignment was working with a circus. From the "Big Tent" outfit he hooked up with the legit and blossomed forth as an advance agent and publicity man, where he remained until the movies appeared on the horizon.

Realizing the possibilities of the cinema, he went to work for African Theatres, Ltd., and for the past sixteen years has been handling their houses. He has been in charge of the Boksburg, Jeppestown, Benoni, Kimberly, Uitenhage, Port Elizabeth, Durban and Kroonstad houses. He spent a number of years in military service and this training has stood him in good stead in the show business. From what we understand, one of his pet hobbies is work. And more work. The local newspaper is high in its praise of Creagh and when a showman can get breaks like that, then he must know his business.

We want to welcome him into the ranks of the Round Table Club and we feel sure that he is going to keep right up with the leaders of the South African showmen. And incidentally, that photo of him, which we are printing, appeared in the local paper together with a corking story on Creagh's work, which touched upon his many capabilities.

"Florodora Girl" Got Loads Of Attention From Kane

The "Gay Nineties" in parade was the medium used by Tom Kane, manager of the Sequoia Theatre in Redwood City, California, to plug "The Florodora Girl." And when Tom stages a parade it's sure to be something that will afford an occasion for stunts that will be out of the ordinary. And was his parade out of the ordinary? We'll say so.

To plug the parade, a special co-operative ad promoted from the local dealers was placed in the newspaper. The ad invited anyone possessing relics of the olden days to participate. Front page stories were run in the newspaper for four days preceding the affair and this was one of the best mediums to start them talking about it.

On the day of the parade a State traffic officer was on hand to lead it. Four Redwood city police officers assisted him and preceded by a man on a high bicycle the procession started out. What a parade. A tandem manned by two ushers, one of them dressed as a girl lurched crazily here and there. When the man in front would pedal, the man in back would shoot the vehicle in reverse. It was a case of stop and go. The persons lining the street roared with laughter. The tandem passed along and into view came forty bicycles. What sizes! What shapes! A velocipide of other days, under the guidance of a peppy collegian of to-day was put through paces the like of which it had never expected to feel. Its staid old spokes quivered with indignation, and the wheels (ah, were they angry) Boop-poop and then bop. Down went rider and bicycle. The velocipede had signed its own ticket to the ash heap. One way, no return and no rebates.

Then came the automobiles. They still don't know how. A Ford of the first water, example of the days when speed was reckoned by the rapidity with which cows were passed, wabbled along, chugging and churning under its own power; while the driver, hands gripped tightly to the wheel, stared straight ahead, heedless of the crowd lining the curb. His was a perilous position. A slight misstep and Henry the First would be doomed; sentenced to an inglorious ending in the city dump. That would never do. The old Flivver raised its brass brow, and emitting a few cheeps, due to lack of water, crawled along with the rest of the relics included in the procession of yesteryear.

Then along came to-day's cars. Shiny, sleek examples of automotive craftsmanship. Artistry in the highest degree. The smooth running eight cylinder motors emitted a gentle purr as they glided along, close in the wake of the battered, time worn, relics. Gasps of admiration greeted their appearance. The lookerson were not immune to expressing admiration. They saw progress and realized that they were living in a progressive nation. A moment later and the parade had passed on. Showmanship had had opportunity to prove its power and it had not failed. Four hours later the standees in the back of the Sequoia were proof enough that Tom Kane knew what he was doing when he engineered the stunt, and as the picture unreeled and they saw on the screen, what they had witnessed early in the afternoon, the murmurings in the theatre bore testimony once more to the stunt's effectiveness.

Staging parades isn't all that Tom is doing either. He visits the nearby towns and makes speeches plugging the shows at his house, conducts a war against Daylight Saving Time, talks before various American Legion branches, and does a good deal of radio broadcasting. He has been hitting the old apple right on the nose ever since he has been at the Sequoia and if dropping them into the right field bleachers was reckoned according to the way the Babe hits them, Tom would be leading the league. But all kidding aside, he sure is leading his league in showmanship and if you'll keep your eye on him we can promise you some more slants.

Leighton Promoted A 'Shop in Hoboken' Week That Clicked

The reason for all the smoke drifting over from the Jersey shore became apparent when we learned that Bert Leighton, manager of the Fabian Theatre in Hoboken, had gone on the "war path" and engineered a mammoth "Shop in Hoboken" campaign in conjunction with the merchants of the city.

When he heard of the plans of the Hoboken's Business Men's Association to inaugurate a city-wide sales stimulation campaign, he promptly offered his theatre and cooperation in putting the campaign across, and volunteered the use of his theatre to the association.

As the stunt worked out, it was arranged that all of the merchants tying up with the association would give out prizes of a value not less than $10 each—to be displayed in the Fabian Theatre. In order to win the donations, which were to be distributed on a corresponding number basis, individuals had to go to the stores to get the coupons, which were signed and then brought to the Fabian and dropped into sealed boxes in the lobby.

The gifts were open for inspection to any one without cost for an hour and a half every day before the theatre opened. The display in the lobby proved to be extremely attractive and interesting, and stimulated interest in the campaign. Hundreds of stores throughout Hoboken carried special window displays for the duration of the campaign and all of them contained cards urging customers and passersby to go to the Fabian to see the display in the lobby and the show there. Two streets leading to the theatre were decorated by the Merchants' Association with banners, lights and special displays that made them look like a Mardi Gras. The newspapers in the territory gave over columns upon columns of space in the news section of the paper as well as the theatrical sections. Five full pages of advertising were promoted by Leighton from the merchants. Every conceivable angle of the campaign was tied up. In addition to its effect as a box office stimulant, the amount of goodwill garnered from the angles was plenty.

The night for the final awards to be given away found an imposing array of city officials and business men confronting a huge capacity audience from the stage of the Fabian. Box office receipts were almost 100% above normal for the night of the give-away.

With everything covered so completely there was no question but that the event would prove profitable for everybody concerned and it did just that. As we have pointed out in past issues of the Managers' Round Table Club, these "Shop Where You Live" weeks are corking good-will and business builders for every one participating in them and we are glad to note that Bert has taken advantage of the opportunity and put one over to excellent results. When he engineers stunts of this sort Bert can be depended on to pass them along to his fellow members in the Club. So we look towards hearing some more of his work in the very near future.

Forrester Added Some Fine Touches To Merchandising

A couple of laugh gags, in addition to his regular merchandising at the World Theatre in Kearney, Nebraska, were used by E. Forrester, the manager to put "Caught Short" across for a new box-office high which rates listing on any showboard.

In addition to the routine newspaper advertising and extensive country billing, 1000 novel heralds were distributed at the theatre 3 days prior to the showing of the picture. These heralds consisted of two beans in a coin envelope on which was printed, "Only a Scotchman could make bean soup from the contents of this envelope" and copy about the picture "Caught Short" followed.

The additional stunts created a great deal of comment in the town and the number of persons laughing at the kid with suspenders showed Forrester that he had picked the right thing to sell his picture with. As a good many of our live-wires are located around Forresters' district, we feel that he is going to shoot us in some more of his work.

CIVIC CONTACTS

(From Fox West Coast "Now")
By GEORGE F. SHARP
District Manager, Fresno, Calif.

In plain black and white, our good friend Mr. Noah Webster calls prestige "the influence based on past achievements." Okay, as far as it goes, but in the show business we should define prestige as "the influence gained by past, present and future achievements."

Prestige is attained only through most careful thought and planning, earnest endeavors and hard work. It is not developed over night, but is the result of weeks, months and years of well-defined efforts. However, once attained, still more care must be placed in the holding and increasing of that prestige. The work of years can be spoiled by a single mistake . . . tracks that can sometimes never be replaced. All of which means . . . that every Fox West Coast theatre manager and attache must always be "on the toes." The well directed blows are the ones that bring the real results.

The Fox West Coast theatre must be a dominant part of the civic activities of your city. The local manager (with the guidance of his division manager) must keep his fingers on the pulse of the city's desires, and must always anticipate and shape the economic and social trends which might vitally affect the theatre and motion picture industry.

A theatre manager should cultivate the families . . . play up to the children . . . always keep a warm atmosphere of welcome around the theatre. Let the patrons know that it is their theatre, and that the entertainment is being offered especially for them. Make all of your patrons your friends . . . the theatre's friends.

Pay close attention to the different civic organizations, Federated Women's Clubs, P. T. A., Church Federation, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Salvation Army, etc., and have them all look to you . . . want you! Remember, the United States government insisted on the theatres operating during the World War . . . and for a good reason. . . . The right program can make your theatre a civic organization.

University Tie-Up Proved A Break For George D. Bickford

Talk about showman breaks and alertness to cashing in on them. In a good many months we haven't come across one like this that George D. Bickford, manager of the Des Moines Theatre in Des Moines, Ia., got on "Paramount on Parade," when he found that the film had been booked in at the same time that Drake University was holding its annual parade.

The occasion of the parade was the opening day of the Drake University relay and field events which are attended by practically every college in the West. And incidentally, the picture opened on the same day as the Drake relays.

The parade, as the photo shows, consisted of a motorcycle police escort, the Drake band, the Mayor and City officials, entire usher staff from local Publix houses, two 25-foot banners carried by the ushers, auto with Paramount Theatre orchestra, etc.

Twenty of the autos in the procession were bannered with signs pertaining to the picture as well as having stickers pasted on their windshields and glasses.

Bickford also sold an idea to a popcorn concessionaire at the track meet to paste labels on all his popcorn packages. Copy on these labels read, "As you enjoy this so will you enjoy the P. O. P. Party—PARAMOUNT ON PARADE—Des Moines Theatre Now! Come to the Party of the Stars."

1325 cards greeted people in the hotels as they arose in the morning. Copy on these cards read, "Good Morning! To make your stay more pleasant we suggest that you attend the 'P.O.P.' Party, the Party of the Stars—'PARAMOUNT ON PARADE' at the Des Moines Theatre, beginning today." These cards were slipped under the doors bright and early in the morning.

Another angle that went over very well was the stunt he pulled of having Clara Bow send a telegram to him commending the picture. He took the telegram and made fifty giant enlargements of it which were placed in prominent spots about the town to good results. Incidentally, that little photo we are showing with this article is intended to give you a line on how he arranges window displays and this especial one on "Mammy" from what we understand had been walking into the store, buying the special "Mammy" bow tie and then going over to the theatre. Which, if we may state it, without handing out personal bouquets, is showmanship.

Listen George, we've been waiting quite sometime for that picture of yours and though it doesn't seem possible that Uncle Sam can slip up on his mail service, still we'd like to remind you again, in the event it was detoured, how about a picture and a little dope on yourself as well?

Summer Season Saw Stein Selling Show In Fine Fashion

Another showman who believes in taking advantage of seasonal changes is Louis Stein, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Newark, N. J.

With the coming of hot weather, he promoted a beautiful display of growing plants and flowers for his lobby from the local florist to render his lobby cool and comfortable. In return for it he gave the florist a credit line in the program and a credit line in the lobby. By doing this he was enabled to secure a couple of hundred dollars' worth of plants at no cost whatsoever.

In much the same fashion he tied up with a furniture dealer for a complete, luxurious suite of summer furniture which was placed in the ladies' rest room. As the furniture was made of reed, it had the room looking cool and attractive and this made a big hit with his female patrons. In return for this he permitted the dealer a credit line in the advertising and in the rest room.

Another angle that he pulled, which caused a lot of comment, was a June Bride week in which he announced that the theatre would give away vacuum cleaners, radios, etc., as presents during the week to all newly weds. The gifts were promoted from the local merchants and we understand that a good many items were given away. From these few stunts you can gather that this showman knows his business and, since he does, we know that he will want to be represented more often on our pages in order that the Club might see what else he is doing to boost up business. So listen, Louis; let's have some dope on yourself, will you, so that we can pass it along and give you a regular introduction?

Shewell Cashes In Every Time With Newspaper Layouts

As we swing into this week's edition of the Managers' Round Table Club the idea comes to us that it is about time to present some samples of George Shewell's newspaper advertising and we go through our files to take some out. These files of ours, containing newspaper ads from all over the globe are very valuable to us, not only because we can point with pride to what the showmen of to-day are doing and the progress they have made over the men of yesterday but because we know that if any of our members feel that they want to try something different in their ads we will be more than glad to help them out by publishing any sort of layout they may desire, whether it be dramatic romantic, comic or novel.

In conjunction with his features for the month of May Shewell also engineered a May Festival Campaign and you will notice the unique way he advertised it, both in the special and the regular ads. We would like to point out to you the many points in the copy that he uses in order to sell them "locally" but since it would take a powerful magnifying glass to enable you to read every line, we guess it will have to suffice when we state that he refers back to past performances of the stars, etc.

Some showmen, we have found (though it may be due to local handicaps), frequently use too many mats and not enough copy or too much copy and not enough mats. As for us, we have always been advocates of plenty of white space, working on the assumption that it is a sure means of attracting attention. In Shewell's ads you will notice that he too, uses plenty of white space but breaks up his copy with attractive mats. As all of these ads are fine examples of layout we will not attempt to pick out any certain one and discourse upon it. All we have to say is that you look them over carefully and perhaps you'll find one or two slants that will prove what you have been looking for. At any rate, it isn't a waste of time to look them over, because we know that you'll take pride in seeing what your fellow members are doing to keep this organization one that really boasts "The World's Finest Showmen!"

WELCOME, WALTER!

The Managers' Round Table Club extends a welcome to Walter Morris, former manager of various Publix houses down Florida way, who has just been shifted by his organization to the Mayfair Theatre in Asbury Park, N. J.

Walter's peppy work has been the subject of many interesting items on the Club pages and we are sure that his work at the New Jersey summer resort will prove as interesting.

GOOD-WILL? TRY THIS!

Here's a plan that is clicking so well out in the Middle West that we decided to pass it along to you in the event that it will fit your town or city.

A group of business men get together and arrange to have specially conducted tours to their establishments. For instance, the presidents of the Bee Jac chewing gum company will invite a bunch of local kids, ages ranging from 9 to 16, to witness the making of his product, etc. The trip is generally sponsored by the local "Y" and the newspapers for the obvious purpose that after the kids visit the factories they are invited to take a dip in the "Y" pool. The newspaper furnishes the free publicity, once a week, on the trip. Sometimes they publish squibs during the week on the next week's tour.

Here's the showman angle: You are supposed to visit the heads of the various organizations and secure their co-operation. Make up a regular schedule for the visits. These tours can take place in the summer as well as during school times. Place a one-sheet in your lobby or use a trailer to plug each weekly tour, and remember to include your own house in the tours. There are plenty more angles that can be worked out in connection with this one and if you'll start to dope them out they should be productive of a lot of added business and good-will for you.

Good Showmanship Is Being Displayed By Don Davidson

"The Locked Door" was opened wide to publicity when D. W. Davidson, Manager of the Miller Theatre in Manhattan, Kansas, set out to put the picture across.

He tied up with one of the biggest hardware stores in town and arranged for a window display that was a corker. In the window of the store he placed a large key that measured over ten feet in length. The key carried cards, stills and other data on the picture and was suspended from the ceiling by fine wires. The rest of the space was devoted to a massive heap of locks and keys.

He next placed a full sized panelled door, in a frame outside the store. A man was detailed to stand at the door and invite all passersby to try and open it with any of the seven hundred keys that were placed on a nearby table. A sign read: Try your luck, open "The Locked Door" to the finest mystery picture of the year. Free tickets were given to those opening the door. On the first day of the stunt hundreds of people took part in it and the picture received some valuable word-of-mouth publicity, that helped to put it over to fine box-office receipts.

Another stunt that met with immediate approval in the town was the gag he pulled for "Gold Diggers of Broadway." Seventy-five real bricks, painted with bronze color were hidden about the various poster sheet stands used to plug the theatre attractions. The bricks were lettered: "Admit One to see "Gold Diggers of Broadway." An ad was run informing the local residents that they were all invited to participate in finding the bricks, and also gave a hint that they were near the billboards. There was a concerted rush for the bill boards when the paper broke with the announcement and the value of the stunt was seen in the fifty-five bricks that were returned as well as in the additional business on the film.

Thanks, Don for passing these along to us and we look forward to receive the pictures of those snappy fronts you are so proud of. Let's hear from you real soon. These are the kind of showman stunts we like to pass along, and I know your brother members enjoy reading them.

SHOWMAN TIPS! GEORGE SHEWELL Says:

"During the past few months we have been concentrating on tie-ups with our local merchants which include a window display, advertising within the store and newspaper mention of the picture, theatre and play date, in return for some form of advertising of their product in the theatre.

"Many exhibitors do not realize the importance of this kind of exploitation to the theatre, other than the fact that it produces immediate results at the box office. In every instance where we have secured a window that was attractive, we find that in its wake we have left a spirit of goodwill toward the theatre that is far above any money value. The merchant soon begins to regard the theatre as a fellow merchant; civic clubs, seeing these things, talk of the value of the theatre to the community, etc. This all brings about a force that a knocker can scarcely overcome, and consequently the boosters are far in the majority."

Joe Luntz Speaks His Mind And Tells Us About New Plan

"One of the greatest breaks I have ever had in the show game came my way the other day when it was announced that every manager of a Fox house would be permitted to take care of his own advertising, publicity and exploitation.

In the case of a man handling a theatre in a small town, he could ask for no better opportunity than that of doing his advertising and publicity unmolested. There's nothing hard about doing it if you know what your patrons want. As an example, take the picture "Her Golden Calf." Sue Carol, the star, doesn't mean a thing in my town, but El Brendel, the Swedish comedian, means a whole lot. He's a public favorite as a comedian, has a "rep" as a vaudevillian and has gone over big here in recent pictures.

Then we have the case where the title is punk and the star is the whole show. When "Gold Diggers of Broadway" played my house I found that Winnie Lightner knocked them for a loop. When I played her in "She Couldn't Say No" you can bank on it that every one in the town knew that Winnie Lightner was back.

In my community one of the biggest mistakes a showman can make is to try to hand his patrons something they don't want. My patrons do not seem to like the sad or serious stuff. However, with a little doctoring of copy here and there, I sold them Madame X" and Sarah and Son," proving that when you tack a new name on to the sob stuff, calling it a tremendous emotional story, you can hand it to them and they'll eat it up. The same angle goes for the revues. People are tired of them and for that reason I try to sell it to them via the "musical romance" or " million dollar spectacle" angle because I feel that it is what they want.

Another most important part of any showman's merchandising is his shorts. They can make and break shows. They have held up weak pictures and made strong ones stronger. The favorites of my patrons are the "Mickey Mouse," "Laurel and Hardy" and Harry Langdon shorts, and believe me I give them plenty of space on every piece of advertising that leaves my office.

I find that to get the most out of a press sheet you have to use your own common sense, in this way: modify their material to suit your needs; a collection of glowing descriptive adjectives will not sell your show if you know that a simple personal endorsement means more to your patrons. Read the trade papers, digesting carefully all of their invaluable showman tips and use them whenever the opportunity presents itself.

On your newspaper advertising, when you make "readers," be careful not to repeat the same copy in several local papers. People in small towns read them all. Vary your copy as well as your advertising and in it never over-exaggerate the value of the pictures by painting a picture that seems to tell your patrons they are in for one of the greatest shows of the year. Try, instead, to describe in a few words the value of the story, ability of the stars, the quality of the music. Of course, this is being cited by me as my own case; it is only in the event that some of my brother managers may be in the same position as I that I am making my statements emphatic. One of the best things to do is to discover a new selling angle.

The public of today demands and must get something new and different in every picture, and if the producers don't put it in then we, as showman, have to try to sell it to the public from a different slant. I hope that these few things which I have set forth will prove to be of some value to the Club, and if any one cares to discuss any of the slants I will be glad to correspond with him."

Community Spirit Important Factor In Carroll's Work

Community spirit and civic contacts go hand in hand and when a showman makes use of both of them then it's a sure thing that his house is going to be one of the sweetest paying propositions in the country. Just to show you what we are driving at we are going to give you an account of what Lew Carroll, manager of the Park Theatre in Reading, Pa., did to secure lots of publicity and good-will from his local newspaper.

The paper was sponsoring a project to secure a free swimming pool for the poor kids of Reading and through its columns requested contributions. Lew watched the stunt with interest and he noticed that the quota did not seem up to par; the paper was four hundred dollars shy of the required amount. He decided that he could do something to secure that four hundred dollars for them, so he went over to the newspaper office and laid down his plan before them.

Since it was something to benefit the kids, Lew felt that they wouldn't mind spending a dime to come in and see a special picture he planned to show on a Saturday morning. The newspaper editors were very enthusiastic over the idea and they got behind it with both guns smoking. Front page space was given Lew's plan and the campaign started. A special box was placed on the front page every day for a week and a half with other stories being carried on an inner page. On the day of the special showing the kids jammed the theatre and all of the money taken in, with the exception of the operator's, cashier's and doorman's pay was donated to the fund and they more than made the mark. The local exchange co-operated and the picture was given free to the theatre.

We want to compliment Lew on his showmanship and his alterness to cash in on this angle, and, since Lew wouldn't say it, we want you to know that the Managing Editor of the newspaper called him up and complimented him for the fine community spirit he showed. And when a showman gets those kind of compliments, is it any wonder that he keeps business going great?

Bryan And Reed Were Right There At House Opening

It would take a pretty fast man to be able to step along with "Bunny" Bryan, publicity director for the Publix houses in Rhode Island and southern Massachusetts, due to the fact that he is continually doing disappearing acts, ducking out of this town and bobbing up in that one. And wherever he stops, show business hums and the box-office starts to sing a merry tune.

Just a short while ago he promoted one of the well known popularity contests. He sold the local newspapers on the plan and they agreed to print coupons as votes. Stories and pictures were run for a stretch of four weeks. Votes were given with every theatre ticket and the ballot boxes were placed in the theatre lobby. The wardrobe for the winner was promoted from local merchants in return for credit lines. Each co-operating merchant ran ads plugging the affair and devoted window displays to it also. Local factories, who had entries in the affair, had cards posted about the building plugging their favorites.

A trip to New York was given the winner, and, accompanied by "Bunny," the party was shown the sights. The most popular girl was photographed with "Buddy" Rogers and the picture and story crashed the metropolitan dailies. He acted as correspondent for the home town dailies and wired daily stories as well as pictures back to them.

At the conclusion of the trip every one returned home happy and boosting the Publix houses, bringing the good will stock up a few more points. And talking about good will, "Bunny" has another one. It is his custom, when invited to dinners to make a speech on "The Old and New in Show Business," and this topic is always greeted enthusiastically, particularly since his years in the show game make him fitted for a discussion of the sort. Another stunt that he works is to stop in at the various theatres from time to time and make three-minute speeches on the coming attractions, an idea that has worked to good advantage for him.

"Bunny's" latest achievement was his handling of the opening of the new Paramount theatre in Providence, R. I. He put out a campaign that was a corker. A day after he arrived in town he had all the natives talking about the theatre. Every available medium was used to make the opening one of the most spectacular that Providence had ever seen. Just in order that you may see some of the newspaper publicity he received we are showing the front page of the special co-operative section that was promoted from the newspapers and the local merchants. The inside pages were devoted to stories on the special features the theatre offered and also contained publicity on the coming attractions, besides running a number of stories introducing the people of Providence to the various Publix executives.

And listen! We'd like you to meet Edw. L. (Eddie) Reed, manager of the new house. We'll have some more to say about this showman in the future because from what we have learned regarding his ability we know that it will make interesting reading. (How about a little dope on your career, Eddie, so that we can make it a regular introduction?)

Before we close this story we'd like to announce, according to information we have on hand (through Bunny's kindness), that Bill Spragg holds the position of district manager of the North Shore District and Ed. Cuddy, recently promoted, division manager. Through an oversight we stated that Spragg was manager of Woonsocket Stadium and Cuddy as North Shore District manager. So we hasten to correct our error. Sorry, boys. And thanks, Bunny, for keeping us posted on what you and the live-wires in your group are doing. Let's have some more.

"THE ORGAN WIZARD"

Those skeptics who still doubt the value of an organ plus a good organist, should journey to Loew's 175th Street Theatre and get both an eye and a earful.

William Zuckerman, better known as "Singing Bill," has been at that house a short time, yet the other evening he let them have a specialty in which he came up on his rising console dressed in typical prisoner's regalia and gave his own lyrics and impressions of the famous "Prisoner's Song".

And take it from an eye-witness, the cash customers were so enthused that they applauded throughout the trailers which followed "Singing Bill's" number.

"Bill" has been circulating around the Loew de luxers here in New York and judging from reports he must have more than the so-called "it". We'll be seeing him some more. Just an idea that a brief report now and then about his specialties might give YOU other boys something to work in with your own organ numbers.

George Delis Did His Part To Put Family Month Over

Celebrating "Warner Family Month" in Steubenville, Ohio, is quite an event for George Delis, manager of the Olympic Theatre, who is turning out some great stuff in order to get some institutional plugs and good-will for the theatre and circuit.

The "Family Month" was planned so as to include a number of special days such as "Child Day" in which every child was admitted to see the show free providing it was accompanied by mother or father. Another novelty was "Pal Day" in which two persons were admitted to the theatre for the price of one admission. The specials were plugged by means of cards which measured 5½ by 4 inches and carried copy on both sides relating to the picture as well as the special treat.

A special teaser herald was turned out by Delis for "Mammy" that had the town talking. In a midget envelope, labeled "A Great Surprise Is Coming Into Your Life," he placed a small card which was found, when the envelope was opened, to contain a plug on the picture. The herald was very attractively made up in blue and white and the quick distribution and reception of them showed Delis that he could expect a good week and indeed he wasn't disappointed. He also pulled the "New Parking Law" gag that we showed in our pages a short time ago. The words "New Parking Law" are placed in bold type at the head or side of the herald and alongside or under them in small type is contained the gag lines that lead up to the plug on the picture.

We are glad to note that Delis is continuing the fine work he has been doing out there in Steubenville and we are sure that he is going to keep us posted on his future work. Right, George?

S. R. O. Sign Was Given A Dusting Due To Ray's Gags

Feeling that all his friends would be interested in knowing what else he is doing to sell shows in St. Louis, we decided to pass along some further accounts of the showmanlike work being turned out by Ray S., and how he turns them out.

Just a short time ago we gave you the dope on what he did to fake a front page story on the leading dailies in conjunction with his showing of "Ingagi." From what we now learn we understand that his gag proved to be of great benefit inasmuch as the attention of the Mammalogical Society was drawn to the picture due to the widespread comment it has occasioned and the innumerable discussions evoked as to its authenticity. Booking was cancelled when it was learned that the specialists would not declare the film a true record. This enabled Ray to get in some more front page publicity as the local papers picked up the story through the press associations, in New York.

With a record week on "Ingagi" to his credit he decided to repeat on "The Cuckoos" and one of the street ballyhoos he used was alone enough to pack them in. He secured a 1914 Ford from some place. The flivver was all smashed up and hardly able to run without assistance. He painted it up with crazy sayings, decorated the wheels with ribbons, dressed two men up to represent the stars in the film, gave them cuckoo whistles and told them to go out and raise the deuce. They did plenty. The oil can banged into Cadillacs; it slammed into trucks; hit poles; went backward when it should have gone forward; in the neighborhood districts it was mistaken for a D.S.C. truck, and a couple of persons emptied ashes in it; six cows were so scared by it that they gave sour milk for two weeks; three drunkards reformed; mothers hid their kids; and the lunatic asylum keepers, armed with butterfly nets chased it—outside of that it received no attention.

The opening day of the film proved what showmanship can do on any picture for the crowds were lined up an hour before the box-office opening and the S.R.O. sign was on display all during the picture's run. Of course, since Ray is one of our active members we will present more accounts of his work in the near future and before closing we would like Walter Nelson to know that Ray sends his regards through these columns. Oak?

Rosenberg Passes Along A Campaign Stunt Of Value

A couple of stunts that will fit almost any picture were used recently by Jack Rosenberg, manager of the Plaza Theatre in San Diego, Cal., and since we think they will prove of value to his fellow members we are taking this time to pass them along.

Through a tie-up with a local dry goods establishment he secured a number of handkerchiefs and gave them away in conjunction with his showing of "Dumb-Bells in Ermine." A sticker, pasted on top of the handkerchief, plugged the film and the dealer. Another idea that helped the picture's success a lot was a novelty herald. The herald measured 3½ by 8 inches, printed in black on green stock. It was doubled over and one side read, "How to Live On the Minimum Wage—A Tip for the Working Girl From a Dumb-Bell in Ermine." A fashion model cut also adorned the page.

Half of the inside page contained the gag and read:

How to Live On $16 a Week

BUDGET

1.	Meals and Lodging	$11.00
2.	Car Fare	1.00
3.	Clothing	2.40
4.	Cosmetics	.15
5.	Miscellaneous	.95
6.	Savings	.50

SHORT CUTS

Run into your boy friend on HIS way to lunch.

Three in a room. (Two in the bed and one on the couch.)

You're safe in a strange machine until a half hour after sunset.

Do without stockings — regardless of the weather. (You can get warm in bed.)

Watch for Bargain Day in the Bargain Basement.

Keep in touch with your druggist. He gets lots of samples.

Get a dime bank that you can't open.

The rest of it, under a head, "How to Live on Less Than $16 a Week," carried the sales talk on the picture. As this was the first time these stunts had ever been worked in the city, they went over to great success and since they met with almost unanimous success, it seems to us that Rosenberg will use them again in the future. And, by the way, he had designed a corner block for eight by ten stills that helps him to secure window tie-ups easily. In fact, the stills can be placed in any restaurants or soda fountain without taking up a lot of room. The block is in the form of a right angle triangle and copy on whatever picture he is selling is imprinted on it. The cost of printing is trifling and in case you'd like to shift your layouts a little it might pay you to give these a try. We want to thank Jack for passing these along and hope to hear from him again in the very near future.

Laurence Keeps On Giving The Capitol Capital Publicity

In order that we may know he is hitting on all four, H. L. Laurence, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Paris, Tenn., gives us a line on the novelty gags he has been using to keep business up to par.

When he played "Peacock Alley" he decided to use the special excursion ticket stunt as a plug for the picture. As most of our members know, this gag consists of printing up a herald in the form of a transcontinental railroad ticket and enumerating the various highlights of the film. The stunt met with immediate favor in Paris and nearly every herald found its way into the homes of the townspeople.

He combined an institutional plug with a plug on "Anna Christie" by printing up cards, the tops of which was made in the form of a ruler. The copy read: "Here's A Good Rule—Never Miss A Show At The Capitol," and then went on to sell the Garbo film. An angle that made a big hit with the housewives was the special "Do Away With Blue Monday" herald that he made up. We have shown a number of these in the past but we'll attempt to describe it in case any of our members have not as yet seen it.

It is printed on good stock manila cardboard and measures 3 by 10 inches. The heading reads: "Do Away With Blue Monday!" and the copy underneath states: "Washday begins with the first insistent tinkle of the alarm clock. And likely as not, we have not seen the last of it when twilight settles down. An aching back, tired muscles, frazzled nerves, a topsy turvy house—these are the fruits of a washday.

The present day laundry offers leisure that will keep you young-minded; fresh and radiant; gives you added time to enjoy the special entertainments offered by the Capitol Theatre—who have arranged especially interesting and entertaining programs during the month of June; and who are equipped with the Finest Sound Reproducing Apparatus to present them in a perfect manner." Underneath this copy in bold type "Visit The Capitol Theatre Every Monday," was placed. The rest of the herald listed the Monday attractions and on the bottom of the card a "Special Inducement Coupon" was printed. The coupon entitled the bearer to receive one free ticket with each paid admission for the Monday Matinee Only.

Here's another one that you can cash in on and if you have a laundry in your town or city we believe that you can effect some sort of an arrangement whereby they would take care of printing the heralds at no cost to you. We don't know how Mr. Lawrence is set down in his town for tie-ups of this sort but we do want to hand him a compliment for the way he makes use of this stunt. Keep up the good work "H. L." and let's have some more.

Jess Marlowe Was Forced To Hustle On Lobby Display

With just three days to work in, Jess Marlowe, manager of the Pheil Theatre in St. Petersburg, Fla., managed to turn out a campaign on "Ingagi" that had the whole town talking from the time the picture opened to when it finished.

When he learned that the film was to play his house, he planted stories with the local newspapers that were corkers. His next move was to have his sign painter make up lobby cards for the picture. The minute the cards were put up Marlowe discovered that more than unusual interest was being aroused in them, so he immediately had the sign painter ad a question mark to the title and started to sell it along a teaser angle.

He then made up a novelty herald, post card size, and which carried copy on one side, "Have You Seen the Missing Link?" And on the other side the sales talk. An usher dressed in the costume used by hunters and explorers in Africa, walked about the streets of the town and distributed the heralds. On the day the picture opened the town sure received a surprise, for the entire lobby, as you can see from the photo, resembled a scene in the heart of darkest Africa. Or rather we should say the inner lobby looked more like the middle of the Black Belt, since during the night, Marlowe, his assistant Byron Turner and chief doorman, Rollin Murndorf, had effected the transformation of the theatre.

STILL GIRDLING THE GLOBE!

The Managers' Round Table Club takes pleasure in announcing the admission to membership of Mr. J. E. Noronha, Jr., advertising manager of the Queen's Theatre in Hong Kong, China, and Mr. Harry Landau, manager of the Gaiety Theatre in Tientsin, China.

Our new representatives of the show game in China will have some interesting information to pass along to their fellow members in the very near future, and as an advance tip we would like you to know that when it comes to live-wire merchandising these showmen are right there with the goods.

We extend a cordial welcome to Mr. Noronha, Jr., and Mr. Landau and express the hope that this will mark the beginning of an exchange of ideas of mutual benefit that will serve to cement more firmly our relations with the showmen across the sea.

Turner and Murndorf hauled trees, moss and swamp grass for a distance of five miles in order to help Marlowe create a realistic effect for the merchandising of the picture. The inner lobby was a knockout. It was completely closed in with the trees and swamp grass, with only a small path being left for entrance into the theatre. To give it a still more realistic effect, Marlowe placed stuffed wild animals along the path and as the patrons filed through the darkened interior some of them would involuntarily step away from a tiger, who, teeth bared, seemed ready to spring at its prey. Lions, jackals and other habitues of the jungle were in evidence and they all tended to sell the production even before it had unreeled.

As Marlowe has covered nearly every possible angle, including schools, window tie-ups, etc., as well as dressing up his staff in atmospheric costume, it was small wonder that he opened his box-office on the first day of the picture and found lines a block long waiting to get in. During the run of the film, the atmospheric front attracted so much attention that the local newspaper commented upon it in its columns and Marlowe found that, more than ever, persons were stopping to look at it; but the best part of it was seen when after looking at the display they'd step up to the cashier and slap down their jack.

We'd like you to know that Mr. Marlowe is the "pleasingly plump" (yep, he says so himself) gentleman to the right of the ticket office and as this is his first contribution on joining the Club we decided to introduce him to you along with his work. So meet Jess Marlowe, and keep your eye on him because when a showman turns out work of this sort it means that he is going to turn out more of the same kind.

Weiss & Perlberg Inc. Romp Home With More Winners

The balmy breezes floating up North from Jacksonville, Fla., carry plenty of tales about what Al Weiss, Jr., and Jonas Perlberg, manager and publicity director respectively of the Florida Theatre are doing.

One trait of Jonas' that we sure do admire is his penchant for shooting us plenty of pictures of his stunts in order that we won't have to go into a lot of details about how the gag shaped up. In the group of photos we are showing you can note the special tie-up he arranged with the local libraries on "Journey's End." The libraries agreed to feature stills and a card plugging the picture in the frames outside the building. In addition to this they also agreed to insert special book marks in every book leaving the library. The two lower photos in the group show a couple of other valuable angles that went into the campaign on the film. The lower left one depicts the hundreds of Boy Scouts who were invited to parade to the theatre and witness the show. The boys carried banners plugging the picture and they attracted plenty of attention marching through the town. At Jacksonville Beach (the largest beach in the world), Perlberg placed cut-out letters that stretched across a wide area and when it is learned that over 25,000 cars passed that sign on Sunday alone, it is easy to measure the value of the stunt.

An innovation that went over very well was a fishing pond that was constructed in the lobby for "The Big Pond." Patrons were invited to try and hook celluloid fish with a possible chance of securing free tickets. The pictures showing the girl holding the mammoth check was used as a street ballyhoo for "Devil's Holiday." The girl walked about the busiest streets of the town carrying the compo board check and the unusual display created a lot of comment that re-acted in a big way towards the box-office.

Another angle that netted the house plenty of good-will was a tie-up with a local electric refrigeration concern. The company placed twelve of their models in the lobby of the theatre. The models were filled with various food products promoted from the local dealers and as the patrons entered the house they were given samples of the merchandise which included ice cream, cake, etc. As a special treat a door prize of a basket of food products was given daily to some lady. As the cooling system was put into operation about the same time as the food show some more publicity was received by having the weather man turn it on. Since the local dealers participating in the electric refrigeration display all had radio time they mentioned the show and the theatre in their programs.

These few stunts turned out by Weiss-Perlberg, Inc., met with their usual measure of success and as their fellow members know, when the incorporation sets out to pack them in they generally have to turn them away.

Adams Had A Slant On Base-Ball Angle That Worked Great

Cashing in on the baseball angle enabled K. L. Adams, manager of the Liberty Theatre in Sunnyside, Washington, to boost up his Sunday business a good bit as well as getting publicity and good-will for the house.

He made up a number of cards, about the size of postals. In addition to carrying a plug on the current picture at the theatre they carried on one side a place to record the score of the baseball game and on the other side, the schedule of games for the entire season together with an institutional plug on the house sound.

This combination score-card herald made a big hit with the owners of the ball park and they decided to use them as admission tickets. So when a patron walked up to the ticket seller and laid down his dough he was given one of the score-cards in lieu of a ticket. Great benefit was derived by Adams due to the fact that the name of his current attraction was right before the eyes of all the spectators during the ball game. It generally happened that the strangers visiting the town along with the visiting team would stay over and go to the show after the game.

There are a number of angles that can be worked around this combination score-card and herald gag and we think that if you start figuring out local conditions you'll hit a couple of mediums that will make the stunt a knockout success for you. We want to thank "K. L." for shooting this one along to us, especially at a time when it comes in most handy. Give our regards to our many friends around your way "K. L.," and if there's any of the boys "laying low" tell them we want to hear from them. Oke?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Peterson Featured A Couple Of Calfs In Special Setting

C. M. Peterson, manager of the State Theatre at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, created something decidedly unusual and what must have proved mighty effective advertising for the picture when he worked out this gag on the Golden Calf, as witness story below.

Although the explanation did not so specify, we are smart enough to assume that two legs were merely borrowed from some hosiery display store. At any rate, Peterson says that this simplified version of "sawing a woman in half" attracted no end of attention and we're ready and willing enough to admit it.

Here's another angle in the shadow-box department boys and this particular picture fits the occasion very well, at any rate if you have already played it keep the idea in mind for anything else that lends itself to this type of exploitation and thanks to you C. M. for passing it along. It is just a suggestion, but if it leads your trend of thought into any channels for profit then the time and space were good investments. Right?

But, wait a minute. This sounds like a soap-box speech and that's not what we want it to sound like. It's just telling you what we think, and no one was ever shot for doing that. Let's keep right on swapping ideas and you'll soon find out that your own activities are taking on a decidedly new and peppy lease of life. Tell us lots more, "Pete," and don't spare the typewriter when it comes to broadcasting what you are doing out there. Oak?

C. Fries Covered Many "Ace" Points On Picture Selling

A tie-up with the local branch of the Postal Telegraph company enabled Carlos Fries, manager of the Ellanay Theatre in El Paso, Texas, to secure a raft of free publicity for his showing of "Son of the Gods," and here's how he worked it.

He promoted a type-telegraph machine which was placed in the lobby. A wire was secured, apparently coming from Richard Barthelmess, thanking the patrons of the theatre for viewing his latest and greatest talking picture and urging their friends to come down and see it.

About 7,000 copies of this wire were given away during the first three days of the picture to patrons of the show.

The machine created such an attraction in itself that it stopped all passers-by to see what the young lady was receiving from New York as she operated the machine. The wire came from the Postal office in the theatre and the girl and two messenger boys put the telegrams in Postal envelopes and handed them to patrons.

The telegram was marked as having come from New York and was directed to patrons of the Ellanay Theatre.

The stunt aroused unusual interest and undoubtedly helped to publicize the Barthelmess picture to successful patronage.

To give the stunt a more personal touch, the manager stood in the lobby for the first two nights—noticing some of his patrons enter. When they came out there was a telegram personally addressed to each of these patrons the manager knew.

This last part of the stunt must have kept Fries with his hands full, as he knows almost every patron who enters his house and the best part of it is that they in turn are well acquainted with him. For that reason it's small wonder that he numbers hundreds of persons as steady patrons at the Ellanay.

STOCKING UP WITH THOUGHTS

(From the Chain Store Review)

The best executive is the one who has sense enough to pick good men to do what he wants done, and self-restraint enough to keep from meddling with them while they do it.

—Theodore Roosevelt.

Look in a man's eyes for honesty; around his mouth for weakness; at his chin for strength; at his hands for temperament; at his nails for cleanliness.

His tongue will tell you his experience and under the questioning of a shrewd employer prove or disprove his statements as it runs along.

—George Horace Lorimer.

Every one from an office boy to the president of the country agrees that this is a day of rapid changes. Progress is taking Time by the forelock, and only those who are willing to get in line with the procession can long survive the changing times.

—H. H. Stoms, President The Fair Stores Co.

There is nothing so interesting or so important in business as the development and growth of the people engaged in it. When a group of well-trained men and women make a planned, co-ordinated effort toward any objective, are sincere in their ideals, do whatever they are doing in a happy, cheerful, confident way, they are bound to succeed. It does not matter what line of business they follow. They cannot fail!—T. C. McCracken.

The underlying reason for the tremendous success of this country and of all our great leaders of industry has been the degree to which they have either consciously or unconsciously co-ordinated their efforts in the interests of those classes upon whom they depend for their success.

Local Co-Operation Proves A Boon To Barnett Lazarus

One of the things that Barney Lazarus, manager of the Manhattan Theatre in New York City is proficient in is making special tie-ups with his local dealers and so when he opened the roof garden of his theatre on Friday the Thirteenth (which didn't mean a thing to him), he decided to give his patrons a treat.

Through a tie-up he made with a local pharmacy he was enabled to secure a number of coupons which were given out at the opening of the theatre. The ticket entitled the bearer to a free soda at the drug store. The day after the opening the druggist went over to the theatre and declared that the tie-up was one of the most profitable ones he had ever taken part in. He declared that nearly everyone who had brought a coupon to the store purchased enough other merchandise to make the investment worth while for him.

We have often passed along accounts of what Barney is doing with his local merchant tie-ups and we've shown you how they all flock to get in on any scheme that he may have regarding the merchandising of theatre and business attractions. This showman has been doing some great work up in his district and it is interesting to note that his former assistant Murray Schatten has gone up the ladder and is now managing the Majestic Theatre in New York City. Which tends to prove something about Barney's knowledge of show business.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

HAIL HAIL THE GANG'S ALL HERE—

AND STILL THEY COME!

H. S. GLOVER is the manager of the Majestic Theatre in Shreveport, La. He has been represented on our pages before in connection with various exploitation stunts that he engineered and so this introduction is really unnecessary but "through the window" every one must go and now that you have arrived, "H. S.," how about a photo and a letter containing some "dope" on yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MITCHELL CONERY manages the Lyric Theatre in Mobile, Ala. Being one of those peppy Publix managers of which so many are located down south, we think that he will want to keep right in step with the rest of his fellow managers. And the best way to let them know what you are doing, Mitchell, is by contributing regularly to your Club pages.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SYD LEVINE is the Assistant Manager of the Stillwell Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y. As most of the Club members know, the Stillwell is run by Arthur Smith and it is interesting to note that when the talkies came in Syd was elevated from organist to the position that he now holds. Keep up your good work Syd and it wouldn't surprise us a bit to hear of you running a house of your own some day.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. L. FAWKS manages the Grand Theatre in McCamey, Texas, but before we can vouch for him we must coax a little letter out of him on how he is running that house of his and getting customers up to the box office window. What do you say, Fred? How about giving us some "info" on your capabilities as a showman?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LEO YOUNG manages the Egyptian Theatre in Greenville, South Carolina. From the moment we received Leo's application we rather suspected that we had found, what we like to term, an active member. You will read more about Leo in an early issue and we want to tell you to keep your eye on that town of his because he is constantly pulling fast ones.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SAMUEL SILVERMAN handles the Rivoli Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., and as this marks his first job since he graduated from college we look forward with interest to seeing how he is going to take to the show game. Keep us informed on what you are doing to merchandise your shows, Samuel, so that we can rate you. Oke?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

T. L. HENRICH manages the Hippodrome Theatre in Lancaster, Ohio, and as he has been in the film end of the game for a good many years it is our opinion that he is going to put his house over in fine style. As we know a little about your town, "T. L.," we believe that you will find enough opportunities to display the kind of showmanship that will label you an active member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GLENN DODGE is the Assistant Manager of the Lynbrook Theatre in Lynbrook, Long Island, N. Y., and working with a group of showmen such as comprise the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses men it looks as though Glenn is going to learn a lot about the game and in a little while he'll be handling a house on his own hook. Keep us posted, Glenn, so that we can see how you are progressing.

BURTON JONES manages the Rivoli Theatre in Beatrice, Nebraska, for the Publix outfit and working with such a group of hustlers he should be turning out some mighty fine work because judging from what his brother managers have been doing (as our pages show) we feel that he must be a real showman to keep up with them. Let us know what you are doing, Burton, so that we in turn can pass along your work to the rest of the Club.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! !———

EDWARD REED is the manager of the Crown Theatre in Mobile, Ala. Through our crystal ball we glean that Mobile offers a good many opportunities for showmanship of the highest type, and located in a city that possesses such possibilities it is only natural to suppose that Ed is going to keep his house right in front of the public every moment. And, by the way, Ed, why not give us a line or two on the way you sell your shows and you might also include your photo with the letter.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DAN BURGMAN manages the Saenger Theatre in Greenville, Miss. We are glad to welcome Mr. Burgman into the Club for the reason that a showman who is as active as he would be welcome any place. In order that we may let the rest of the Club in on what you are accomplishing, Dan, it will be necessary for you to shoot us some accounts of your recent work. What do you say?

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MISS MARGARET LEE is the latest of the showwomen to join our ranks. Miss Lee is the Director of Publicity for the Tudor Theatre in New Orleans, La. Knowing the Tudor as one of the class houses of New Orleans it is only logical that Miss Lee should be getting some great results from her show merchandising. We are glad to welcome her into the Club and we hope that when she sends us in her first contribution she will include a photo of herself as well as a little "dope" so that we can give her a regular introduction. How about it, Miss Lee? You know we have some corking showwomen on our rolls and it will give us great pleasure to list you among the active contributors.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! !———

FRANK HARTING of the Majestic Theatre in Shreveport, La., is the latest publicity man to join our organization. We have heard a bit about Mr. Harting's work from his fellow showmen on the Publix circuit and when they speak so well of him it makes us feel that he must know his biz. That leads us to the conclusion that he will be a very active member and we hope that his first move will be to send us in a photo of himself and a little dope on his career.

Ain't it a Shame

To Beat Your Wife on Sunday, when you've got Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday—Saturday too. So goes the quaint negro spiritual. The exhibitor has a lot of things to beat these days, what with Tom Thumb Golf Courses, Night Baseball, Summer Temp., etc., and yet many exhibitors are doing it very successfully. The answer is

Good Box-Office Pictures

And that's why there have been smiles this summer, from large circuit bookers and independent exhibitors who have played "WHAT A MAN!" the Reginald Denny laugh-getter, which has elicited 100% reviews all over the country; James Cruze's "COCK O' THE WALK", which opened at the Roxy; "THE DUDE WRANGLER", a new fresh type of out-door comedy. And now, to start the 1930-31 season, two new James Cruze productions—"THE BIG FIGHT", which just finished its pre-release run at the New York Globe Theatre, and "ONCE A GENTLEMAN", with Edward Everett Horton, which had a sensational pre-release run at Pantages New Hollywood Theatre. These sure sellers are now available for pre-release bookings.

Don't Deny Yourself

"MORAN AND MACK SET HIGH MARK FOR BLACKFACE COMEDIANS" —Motion Picture News

"Anybody's War" Clicks

Moran and Mack certainly keep the laughs sustained in this war comedy based on Mack's story of "Two Black Crows in the A. E. F." It should be a box-office card, for its humor is punctuated with human interest, pathos and romance. The cast is an excellent one, with Neil Hamilton and Joan Peers furnishing the romantic angle, and Walter McGrail as the menace. The battle scenes are thrilling and funny. Moran and Mack have set a high mark for other blackface comedians to shoot at. HYNES

Big Four Smoking Peace Pipe; Divide Country; Swap Theatres, Playing Time?

Gag Would Be to Keep Off One Another's Toes; Each to Be King in Own Zone; Did U. S. Halt Plan Previously?

"Stay in your Own Back Yard" is to be the theme song of future expansion plans of the four major circuits and affiliations, it is indicated by deals for theatre swapping, a building and acquisition holiday and pooling of houses now reported under way. Paramount Publix, Fox, Warners and R-K-O are the circuits declared involved. In the development, Loew's is regarded as a Fox affiliate.

Under the reported plan, the United States will be parceled off into zones each of which would be a field for development by one of the four circuits to the exclusion of others.

Branded as fantastic when first made public by this source some 15 months ago, the reported plan now is declared to be gaining strength, so that the era of cut-throat expansion may be brought to an end.

Government Fear Blocked Previous Division?

Such a parcelling, it is pointed out, would eliminate overseating in a number of territories, end the skyrocketing of prices of theatres sought by the circuits and expedite any future mergers which might be undertaken. The very magnitude of the arrangement, however, presents many obstacles to its consummation, but a start, at least, is understood being made.

Inability of the parties to arrive at an agreement and the spectre of government prosecution are said to have blocked development of the parceling proposal when it was first broached, but subsequent developments and the dictates of the bankers are declared to be hastening the territorial division.

Heads of the four major circuits reported involved in the division are: Paramount Publix-Adolph Zukor; Warners-Harry M. Warner; R-K-O-Hiram S. Brown; Fox-Harley L. Clarke. Their theatre activities are directed respectively by Sam Katz, Spyros Skouras, Joseph Plunkett and Harold B. Franklin (West) and Oscar M. Oldknow (East).

Some of the Deals Under Way

Warners and Fox are reported negotiating a deal for swapping or pooling of houses in several states, including New York, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia. Paramount and Fox are said to have completed a building truce when the ten-year reciprocal deal on product was consummated. This is said to have blocked building of Fox houses in Canada, and of Paramount houses in Pacific Coast and other western and middle western states. It also may lead to turning over of Fox Chicago houses to Publix-Balaban & Katz.

R-K-O is declared to be included in theatre swapping plans in Wisconsin with Warners and Fox. Sale of RKO product to Warners in Philadelphia provides the company with an outlet there and the R-K-O has been closed. Fox also has sold to Stanley in Philadelphia and its proposed 5,000-seater there may not be erected.

Paramount and Warners are said to have made a peace pact so far as building in each other's territories is concerned, although present deals are not affected. Whether a swap will be made at a later date has not been indicated. An indication of the truce involving Paramount-Fox-Warners is the reported dropping of plans for a Warner house at Atlanta;

Vol. XLII NEW YORK CITY, JULY 19, 1930 No. 3

IT'S a stale story. Good pictures mean good business. It's been ever thus. Depression cannot harm a production which stimulates word-of-mouth advertising. Babbittry? No. Solid facts.

You know the attractions that are cleaning up right now while the calamity howlers howl. Lots of fair-to-middling pictures are taking it on the chin, of course, but the nice babies are clicking.

The percentage of good pictures isn't large. That's the rub. When customers of any industrial firm—you make the selection—kick about the quality of the goods they are asked to buy, the factory men, not the sales or advertising men, are put on the spot.

One Mind Production

THE perilous proportion of pictures that either turn people away from the box-office or sour them sufficiently to part with their money more sparingly is proof sufficient that something is wrong in production. No question that the box-office is sorely in need of a new transfusion and that it is only from Hollywood that such rejuvenation can possibly come.

But so long as there sits in each major studio a one-man fulcrum on which the trials, tribulations, worries and decisions involving anywhere from thirty-five to seventy pictures a year rest, just so long will the curve of production dip sharply into the ordinary and mediocre.

An Impossible Job

THIS is not a slap at the man holding the reins in Hollywood. For them, it must be properly said that they are filling an impossible job as well as the system warrants.

Too many pictures are being turned out under individual management and, because there are too many for any one individual on any one lot to handle adequately, they are ground out in strict compliance with the rules and regulations of factory manufacture.

If this industry feels it must market as many pictures as it does today—and to that belief this writer does not subscribe—the one way out is to draft into, or make allied with, each studio of importance as formidable an array of production brains as money and incentive can attract.

ON the Coast today there is one producer, by way of example, who has a purity fixation which makes it impossible for a story in which a woman turns bad to be produced on his lot. His is the last word and there the matter ends. Yet who knows what vehicles of dramatic and commercial force that lot is passing up?

In another studio, the man high up supervises more pictures than he should, but turns his personal ability, which is considerable, to one or two stories a year—yarns that he likes. The result? Those two invariably smash their way through to phenomenal business, while the supervised pictures usually leave a trail of indifferent grosses.

Ostrich in the Sand

ON a third lot—big league, too—the production czar insists that every picture glorify one player. Story values are warped to fit the decree; direction and performances, too. What happens? Potential values are rarely realized and the particular company in question finishes its year—as it did the season just closed—fourth.

Here in New York, equally high-powered executives study the books, raise pandemonium with the sales force and only mild hell with the studio, overlooking entirely the cancer that gnaws at the company's vitals.

The Way Out and Its Label

DAVID BELASCO produced three or four stage plays this season. He's now taking a long rest. If Jed Harris produces one or two hits a year, he views his handiwork with satisfaction. In this business, Schulberg battles with approximately sixty pictures a year, Thalberg with fifty, Sheehan with forty-nine, Le Baron with thirty, Jack Warner with seventy for Warners and First National combined. It's all wet.

The doors so zealously and so jealously guarded must be thrown open to all and sundry who have demonstrated their ability to produce. Further than that, the studios must make up their minds to gamble with new blood, inside their own gates or outside, it makes no difference. The way out of the maze is labelled individual, independent production. There is no other.

Publix Calm as Warners Invade Chi; Razz "Mad Rush for Unsound Houses"

"Hell's Angels" To Have B.O. Test At Seattle

Seattle—If the showing of "Hell's Angels" as a two-a-day film at the Fox, starting Friday, is a success, the picture will be roadshown by Sid Graumann over the entire Fox West Coast circuit. The showing is the first roadshow at the house, and marks the second presentation of the picture, the premiere having been at Los Angeles.

The top will be $1.50, with Ben Lyon and Billie Dove expected to make personal appearances. H. Wayne Pearson, personal representative of Howard Hughes, producer of the film; Lincoln Quarberg, Hughes' publicity man, and Charles P. Stallings, production manager in making the film, are here on arrangements for the showing.

And Still They Wend Their Way To Courtrooms

Hollywood—Look out for a cycle of courtroom plays. The reason for this warning is that so many members of the film colony are wending their way these days to the courts, for one reason or other, that there's bound to be an outbreak in that direction.

There's Del Andrews, director, for instance. A warrant was issued for his arrest on charges of failing to provide for the support of his son. His divorced wife slapped on the warrant, alleging he is in arrears four months at the rate of $30 per month. (Where are those high film salaries?)

Lloyd Hamilton appeared before the bar on complaint of the former Mrs. Hamilton that he owes back alimony of $10,000. Lloyd got a reduction from $400 to $250 per month, but the old tariff may go into effect again, the judge warned.

Following the resignation of S. George Ullman as executor of the estate of Rudy Valentino, a local bank was named administrator. There was some criticism of George's management of the estate.

Priscilla Dean, former star, asked the protection of the police, alleging that Mrs. Avery Arnold, first wife of Lieut. Leslie P. Arnold, aviator, also a former husband of the actress, had been snooping around her garage looking for the ace. Miss Dean did not like that at all. The two women had a "pushing scrape," it is reported.

Then Jack Noonan, brother of Mollie O'Day and Sally O'Neill, went to trial on charges of burglary and receiving stolen goods.

Buck Jones, known to the census enumerators as Charles B. Jones and to kids as a Western hero, filed an involuntary petition in bankruptcy, listing liabilities of $135,852.90 and assets of $650.

On arriving here from England, Evelyn Laye, who is to make her film debut in "Lillie," received word from London that she had won a divorce from Sonnie Hale, comedian. "Isn't it wonderful to think I am free?" she gurgled.

Charge Boycott; Milwaukee Indie Seeks Gov't Help

Milwaukee—Charging their New World, neighborhood theatre, is being boycotted by exchanges and has been unable to obtain first run pictures, Dr. Joseph Atanasoff and his brother, Leo, have darkened the house and appealed to the Dept. of Justice for relief.

The Atanasoffs' charges already have been reviewed and declared baseless by the state department of markets, which declared there was no evidence of unfair competition.

The New World has been the scene of a bombing and numerous paint splashings. Operators of the theatre admitted that some time ago they had changed from union operators to non-union men.

No further action will be taken by the theatre operators, it was stated, until word is received from the justice department.

Fredman to New York

London—Ernest W. Fredman, editor of "The Daily Film Renter," sails for New York in late August or early September. This will be his first visit in three years.

$2,000,000 Cost Claimed

Moran, Wyo.—Originally set to cost $1,250,000, "The Big Trail already has passed the $1,600,000 mark and will stand Fox $2,000,000 before completed next month by Raoul Walsh, according to Roger Ferri, who is with the 12,000 men, women and children of the company on location here. The picture is slated to have its premiere Sept. 1 at Grauman's Chinese, Hollywood, opening a few weeks later in New York.

Official Asserts Circuit Is Only One in Business in "Liquid Condition"

Chicago—Paramount Publix does not recognize a competitive move in Warners' entrance into the metropolitan field here. That is the significance of statements made to Motion Picture News by local representatives of the company, who denied both that any change would result in the local expansion plans of the circuit as a result of Warner's activity and that a single strategic theatre line-up is available to a competing circuit anywhere in the metropolitan area.

Acquisitions of available outlying houses, they say, by Warners or any other circuit, cannot be of enough significance to alter the local competitive situation in any fundamental respect. The Loop situation offers even fewer opportunities to competing invaders, they declare.

In substantiation of their statements these authoritative Publix representatives revealed the immediate expansion plans of the circuit locally and commented on the financial and administrative background of the organization as it affects future expansion.

Opening Four, Seeking Three

The most recent addition to Publix properties here, they pointed out, is the recently opened Gateway on the far northwest side. In addition to this house, the circuit plans to build at Devon and Webster, on the north side, and at 63rd and Union, on the south side, in the near future. It will also build in South Chicago. In addition to these new theatres, the circuit is negotiating for the Lynch houses on the northwest side of the city. These include the Tiffin, seating 2,299; the Alamo, seating 1,600; and the Manor, seating 1,844.

These additions, constituting the entire expansion activities of the circuit in the metropolitan area, were determined upon or considered, representatives of Publix state, far in advance of Warner's local invasion. Since that time, it was stated further, no new plans for further acquisitions have been made, nor have any been contemplated as a combative measure. Publix now has 46 theatres in the metropolitan area; five of them are first run Loop houses and the bulk of the remainder are in one or another of the three prerelease classifications. The contemplated additions will give Publix 52 metropolitan theatres in the near future.

Millions at Disposal

As for the financial background of the circuit, it was stated that the local Publix office here is not only without obligations to any bank at this time, but has accomplished its recent expansion without mortgaging or outside financing of any kind and "stands ready with reserve millions to care for future expansion at a time to be dictated by sound business considerations, not by a "mad rush to acquire unsound houses for the foolish satisfaction of holding them."

The only restrictions placed by the Publix

The Insiders' Outlook

HOW and when will Bill Fox reenter the business? In New York and in Hollywood, the anxious line is growing.

The "how" seems to be a bit more mysterious to dope out than the "when." For instance:

It is known that Fox's representatives, very much under cover, have been checking up on the Coast to see just where the manpower could be obtained for his next picture venture. One director, who rates plenty high in Hollywood, has been approached to consider a term contract with Universal, according to the inside, at a salary of $150,000 per picture. This, and other events during the past month, make it look more than likely that Fox has some sort of a deal on for the purchase of Universal with Fox's agents—unknown identities to the regular Coast crowd — conducting negotiations with Carl Laemmle.

Then again, the Laemmles—both of them—have had several conferences with another producing executive who operates the studio end of a large company. Whether or not he is acting in an advisory capacity for the sale of Universal is, of course, open to conjecture; but the plot is thickening.

And don't be surprised if you see the manipulating and politicianing hand of Lewis J. Selznick suddenly appear somewhere in the deal. Perhaps as final purchaser of Universal if Fox does not get the organization. Then you will see Laemmle Jr. and Dave Selznick operating a rejuvenated and amply-financed Universal.

So Hollywood would have it. Here in New York, a Universal executive, sitting high in the councils of his company, states emphatically—and how—that so far as he knows there isn't a thing in the world to it.

Can It Be?

Pot boilings these days about Tiffany. On the upper floor of the Godfrey Building, where L. A. Young's outfit holds sway, nary a word is permitted to seep through. Yet on a couple of faces at least this Insider believes he detects an air of expectancy over something or other.

Officially, then, silence. The rumor factory, however, is religiously grinding 'em out. There is the yarn, for instance, that Phil Goldstone wants all or none and that if he can't buy the organization, he will step out of the producing chair.

Secondly—and, like the others, it is mere talk—that Grant L. Cook will step down from actual management and return to other work in Detroit, the change carrying with it the retirement of Oscar Hanson as sales manager.

Thirdly—and significant, too—is the reported attitude of Young—L. A. of the steel business—toward the company in which he has invested millions. He feels, "they say," that something ought to be done about a procedure which calls for putting in more dough than the venture takes out.

what major executive of what major organization may strike out into new fields, the bankers behind his organization having to'd him they didn't think his administration so hot?

Is Clarke Smiling?

Backed by utilities millions and the combined power of Fox and Loew's, Harley L. Clarke, picture novice, is passing through an interesting experience.

A surprising thing the amount of advice dumped into his lap these days. And from executives in the business who count, too. He maintains a downtown office at 120 Broadway and in it in the last few months have been a number of names you would know well, were it expedient to list them here.

Of course, Nick Schenck is in the official family, as are Winnie Sheehan and Jimmy Grainger, and that makes it jake so far as they are concerned. But the laugh is that the last two, turning the pages of their minds back to the happenings of a few years ago, are not kidding themselves about what may take the form of a rally around Clarke. They stand on his right and his left advising as they go and Clarke is content to have it that way.

All of which makes this Insider wonder if Clarke isn't smiling over it all. He's sure that Sheehan and Grainger are.

Big Business

Why every company in the business maneuvres to end up in Bill Saal's office at Publix. Some sooner, some later, some never:

Publix spends $20,000,000 a year in film rental. Sam Dembow, whose monicker is vice-president, says so and certainly he should know. Naturally first on the list comes Paramount. This year and every other year, as you can easily understand. Last season, Warners were in second place. This year, this coveted spot goes to Fox.

With 1,560 theatres or thereabouts to keep supplied with film, Publix needs considerable outside stuff. The companies, outside of Paramount, on the other hand need the Publix business if they can get it.

Therefore, the trek to the shrine called Saal.

Rolling Back the Years

Williams Gibbs McAdoo, secretary of the treasury in Wilson's cabinet, is writing his memoirs. In addition to his manifold activities, the former secretary took a flier in the film business, via United Artists. This hurdles the years as far back as 1918.

There were all sorts of rumors at the time as to just what were his experiences in the business, but he took the air after a rather brief sojourn. His comment, if any, on his film career may be expected to make hot reading. Particularly to Doug and Mary, Charlie and D. W.

Another Definition

Oscar Price, over a slaughter of food at the Motion Picture Club:

"How do you define the picture business," he asked.

Then, answering his own question:

"It isn't a business. It's an instinct."

Think that over. Then you'll appreciate how closely to the line that definition hits.

It's Box-Office First Now, Then Art, If The Two Mix Well, In Hollywood

The Judge, Jury and Dictator!

"Advertising or ballyhoo may trick the public for a time, but if entertainment plays him false, that most powerful weapon of advertising, word-of-mouth, spells failure for the disappointing picture. We, the public, are judge, jury and dictator," Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, associate director of Hays public relations, told a group of clubwomen at Minneapolis.

"The success of every producer," Mrs. Winter said, "is graded all along the line by the degree with which he meets the public demand."

$250 Penalty on Holdovers Held Wrong by Judge

St. Louis—Provision of the copyright law providing a $250 penalty for misuse of copyright films, music or records is "outrageous" and Congress ought to clarify the situation, U. S. Judge Faris declared in entering a mandatory decree of $13,200 against Christ Zotos, suburban theatre owner, for alleged showing of films without permission.

The actual rental of the films, it is said, would have totaled $176. Under the decision, M-G-M will receive $9,000 for 36 showings; Tiffany, $2,000 for eight showings, and Pathe $1,000 for four showings. The balance is for costs. The exhibitor had offered to settle, but the exchanges refused.

To Renew Drive On Pennsylvania's 1794 Blue Laws

Pittsburgh—Continuation of the fight to modify Pennsylvania's antiquated "blue" laws is to take the form of a statewide drive for a liberal Sabbath and reintroduction of a bill to repeal the 1794 statute at the next session of the legislature.

Rep. A. Musmanno, author of the modification measure which died at the last session, heads the organization which plans the state-wide fight. He announced the proposed drive following a conference with John S. Harron, president of the city council, and Councilman Harry A. Little, chairman of the council's special Sunday law committee. Musmanno has the backing of Philadelphia city officials, who soon will meet with Pittsburgh officials on the matter.

New Broadway House Far Off

It will be about five years before Paramount begins construction on the Broadway theatre it plans on site of the Criterion and New York theatres and adjoining properties on 44th and 45th Sts. The site has been assembled.

St. Paul Exhibs In Ultimatum To Operators

St. Paul—Unless operators comply with independent exhibitors' demand for one man in the booth of sound houses and a wage cut, 15 St. Paul theatres on Saturday will join the 23 Minneapolis independents which have either gone non-union or closed. There are but three of the latter, including the Paradise, operated by W. A. Steffes, general manager of the Northwest exhibitor unit, who is handling the independents' campaign. The others are the Princess and Lyra and owners of these say the houses planned to close for the summer even before there was threat of a strike.

W. A. Steffes

Forty-six union operators walked out July 6 when their demand for two men in the booth was refused. Two Minneapolis independent houses are continuing with union labor, the Broadway and the Ione. The latter is said to be under control of the operators, hence its inability to join the independents' move. Pickets are on duty at the 20 houses operating non-union.

Hughes to Sponsor New Endurance Test Flight

Hollywood—Howard Hughes, millionaire producer of "Hell's Angels" and recent purchaser of Multicolor Films, is bringing the Hunter Brothers, Chicago endurance flight record-breakers, to the Coast immediately. Hughes has agreed to sponsor and underwrite another flight attempt of the Hunter Brothers to break their recently-made record.

Hughes, it is understood, is paying the brothers a substantial sum to make the new flight under his sponsorship, and he is said to hold a contract with them for personal appearances in connection with general showings of "Hell's Angels" in the fall, together with another agreement to feature them in an air picture.

"Creations" Are Swell, But Creators Realize Grosses Determine Salaries

Hollywood—It's the day of the box-office in Hollywood. Believe it or not, many of the directors and others who at one time tilted their noses toward art for art's sake are now more concerned with the career of their pictures at the till.

Time was when the makers of pictures used to propel themselves into a fog labeled creations and devoted themselves to the development of "masterpieces" regardless of what the final gross revealed.

Now the general cry on Hollywood lots is "What did the picture take in at the gate?" They realize that options are taken up in accordance with figures supplied the production department by the sales manager. The drift of the industry toward fewer and bigger—if not better—companies, with enough theatre outlets to make them self-contained, holds the answer.

The result is more of a desire to make pictures that click with the public than those that flop with the long hairs. Also a greater measure of even temperament than has ever before existed in Hollywood. The studio crowd understands that opportunities to float from one plant to another are limited as matters now stand, with the chances growing increasingly smaller as mergers grow in size.

Consolidated to Offer Own Color Process in Fall

Hollywood—Consolidated is reported to have developed its own color process, utilizing patents controlled by the Cinema Patents Co., and will be ready to offer it to producers in the next few weeks.

The company expects to be prepared to take care of color negative and positive developing by the first of September. Present plans call for construction of a new laboratory to handle regulation black and white film, with Seward Street laboratory now in use slated to be used for the color film work.

Theatres Asked To Aid Red Cross Roll Call

Washington—Aid of picture theatres is being solicited by the Red Cross for its annual roll call to be held this year from Armistice Day, Nov. 11, to Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 27. New members are enrolled each year during the period in all parts of the United States by committees representiny local chapters National headquarters is preparing a trailer which depicts activities of the Red Cross during the year and is asking exhibitors to run slides and other announcements to help in the campaign.

Allied Would Be Pleased If Smith Got Hays Mantle

Washington—Report that Al Smith may succeed Will H. Hays as president of the producer-distributor association are viewed with satisfaction by Allied States Ass'n. which believes his selection, if a vacancy should exist, would be "a master stroke."

"We do not know what foundation exists for the reports," Allied points out. "Possibly they grow out of the further report that the du Pont interests, including Mr. Raskob, now have large holdings in Warner Brothers.

"We do, however, have definite ideas as to Mr. Smith's qualifications for the post. We believe the selection of Mr. Smith, if there is to be a vacancy, would be a master stroke. It would gain for the industry the confidence of the people in a degree never before enjoyed; it would be superb showmanship.

"From the standpoint of the independent exhibitor, the Allied States Ass'n would welcome Mr. Smith because we believe that a keen sense of justice is deeply ingrained in the man. We believe that he would protect to the utmost the interest of his members, but at the same time would disdain using unfair methods based on the power of money.

"Mr. Smith is highly regarded in high places and has the affection of the people. In calling on government officials on legitimate business he would be welcome at the front door. He would adopt business methods, and, although an experienced politician, would kick politics out of the window. He would make his appeal directly to clubs and organizations, not through paid agents.

"Above and beyond all, he would not tolerate activity on the part of his own subordinates designed to stir up strife in order to prolong or make more secure their connection with the industry.

Steps to Pass Upon New Contract Being Speeded

With final details as to wording of the new standard licensing agreement to be worked out by Gabriel L. Hess of the Hays organization, Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Ass'n., and Frank Walker of the M. P. T. O. A., steps for ratification of the new agreement are going forward. Distributors already are set on the agreement and it remains now for Allied and the M. P. T. O. A. to give final approval. It is anticipated this will be done by mail.

Anti-British Movement in India Threatens Theatres

Calcutta—Agitation against British films is taking the form here of sporadic picketings of theatres by women adherents of the anti-English movement in India.

The Albion, operated by Madan Theatres, was practically closed one night as a result.

RKO Radio Pictures Name

RKO Radio Pictures is the new name adopted for RKO Prod. The product, hereafter, is to be called RKO Radio Pictures.

Report Scouted

Little likelihood of any change in leadership of the Hays organization is seen in New York film circles. Hays, it is pointed out, has a contract until 1936 and prompt denial has been made that any friction exists between him and any of his membership. The denials were made when it was reported that Warners and First National might withdraw their membership.

Van Praag Names Six Managers for Ad-Vance Offices

Six managers for as many offices in key cities have been named by M. Van Praag, sales manager of Ad-Vance Trailer Service, in the expansion program recently launched. The company plans a branch in all exchange centers.

Sidney Strauss has been appointed manager of the New York branch with Joe Friedman as sales representative. At Detroit, Roy Moon, former Universal branch manager and now general manager of Co-operative Theatre Service Corp., heads the new branch. An affiliation has been made with the co-operative firm which has a membership of 104 Michigan theatres.

J. H. Lutzfer, formerly of Indianapolis, is manager of the new St. Louis branch, while V. L. Schram, also a former Universality, heads the Buffalo exchange. Max Margolis of Cincinnati is taking charge at Indianapolis. D. Sydney, for years with Ad-Vance, has been named Milwaukee manager.

The Future?

"David Sarnoff," comments Arthur Brisbane in his "Today" column in the Hearst newspapers, "has imagination as well as executive capacity. Mr. Sarnoff, young and remarkably able, believes that this generation will see the greatest actors, orators, clergymen and singers moving and hearing their voices in their homes. That is modern magic."

Immerman Gets New Publix Post; Balaban to N. Y.

Chicago—Walter Immerman, former manager of the Publix Detroit division and associated with Sam Katz for more than 20 years, has been named manager of the Publix Chicago and Detroit divisions to succeed John Balaban, who goes to New York September 1 as home office director of the two divisions. Immerman will be located in the Chicago offices of Publix-B. & K. Nate Platt, former B. & K. theatre manager here, will succeed Immerman as district manager at Detroit.

J. J. Rubens, director of the Publix-Great States division here, will also go to New York September 1 with John Balaban.

"Sam Katz has long felt that the Chicago-Detroit division and the wide area embraced by Publix-Great States in Illinois and Indiana should have representation in the home office," said a representative of the circuit, in commenting on the transfers.

Two Week Shutdown at W. E. Hawthorne Plant

Chicago—Hawthorne plant of Western Electric at Cicero, Ill., closed down this week and will remain closed until July 28. Approximately 27,000 employes were affected by the shutdown, a nominal number as compared with the maximum working force of 40,000 at this plant, where Western Electric's new small type sound equipment has been in production.

The company's payroll for the two weeks' period, paid out in advance of the shutdown, is reported to have been $1,800,000. The bulk of the employees accept the lay-off as a two weeks' vacation with pay, but many of them were not eligible for vacations and received no pay in advance of the shutdown.

Dirt Dishing Feared If Rex Lease Goes to Trial

Hollywood—Plenty of dirt is slated to be dished up if and when the case of Rex Lease, charged with beating up Vivian Duncan when she resisted his advances, comes to trial July 31. The alleged beating, Miss Duncan charges, followed a party. She has undergone an operation on her eye injured in the melee. Effort is being made to hush the affair, it is said, to prevent further unfavorable publicity.

Baird Television Sets Held Ready for Theatre

London—Television by the Baird process was demonstrated here, the pictures being shown on a screen about the size of a door. The process is declared ready for theatre use. The screen used, according to the inventor, J. L. Baird, will cost about $1,500, while a regular-sized theatre screen would cost $15,000. For the televising of news events as they occur, the small screen would suffice, he believes.

World War of Talking Pictures Seen Raging With Hollywood As the Pivot

Cultural Progress of Globe at Stake, W. A. Johnston Says in Satevepost

A world war of talking pictures is under way with the issue at stake not the fortune of any country's film industry but one involving the cultural progress of the globe, says William A. Johnston, publisher of Motion Picture News in an article on talkers appearing currently in The Saturday Evening Post.

The influence of sound upon the world's mass millions may not be minimized, he declares in "The War of Talking Pictures," second article on talkers which has appeared in the nationally-circulated weekly within the last few months.

In the face of this situation, Johnston finds Hollywood sharply divided on the subject. "One studio," he declares, "says that Hollywood, with its greatly superior producing resources, is the logical seat of production; and even goes so far as to say that its famous stars will speak in foreign languages and be lauded abroad for their efforts. The latter is decidedly open to question; and, if so, the further question arises: will the famous stars of the American picture, many of whom, like Fairbanks and Lloyd, are household names abroad, be limited now to the English speaking world?

Another studio, he says, insists foreign versions must be made abroad from the viewpoint of cost and quality. Proponents of the overseas plan, he asserts, argue salaries and labor costs would be cheaper with studios operated in London or Berlin or perhaps in both cities, drawing upon Paris and other centers for talent. This plan would provide the shipment of the English version, Hollywood-made, abroad for duplication in the foreign languages.

On the other hand, advocates of both plans are discussing a pooling of interests, recognizing that the stakes are the entire American producing industry, the Johnston article further states.

Urges Selectivity

"There is one important lesson for American producers to learn, if they will," it reads. "Because the silent foreign versions cost little, they glutted the European market with pictures. There was little, if any, discrimination about demand. Now the fact is that the Continental nations like our spectacles, comedies, Western and underworld dramas and certain other definite types of pictures; but in the way of program pictures in general, and especially the triangle plot pictures, they much prefer their own stories and acting. With talking pictures and the cost of them, the American producers will do well to make careful selection for foreign versions."

Recognizing the importance which the America's foreign trade plays in the film structure, the article queries whether or not this country, with talking pictures, can maintain its remarkable film supremacy abroad and replies to its own question in this manner:

"The answer concerns to an extent the fortunes of an industry on its way to rank near the top of the manufacturing activities of the country; for the foreign film revenue adds considerably to the production exchequers and thereby to quality film production. Also concerned, and to a much greater extent in dollars and cents, is the export trade of many important manufacturing industries in the United States."

Declaring that Europe was slow in grasping the opportunity to rehabilitate its production industry offered when sound came along, Johnston then discusses what happened abroad. He says at this point:

"The upshot of it all is that Great Britain is nearly a year behind the United States in the sound picture situation, both as regards theatres and studios. There have been over-promotion of producing companies and ruthless stock jobbing, with the usual disastrous consequences. To date, however, six studios are equipped with recording apparatus—of American make. They will produce this year a considerable number of English talking pictures; and they will struggle with foreign versions for the Continental market. In addition to the home market, a considerable one, they have Canada, South Africa, the far East, New Zealand and Australia, which, in theatre going population, comes next to the United States. All English speaking countries; but in all of them there will be, in any event, stiff competition from American pictures.

France Lagging

"If Great Britain was nine months later than the United States, France was fully six months behind the British film trade.

"France, apparently, has a lesson of prime importance to learn about the business of pictures. It is this: good pictures cannot be produced until there are good theatres to house them.

"The Spanish language is spoken by approximately 120,000,000 of people; in point of numbers its theatre sphere is second only to English. France, together with Belgium, and large portions of Roumania, Switzerland, Northern Africa, Luxembourg, Montreal and the Province of Quebec, not to mention cities such as Barcelona, Madrid, New York, New Orleans, will comprise a French speaking population of about 50,000,000.

"Italy, like Spain, is about six months behind France in its grasp of the audible picture. There are to date no more than 30 houses wired for sound, and these are having a difficult time of it to secure talking pictures that are acceptable and permissible.

"As the situation stands today, Italy will have to depend upon pictures made in Italian by Germany, France, England and the United States, or perhaps by companies from these countries working in Italian studios. The future may tell another story. Mussolini is enthusiastic over the new vehicle; and he is serious.

Eyes Toward Germany

"In recent years Germany has produced more pictures acceptable to the American market than any other European country. Her theatres are away ahead of those of France; and since the war Berlin has grown to equal, if not exceed, London in importance as a film capital.

"With 63,500,000 in Germany, 7,500,000 in Austria, 3,500,000 in Czecho-Slovakia, a major portion of Switzerland, and a preference for German over other foreign languages in Scandinavia and the Baltic States, the German talking picture has a large field of usefulness.

"Germany, will be heard from in the talking picture war. The producers are apt at picture technique; they are enterprising. As business men they are schooled in the ways and ends of export trade. Germany has developed many women stars; England very few. Berlin has many stage artists, competent leaders in the new things of the theatre; plenty of able writers who know both the Continental and the Anglo-Saxon taste for stories. It is, perhaps, significant that a German writer in Hollywood, Hans Kraly, won the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences' medal this year for the best American picture story, and that a German director, Ernest Lubitsch, is one of the ablest of Hollywood producers.

Problems in Small Nations

"We have thus far considered only the English, French, German, Spanish and Italian languages. From the standpoint of pictures, these are the major languages. And they must always remain so. It is not possible to make good pictures for small population countries; but it is going to be difficult to make this fact generally understood. In Europe's countries, excluding Russia, there are 31 languages. Bulgaria, Greece, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Hungary, Portugal, Turkey—all are going to be disturbed at having to hear another language upon their screens. There is already an outcry against the English talking pictures; yet, as everywhere, the populace want the new audible entertainment. The various governments concerned will have to consider the tense problem of just in what language the masses should and may be entertained.

Hollywood does not take its status over seriously, the article concludes. "Today the studio city is the seat of the world's picture entertainment," it declares. "No doubt

10 Names, Find Lined Up for New Educ'l. Pictures

Hollywood—With the signing of a number of new featured players, impetus was given this week to the production work at Educational and Metropolitan Studios, which, with the Mack Sennett Studios, are now well launched on Educational's new two-reel comedy line-up.

Ten names and one newcomer were added to the Educational-Metropolitan star line-up during the week. They include Charlotte Greenwood, Ford Sterling, Johnny Hines, Clyde Cook, Tom Patricola and his vaudeville partner, Joe Phillips, Bert Roach, Ray Cooke, John West, Buster West and Marian Shockley. Miss Shockley is the newcomer.

South African Circuit Plans Big Expansion

London—With 120 theatres under its control, Kinemas, Ltd., South African firm, is building more, Sidney Hayden, resident British director, said upon his return here following a six months' tour of the circuit. Houses are built or planned at Johannesburg, Durban, Cape Town, Pretoria, Germiston, Benoni, Bulawayo and Lorenco Marques.

His firm, Hayden says, is making progress in spite of opposition, and now employs 2,000 whites and some natives. The company's wired theatres now are equipped with De Forest apparatus. He says that the additional film import duty, recently imposed, handicaps British films.

He is returning to South Africa about the first of the year to press suit for libel brought by Kinemas directors against the magazine, "The Sjambok," which has been campaigning against the circuit, it is charged. It is allegedly sponsored by the Schlesinger interests.

Warner Silver Jubilee To Be Observed in Aug.

Their twenty-fifth anniversary in the film industry is to be celebrated in August by Warners as Warner Bros. Silver Jubilee Month. During the celebration, Warners and First National will release six pictures each. The fourth birthday of talking pictures' debut also occurs during the month, Aug. 6.

Warners Making Discs For Outside Companies

Through its Brunswick division, Warners now is doing recording for outside companies. Three pictures on the Talking Picture Epics program have been synchronized. They are "At the Bottom of the World," "Wild Men of Kalihari" and "Bird Islands of Peru."

M.R.T.C. in Hollywood

"Chick" Lewis, editor of the Managers' Round Table Club, has reached Hollywood on his jaunt of the United States. Beginning this week, what he sees and hears out where they make 'em will appear in the Club pages under the title, "An Exhibitor in Hollywood."

Sydney Abel Sets Sales Record on RCA Reproducer

Sydney E. Abel, general sales manager of RCA Photophone, can take plenty of bows on the record he has established since taking over the reins in handling company sales. In the last six months, the company has installed nearly twice as many sound equipments as had been installed in the previous six months.

Sydney E. Abel

The first installation was made by the company Oct. 1, 1928, and up to Jan. 1, 1930, the aggregate number was 410. By June 30 of this year, Abel increased the number to 1,635. Of the number, 1,185 are in the United States and 450 in foreign countries.

RCA Photophone began selling its new Type G equipment in February of this year and the bulk of its sales have been made since that time.

Infantile Paralysis Bans Unaccompanied Children

Los Angeles—On account of the large number of infantile paralysis cases existent in the city and county, children unaccompanied by adults will be refused admittance to Los Angeles theatres.

This decision was reached last week at a conference between representatives of the circuits and independent exhibitors with Dr. George Parrish, city health officer. Dr. Parrish pointed out the seriousness of the situation if the spread of the disease should reach epidemic proportions, and declared it was not the intention of the authorities to close theatres, but he was positive the theatre men would co-operate to the fullest extent.

After the theatre representatives asked Dr. Parrish for his suggestions whereby the theatres could assist in controlling the present situation, it was agreed unanimously that children would not be admitted to theatres without an adult, and under no circumstances will children be allowed to collect in groups or gather together in the front rows.

After the conference with Dr. Parrish all local theatres cancelled Saturday junior matinees until conditions return to normal. About 100 Los Angeles theatres have built up the junior matinees to capacity every week.

Opposish Forced Double Features, Dembow Asserts

Publix returned to double-featuring in New England only in self-defense, according to Sam Dembow, circuit vice-president. The circuit was forced to double-featuring due to this form of competition by its opposition, he says. Subsequently, according to Dembow, the circuit endeavored to get away from the practice, and for a year tried to run with single features. Competition made this course unwise, he said, and the chain returned to double-featuring.

New England is the only territory where Paramount permits its pictures to be double-featured, according to Sidney R. Kent.

Blues Win Hot Go In Florida Town

Tallahassee, Fla.—Advocates of "blue" Sundays won one of the hottest elections ever staged in this city. The count showed there were 326 voters here who wanted motion pictures on the Sabbath between the hours of 1 and 7 P. M., but there were 364 voters who did not want the Sunday shows, and so there will be no shows to disturb the peaceful rest of this little city in the hills of North Florida.

In the past year many of the smaller cities of this State have voted on the Sunday shows and in all but two of these elections the liberals have won, with the result that Florida cities generally have their Sunday amusement and are proud of it.

"Bring Back Kids" Drive Is Under Way by R-K-O

Radio-Keith-Orpheum is making a concerted drive for kid patronage and played to more than 500,000 the week ending July 11, the company says. Joseph Plunkett, general manager, ordered the "bring back the kids" campaign. Bam Katz of Publix also has ordered a similar drive.

Fox, Paramount, R-K-O Building at Denver

Denver—Keen competition in this territory is to be heightened by three new theatres built respectively by Fox West Coast, Paramount and R-K-O. Fox West Coast now is putting finishing touches to the Queen, and plans construction of a number of houses throughout the Rocky Mountain region to strengthen its position. Paramount, meanwhile, plans to entrench itself here through the new Paramount, slated to open Aug. 22. R-K-O is planning a $1,000,000 house to replace the present Orpheum.

Two-a-Day House for L. A.

Los Angeles—With every seat a loge and a two-a-day policy, Fox West Coast will build a 900-seat house at Vermont and Franklin Aves.

Nathanson Chain Plans Seen Dropped as Fox Sells Product to Famous Canadian

Hollywood has called to Zaro Agha, the Turk who says he is 156 years old. Somebody out there must have heard that Zaro has had eleven wives!—N. Y. Evening Journal.

Laemmle Flays "Experts"; Off Costume Films

Carl Laemmle, Sr., is through with costume pictures, not to mention the "experts" whose advice hasn't been 100 per cent infallible in the past. Furthermore, hereafter he is going to hearken to his public for guidance in making pictures, and he doesn't give a hang if he doesn't make a nickel out of "All Quiet on the Western Front." If it insures peace to the world he's satisfied.

That is the gist of a radio talk made Wednesday night by Laemmle from Hollywood over a nation-wide hook-up and reaching New York via WABC. The producer slammed the "experts" vigorously, but did not hint at their identity, and interspersed his remarks with strong plugs for "All Quiet." After admitting that any one who could gauge the public taste in pictures accurately would "give Rockefeller and Ford a run for their money," he added:

"The American public is the most restless in the world and we can't figure out what they want unless they tell us. They always want a change, something new, and that is why production is the greatest gamble in the world. The public is a better judge than the experts. The experts warned me not to film 'All Quiet on the Western Front.' They said it was too grim. But thousands of people wrote to me, asking me to make it, and now they've got the greatest picture they've seen in years.

"The people don't want stories of the olden times. They want to see heroes and heroines who can still be alive and kicking. They want new and modern stories. So I want every one to write to me and tell me what they want. The public is my guiding star.

"If I fail to make a dollar on 'All Quiet on the Western Front' I shall be satisfied if it contributes to everlasting world peace."

Incidentally, 30 employes of the Universal home office were discharged this week. The lay-off was attributed to a summer retrenchment policy and affected various departments, including advertising and publicity.

Anna Patterson Operated On

Atlanta—Anna Aiken Patterson, former publisher and editor of the Weekly Film Review and well known personally in this territory, is at St. Joseph's Infirmary following an appendicitis operation. Her condition is reported to be favorable.

Circuit Head Who Quit in Huff Reported To Have Had Franchise Pledged

Toronto—Closing of the blanket booking deal between Fox and Famous Players- Canadian Corp. is taken here to mean that an arrangement has been reached with N. L. Nathanson which probably calls for abandonment of his plans to build a rival circuit in the Dominion.

James R. Grainger

The former managing director of Famous, who resigned when his proposal to sell the Canadian chain to Gaumont British was blocked by Adolph Zukor and I. W. Killam, had, it is said, a tentative franchise arrangement with Fox for its product in event he went through with plans for the rival chain. The sale of the 1930-31 product to Paramount by James R. Grainger, it is believed, means that "peace" has been sealed between Nathanson and Famous Players.

Building Campaign Progresses

Meanwhile, Famous is going ahead with expansion plans, held up pending sale of the circuit to Paramount. New projects are:

A $1,000,000 theatre and office building at Halifax, the theatre to seat 2,700, or the largest in Canada east of Montreal; a theatre seating 1,500 and office building at Surdbury, Ont.; New Capitol, Galt, Ont., which will seat 1,130; an atmosphere house at Port Hope, Ont., to replace the old Royal Opera House, seating 600 and costing $100,000.

Considerable construction work also is under way. The Strand, Kingston, Ont., has been remodelled and reopened with talkers under the name of the Tivoli, with Ernie Smithies as manager. He also operates the Capitol in Kingston. A new front and other improvements are being made at the Capitol, Winnipeg. Extensive alterations are also planned for the Capitol, Montreal.

Surrenders to Sound

East St. Louis—"I will never put in sound equipment," Fred Ditzenberg of the St. Clair was quoted on more than one occasion. But, like all wise men, Fred has changed his mind. He is installing the latest Hollywood, Jr., model of De Forest equipment to reproduce from film only. Four out of the six independent exhibitors of East St. Louis have now installed De Forest equipment.

But the Odds?

Washington—Utopia for exhibitors at last: Lloyds, which insures anything from twins to rain, is insuring exhibitors against breakdown of talking pictures.

Plenty of Dough Flows Into B. & K. Chicago Houses

Chicago—A week of exceptional prosperity appears to be in order for the Publix-B. & K. Loop houses if three days of initial business can be considered a criterion. Standouts at four houses are establishing records.

Will Rogers in "So This Is London" (Fox), playing the Chicago theatre, appears to be as great a draw on celluloid as in the flesh. The theatre grossed $26,200 in the first three days of its run, as compared with a $9,000 a day average when Rogers appeared on the stage at the same theatre two weeks ago.

The Oriental, one of the local worries of Publix, had the sidewalks completely blocked with standouts most of today. "Our Blushing Brides" (M-G-M) was the feature. The gross for the three days was approximately $24,000, a sensational pace for the house.

"The Big House" (M-G-M), also playing to holdout trade in its third week at McVickers, grossed approximately $21,000 in the first three days of its current theatre week. This is another sensational figure and threatens to displace the house record which the picture established in its second week, $51,000.

The fourth winner appears to be "Song o' My Heart" (Fox), in its second week at United Artists. The picture did splendidly in its first week and appears to be building. Holdout trade in less volume than at the other three houses has been the rule since the opening of the second week. The approximate three-day gross is $16,000, plenty big for this spot.

"With Byrd at the South Pole" (Para.) went into its fourth week at the Roosevelt on a steady basis. No holdouts here but important money for the spot, regardless.

Educational's New List Again Set by Loew's

Educational's short features, which for years have been a regular part of Loew's entertainment programs on the New York Circuit will again play this group of theatres in the season of 1930-31.

Announcement has just been made that the Loew Circuit has contracted for Educational's entire output for the coming season, including 64 two reel comedies and 50 one reel comedies and novelties.

Slams Talkers; Says Audiences Want Orchestras

Circleville, O.—Declaring that talking pictures are "all wrong" by reason of mechanical music, and that they are "headed for the rocks," because mechanical musical accompaniment has robbed them of their novelty, E. F. Nutter, manager of the Clifton theatre, has submitted a proposal to George Pope, business manager of the American Federation of Musicians, at Columbus, O., in substantiation of his contention.

"The public wants, and will have, real flesh and blood entertainment," is the gist of Nutter's claim. "They want to see the orchestra as it enters the pit, just as they used to do in the old days. They long for the thrill of the opening overture, the flourish of the baton, and all the other appeals which they have so long associated with living musicians who can be seen as well as heard, and who can interpret the theme of the picture in a human way, and without the many defects which exist under the present mechanical presentations."

Nutter's Big Idea

It is Nutter's idea to conduct a test performance by showing a world premiere of an unusual all-talking picture, the musical accompaniment for which will be furnished by a nationally outstanding organist, together with a 35-piece orchestra, each musician to be recruited from a key city, the entire group to be under direction of a competent conductor.

He would invite representatives from all trade and musical organizations, as well as members of the press, and thereby he hopes to definitely settle the question.

"Poor recording of even the best voices, as well as a large percentage of so-called stars who have exceptionally poor voices to begin with, are bad enough," Nutter declares, "but add to this the method of presenting a picture, as now practiced, and the result is more than the public will stand."

Harry Long Appointed Loew District Manager

Baltimore—Harry Long has been appointed district manager of the newly-formed territory for Loew's embracing the territory between Pittsburgh and Newark and will have his office in Baltimore. He is at present pinch-hitting for Howard Price Kingsmore, Loew's city manager here while the latter is vacationing in Canadian cities.

"Dawn Patrol" Soars

Opening with two night performances on Wednesday, July 9, "The Dawn Patrol" at the Winter Garden rolled up a gross of $51,263 in the 65 performances ending 2:30 A.M. on Thursday, July 16.

The business is heavy and outstrips records set for that theatre by "The Singing Fool." Price scale is 35 cents to 1 o'clock, 65 cents to 6 o'clock and $1 thereafter. The week-end scale is slightly higher.

Over at First National, the execs are hugging each other.

"Rain or Shine"

A lot of it funny, a lot of it draggy—the picture seemed to run and run—"Rain or Shine," one of Columbia's babies for next season, is very much O.K. for picture theatres.

The laughs are all in the belly and never above the chin and are traceable in practically every instance to Joe Cook, who takes his talker bow in this. He's clever as a low comedian, no denying it.

The picture shows nice direction by Frank Capra and excellent circus atmosphere but needs trimming to make it hold better together. KANN

Gaynor Squabble Still On; Plum Role for Maureen

Hollywood—Winnie Sheehan is giving Janet Gaynor plenty of time to cool her heels in his outer office. Eventually, the studio slant is that the Gaynor-Fox rift will be patched up with the player resuming work before the "mike."

In the meantime, Buddy De Sylva, who personally selected Miss Gaynor for the feminine lead in "Sunnyside Up," has made another choice for the next De Sylva, Brown and Henderson vehicle, "Just Imagine." Maureen O'Sullivan, young Irish player, will play the part which, if circumstances had been different, probably would have gone to Miss Gaynor.

Bryson Urges Hays To Study British Problems

London—Will H. Hays was urged to visit London by James V. Bryson, Universal's managing director here, who flew to Paris to extend his invitation to the producer-distributor association head. Many urgent problems should be studied here at first hand by Hays, Bryson believes.

Momand Maps Expansion

Shawnee, Okla.—Building and acquisition of theatres in a number of spots throughout the state are planned by A. B. Momand of Momand Theatres, starting at an early date.

Warner Due in August

Geneva—Harry M. Warner is here, following termination of the international sound patent conference in Paris. He sails for New York in early August, according to present plans.

Two More—and Doug Quits?

Only two more pictures, then curtains for Douglas Fairbanks, the actor, in favor of Douglas Fairbanks, producer, says "Talking Screen."

Fox Outing Saturday

Foxfilm Athletic Club holds its annual outing at Indian Point Saturday. Alan Freedman is chairman of the outing committee.

Paramount Adds to H.O. Space

Paramount Publix has rented the 12th and 13th floors in the new "New York Herald Tribune" building, New York.

Producers Guess Wrong; Castoffs Rise to Stardom

Hollywood—The aura of infallibility with which many producers surround themselves has been punctured. Quick to take the credit for the discovery of a new star, they are silent as the tomb when a player they have discarded hooks up with another outfit and rises to fame. Harrison Carroll, writing in the Los Angeles Herald, has compiled statistics about the fate of castoffs. Says he:

A director friend of mine was lamenting that a promising young actor was being released by his studio. "Somebody else will nab him," he said, "and then there'll be an awful cry raised over here."

This is exactly what has happened in dozens of cases in Hollywood. George Bancroft, for instance, was the heavy in Tom Mix's old westerns. Fox didn't see his possibilities as a new, virile type of hero, and now Paramount is reaping the rewards of its superior sagacity.

On the other hand, when the talkies came in Paramount didn't even take the trouble to give Bebe Daniels a voice test. They were paying her a big salary, and figured she was through, so they let her go. Now she is R-K-O's biggest star.

Here are some others: Charles Farrell was under six months' contract at Warner Brothers at $100 a week, and they let him go. Both Lewis Ayers, hero of "All Quiet on the Western Front," and Jeanette Loff were at Pathe, but Universal first saw their value. Pathe, in turn, signed Helen Twelvetrees after Fox released her, and now she is on her way towards becoming an important star. Paramount had El Brendel under contract, and let him slip between their fingers. Nancy Carroll and Stuart Erwin dubbed around at Fox and are big hits at Paramount. Both Jack Oakie and Joe E. Brown were turned down by Fox when Ted McNamara died, and a partner was being sought for Sammy Cohen. Who remembers Sammy now?

It's a nerve-frazzling game at which the best guesser wins. And yet some people wonder why producers lose their tempers.

Linet Out; Grimm In

Hank Linet this week steps out of Columbia where he has been handling trade paper advertising to make way for Ben H. Grimm, who vacates a post in the advertising department at Universal to make the switch. C. F. Chandler, in charge of advertising and publicity for Universal Talking Newsreel, takes over Grimm's duties under supervision of Milton Silver, director of advertising for Universal.

A Honey

Ann Harding in "Holiday" promises to be one of the big hits of the summer, judging by the sensational way it started its run at the Rivoli, New York, and the manner in which it is being snapped up by big long run houses throughout the country.

The picture is a finely-done comedy drama, with plenty of kick, and boasting an exceptional cast, headed by the capable Miss Harding. It should go a long way in building prestige for Pathe this season. Pathe's new production regime, headed by E. B. Derr, is showing results. HYNES

Will Stave Off Wide Film Until The Trade Is Ready For It, Says Clarke

Wisconsin Zoning

Milwaukee—Exhibitors and exchangemen meet here Friday to put their final stamp of approval, or disapproval, whichever the case may be, upon the zoning code for Milwaukee and the state which is now being drawn up by a selected committee of exhibitors and exchangemen.

Name Committee In Pacific N. W. To Study Zoning

Seattle—As a preliminary move in the settlement of the rezoning problem in the Pacific Northwest territory, a committee of 10 exhibitors from the local district has been appointed to study the matter in detail and report in two weeks to the Allied Amusements of the Northwest, prior to working out a new zoning plan with a committee from the local Film Board of Trade. The appointment was made by Leroy V. Johnson, president of the Allied Amusements organization, and the committee includes both chain and independent operators from large and small towns.

Committee members are: Earl S. Crabb, manager of the Washington division for Fox West Coast; A. W. Baker, manager of the Paramount here; A. M. Dunlap, manager of Universal suburban chain theatres in this territory; John Danz, president of Sterling independent chain theatres of Seattle; Louis Perunko and Dominic Constanti, exhibitors of Tacoma; Frank Graham of Auburn; E. G. Abbott of Sedro-Woolley; W. A. Brooks of Spokane, and Benjamin Fey of Renton. Ex officio members of the committee are James M. Hone, executive secretary of the Allied Amusements, and President Johnson.

Fox West Coast Berth Slated for Harry Marx

Harry Marx will join Fox West Coast Theatres after severing connection Sept. 1 as head of the personnel department of Fox Theatres, it is understood. Marx, who was brought into the Fox organization to train theatre personnel under a home office school plan, resigned when General Manager Harry Arthur instituted the policy of having personnel trained by the individual manager. Marx formerly was director of theatre management for Publix.

Laemmle Biog. at Laupheim

London — John Drinkwater and Dave Bader are off for Laupheim to visit the scene of Carl Laemmle's boyhood and secure background material for the biography of the Universal chief which Drinkwater is to write.

This May Be in "Year or So," Utilities—Film Executive Declares

Chicago—Wide film may be introduced for practical purpose in the industry within the next year or so, depending entirely upon the condition of the industry, but nothing will be accepted which is premature, in the opinion of Harley L. Clarke, head of General Theatres Equipment, Fox and allied companies. His views on this and other subjects were expressed upon his trip to London, from where he returned last Monday. Television, Clarke believes, may never be popular on the screen, but he will welcome it as an asset to the film business.

"I am just a business man and I am prepared to allow those men who understand the making of successful films to go on making them," he asserted.

The Fox-Paramount arrangement is a ten-year reciprocal booking deal, according to Clarke. He told London interviewers that Fox owns only a one-half interest in the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, which owns Gaumont British. Fox paid Electrical Research $15,000,000 to get out of its debt, Clarke said.

"I have not seen anything which comes anywhere near being stereoscopic," Clarke declared abroad. "Wide film looks stereoscopic to the lay eye, but only because of its panoramic effect."

Named Arbitration Director

Harley L. Clarke, a member of the national panel of arbitrators, has been made a member of the board of directors of the American Arbitration Ass'n. Praise for his ability and his work in behalf of arbitration was expressed by Lucien R. Eastman in announcing the election.

That's Gambling

Paris — Although she dropped what is described as a large sum in one sitting at Le Touquet Casino, Jenny Dolly, stage and screen player, hardly is in the red on the game, as she won 6,000,000 francs (about $180,000) in a recent sitting.

Daylight Time In Milwaukee A Merry Mess

Milwaukee—Exhibitors here have run into a snag as the result of the popular acceptance of daylight savings time by the general public. Neighborhood houses opening at 6:30 Standard time or 7:30 daylight saving time have been losing business.

Persons reach the theatres before 7 in the evening and find the houses closed. Many have grown tired of waiting and as a result have left for some other kind of recreation. Operation on standard time also has a tendency to throw a second show to a late hour for those who go to bed by daylight saving time.

In order to cope with this problem, operators have decided to open their houses an hour or half-hour earlier, but will continue to operate on standard time. This decision was reached at a meeting of the Milwaukee Theatre Owners' Ass'n. It was generally accepted that individual owners will determine their own policies, and most of them voiced the opinion that they would open at an earlier hour.

6,160 Theatres Equipped With "Erpi" Reproducers

Western Electric sound reproducers are now installed in 6,160 theatres throughout the world. Of this total, 4,211 are in the United States and 1,949 abroad. The county of London has 122, more than any other county in England. Austria has 22, with 19 in Vienna. Of the 13 in Roumania, Bucharest has eight.

Latest of the ocean greyhounds to install sound is the Aquitania, which is now equipped with two portable W. E. units.

Paramount Rentals Show Boost Over Last Year

Film rentals received by Paramount for the quarter ended June 28 were seven per cent ahead of the same quarter last year, it is stated. Foreign rentals for April and May were 21 per cent ahead of the same months last year. For the first two weeks of July, U. S. rentals were 16 per cent ahead of the same period of 1929.

Big Four Smoke Pipe of Peace; Swap Theatres

abandonment of a proposed Paramount theatre at Milwaukee and the slowing up of Paramount activity in Pennsylvania and Ohio, where Warners are especially active. Paramount's reported plan for a Washington house also may be dropped, it is said.

3-Way Deal in Wisconsin

Fox and Warners may make a deal covering the Warner Broadway houses, and possibly pool their upstate New York theatres, it is declared.

Proposed swapping of theatres in Wisconsin between Warners and Fox probably will include R-K-O, the third of the big triumvirate in that state, with the report that the latter circuit will take over Fox's Strand in Madison, giving R-K-O a clean sweep in that city with four houses.

In exchange for the Strand, it has been rumored that Fox will take over R-K-O's Palace-Orpheum in Milwaukee and furnish the circuit's Riverside theatre with its product. It also will continue to furnish the Strand in Madison with the Fox product and protect R-K-O's interests in the state.

R-K-O operates the Orpheum, Capitol and Garrick in Madison, while Warners do not control a theatre in that city. Actual transfer of houses has been pending for several months, it is reported, although authorities in Madison and Milwaukee have denied the reports.

If this deal is consummated it will give Fox two of the largest downtown theatres in Milwaukee. The Wisconsin, present local Fox key house, is the largest and the Palace ranks well up in seating capacity there. The securing of the Palace will compensate for the closing of Fox's Merrill, across the street from the site of Warners' new house. Fox has lost the lease on the Merrill and the theatre will be closed some time next month.

The deal will leave R-K-O with only one house in Milwaukee, the Riverside, which has been playing a combination photoplay and vaudeville program. The theatre has been having trouble with the local unions and has threatened to discontinue vaudeville. With the Fox product assured for this house, it is possible that this will be done.

Byrd Film Pulled Middle Of Second Week in Mpls

Minneapolis—Declared lack of feminine appeal caused Publix to pull "With Byrd at the South Pole" in the middle of its second week at the Century. With heavy billing, the first week was fairly good, but even advertising is said to have failed to bolster it up in the second week.

To Reunite Trio

Hollywood—M-G-M is reuniting Marie Dressler and Polly Moran with their director, "Chuck" Reisner, in "Reducing." The trio scored with "Caught Short."

All Indigo

Steubenville, O.—Discriminatory campaign against Sunday picture shows, launched by Miss Amanda Strayer, crusading city solicitor, and backed by the W.C.T.U. and several churches, proved a boomerang when Sheriff William Yost undertook enforcement of all "blue" laws. As a result, the entire county was amazed by a Sabbath quiet, with practically all activity, save eating, sleeping and going to church, stopped by the sheriff. Miss Strayer has admitted that her only objective was a ban on Sunday pictures.

Flint Courtroom Murder Echo of Julian Scandal

Los Angeles—Echoes of the Julian oil scandal, which involved a number of important figures in the film world, resounded in a court room here when Motley H. Flint, veteran financier, was shot dead as he finished testifying in suit of David O. Selznick to recover $250,000 from the Security First National Bank.

Motley H. Flint

Frank Keaton, 56, was the slayer and gave as his reason his belief that Flint was responsible for loss of his life savings in Julian stock. Flint was one of 16 men acquitted on a charge of conspiracy to commit usury in the Julian case. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis J. Selznick and Myron Selznick were spectators at the trial, which resulted in Flint's death.

Flint, one of the most influential men in southern California, had been banker and financial advisor to a number of picture firms. He was particularly active in the old Selznick company, and is regarded as practically having saved Warners when that firm was in financial difficulties before the successful advent of Vitaphone.

Exhibitors Get Break In Ont. Kid Law Change

Toronto—Revision of the law governing child attendance at theatres now permits unaccompanied children to attend picture shows between the hours of 9 A. M. and 6 P. M. on Saturdays, school and statutory holidays, where theatres provide a supervising matron. The new arrangement is being advertised throughout the province by a special trailer.

Cohen May Contruct Theatre in Stamford

Stamford, Conn.—Sydney S. Cohen has leased to the Stamford Department Store, Inc., for a term of 20 years, the new store he is building at Atlantic and Bell Sts. Sketches have been drawn for the erection of a theatre on the rear of the plot.

Depkin Switches Warner Forces In Wisconsin

Milwaukee—Personnel line-up for Warner theatres in Wisconsin has been announced by Bernard Depkin, Jr., general manager. Jack Keegan has been named assistant to Depkin and Dave Flam holds the position of publicity director for the circuit. Flam was formerly with Fox.

Eugene Arnstein, formerly assistant to Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Milwaukee Theatre Circuit, Inc., and Warner representative in the zoning confab here, is booker of the circuit. Ben Steerman has been named home office contact man, and Mat Asenbauer, purchasing agent.

Managers of the old Milwaukee Theatre Circuit houses remain practically the same, with the exception of Frank Cook, Arthur Wertheimer, Reinhold Wallach and Otto Lang, each of whom has been replaced. Cook has been succeeded by Jack Pfeiffer at the Lake, Wertheimer by Lucien Hull at the State, Wallach by Frank Dau at the Downer, and Otto Lang by Robert Gross at the Riviera.

Gross was formerly manager of the circuit's Juneau and has been succeeded there by Walter Johnson. E. W. Van Norman, pioneer local exhibitor, remains as manager of the Venetian and Edmund Einstein remains in charge of the Kosciuszko. All theatres are local neighborhood houses.

In the State, F. Westphal has succeeded Frank Ponton, resigned, as manager of the Kenosha at Kenosha, Owen McKivitt remains at the Venetian in Racine and R. G. Wood at the Sheboygan in Sheboygan. At Appleton, Harold Janecky has succeeded Jack LeVois as manager of the Appleton. LeVois, it is understood, will continue to be connected with the Warner circuit.

Short Hours as Aid To Unemployed Are Urged

Toronto—Labor men are complaining that employes at some theatres are required to work long hours and claim that the unemployment situation could be relieved somewhat if the hours of theatre attendants were regulated. It is asserted that some employes are called upon to work mornings as well as during matinee and night shows and sometimes until midnight.

Paramount Buys Site For New Ohio Theatre

Fremont, O.—Paramount Publix, which a few weeks ago acquired a parcel of real estate at a cost of $18,000, has now bought three adjoining parcels, at a reported price of $53,335. Work on the new house is expected to start within three weeks.

Musicians Victorious In 3-Year 'Frisco Fight

San Francisco—After a three-year battle, musicians have won out, and once more an orchestra is employed at the Embassy. The theatre discarded musicians in favor of reproducing equipment, precipitating a court fight on the issue.

International Patent War Ends; U. S. Talkers to Enter Germany via Royalties

Omaha Council Cuts Miniature Golf Hours

Omaha—Miniature golf courses here will close at midnight, the city council ruled in an ordinance backed by irate citizens who have been losing sleep because of the little links. Special permission to remain open until 1 A. M. can be secured daily from the welfare board, however. Most of the courses are taking advantage of the late closing hour.

Anderson to Market New Head for Sound-on-Film

Anderson Electric Sound Research Laboratories declares it is ready to market a sound-on-film unit attachable to any standard make projector. Combined with the mechanism is the new Arcturus photolytic cell, manufactured by the Arcturus Radio Tube Company, for which is claimed improvements in performance over the photo-electric cell.

The new unit consists of two sound-on-film heads, the photolytic cells and pre-amplification and exciter lamps. The cell itself may be applied to any other type of sound-on-film head, it is asserted, and will take one hour to install.

Agreement Reached After Long Conference; Otterson Okays Outcome of Confab

Paris—With the patent skirmish between American and German representatives of sound companies in their respective countries settled on condition that Germany's new "kontingent" regulations permit importation of talkers, the muddled Teutonic situation, which has kept all American companies but Warners out of that market, has been cleared away.

The patent agreement provides for an unannounced allocation of European territories for the sale of apparatus reproducers, complete interchangeability of both American and German sound devices and an arrangement to cover royalties under licenses for recording. The terms are being kept secret.

The arrangement, which has yet to be ratified, will provide that all actions by Western Electric against Klangfilm-Tobis and vice versa will be dropped while American talkers may enter Germany by payment of a small royalty to the German group.

230 Under "Kontingent"

The new "kontingent" regulations will cover the period from July 1, 1930, to June 30, 1931, and become effective on Jan. 1. They provide for 210 pictures to be admitted into Germany for censorship. Ninety will cover sound pictures. Of this number, 40 will be allocated to renters on the basis of their distribution of both silent and sound pictures over the last two years. Twenty will go to those who have exported German pictures during the current year and 30 will be held in reserve to be allocated by the German Government as it sees fit. One hundred and twenty will cover silents on this basis:

Eighty to renters on the basis of their distribution of German sound or silents in the last years. Forty to those companies which exported German pictures during the current year. In addition, 20 permits will be held by the German officials for allocation as they see fit, thereby bringing the total number of permits to 230.

Of this total number, one permit will be construed to cover five shorts of 200 meters (approximately 900 feet each or less) or three shorts of 500 meters (1,500 feet each or less). Newsreels will enter Germany free and educationals on one foreign-for-two German basis.

All pictures must be trade shown before sale to exhibitors.

Hays' Return Indefinite

Will H. Hays is in Berlin, his return to New York being indefinite at the minute. John E. Otterson, president of "Erpi," who is now in London, states he is satisfied with the outcome of the patent situation.

The memorandum of the agreement will be discussed at another meeting to be held in Paris over the week-end.

Pantages for criminal assault on a girl, was dismissed this week also.

Conway Tearle was the central figure in another case. His former wife, Mrs. Josephine Park Tearle, of New York, got a court attachment for his two cars, alleging he was $9,932 in arrears in back alimony. Adele Rowland, his present spouse, thereupon filed a claim that the cars belonged to her.

Now for some optimistic news:

Lita Chaplin, former wife of Charles Chaplin, avers that she is going to marry Roy D'Arcy and settle down in New York.

And Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks again issue a denial that a divorce is contemplated at Pickfair. "It's an annual lie," he said.

New Film Building May Be Completed

Chicago—The feasibility of completing erection of the Film Exchange building at 13th St. and Wabash Ave. is being considered by the owner of the property, it was learned this week. The Industrial Locating Co. of this city has been asked by the owner to make a survey of prospective tenants and will resume construction work on the site if the results of this survey warrant, it was said.

Construction work on the building was halted six weeks ago with only the first floor foundations completed when financing of the project was abandoned by its backers.

Canadian Western Meet Will Be Held at Banff

Toronto—Western managers of Famous Players—Canadian Corp., will hold their annual meeting Aug. 5 at Banff. J. J. Fitzgibbons, brought here from Boston as director of theatre operations under the new ownership, will attend together with Canadian officers. They will go to Banff following the eastern meeting here Aug. 1. "Publix Opinion," house organ of the circuit, now is being mailed to all managers of the Canadian chain.

Start Midnight Shows In Cincy R-K-O Houses

Cincinnati—Believing that the general public is more "movie-minded" late Saturday night than possibly any other time, John L. McCurdy, divisional manager of R-K-O, has inaugurated midnight shows at the Lyric, starting at 11:30 each Saturday. If the experiment proves a success, similar performances will probably be given at the other R-K-O houses here.

Ask "Blue" Law Repeal

Trenton—Repeal of New Jersey's 1782 "blue" laws was asked in a resolution adopted without debate at the state session here of the Seventh Day Adventists.

An English Tiff

London—A bit of "ragging" was indulged in by Ernest W. Fredman, publisher of "The Daily Film Renter," when his contemporary, "Today's Cinema," blundered in reporting and played up the arrival of A. P. Giannini, stating that it was Dr. A. H. Giannini, who engineered a number of important film deals, including the Fox-Loew purchase. The banker, it was added, was holder of the Sam H. Harris Trophy, presented by the editor of "Cinema." The "scoop" was ridiculed by Fredman, observing:

"It's a wise paper that knows it's own cup."

Hill Named to Manage Warner Midwest Chain

Oklahoma City — Leo J. Hill, former manager of Skouras' Ambassador, St. Louis, is general manager of the chain of six Midwest Enterprises Theatres here, acquired by Warners. Announcement of the deal was made exclusively by Motion Picture News when it stated a few weeks ago that all negotiations had been set.

Tom Boland, operating head of the chain, confirmed from New York that the transaction had been closed. Theatres included are the Palace, Orpheum, Empress, Liberty, Folly and the new Midwest, now nearing completion.

All of the existing houses are to be remodeled, with first runs slated for the Midwest, Orpheum, Liberty and Empress.

Hill came here with Charles Skouras and Harry Niemyer, Jr., of St. Louis. The latter is to have charge of advertising and publicity for the Midwest chain, which marks the longest single jump made by Warners in its plan to consolidate its western and eastern holdings.

Talking Picture World War Seen Raging

about that. And in the new struggle for talking picture supremacy, however intricate the problem, Hollywood will count heavily; if highly successful, Hollywood will prove, as never before, a potent factor in shaping civilization.

"A dream it may be, but perhaps not too ethereal, is the thought that Aryan civilization, ever westward in course and today at its final barrier, the Pacific coast of America, is to flower here in its greatest era of intellectual development and art expression."

Wins Novel Prize Again

Charles Reed Jones, now handling advertising and publicity for Mascot Pictures, has been awarded the E. P. Dutton & Co. mystery novel prize for July. The winning novel is "The Torch Defender." His "The King Murder" was a similar Dutton prize winner about a year ago.

Publix Calm as Warners Launch Chicago Invasion

home office executives on those in charge of local expansion are that the acquisition be commercially sound and that manpower capable of operating the new property successfully be available at the time of its acquisition.

In this connection, it was said that an inviolable policy of the circuit has been its refusal to build or buy in an overseated district. In substantiation of this statement it was pointed out that both the Gateway and the Western and Devon locations are in virgin territory and that the proposed Sixty-Third st. theatre is in a populous neighborhood in which only obsolete theatres are now located.

Asked if Publix was in a position to acquire desirable theatres at the moment they were available, a spokesman said: "We are the only circuit in the business in a liquid condition."

He indicated that any Chicago theatre that has been acquired by any other circuit in the past several weeks might also have been available to Publix had it considered the addition desirable at any time in the past.

Warners Floating New Securities for Houses

Financing of Warners' acquisition of about 125 theatres, as well as others to be secured, is to be provided through issuance of $750,000 additional optional six per cent convertible debentures due in 1939 and 156,710 additional common shares. Application has been made to list these securities on the New York Stock Exchange.

Chains acquired are the Federal Theatres Co., operating 10 theatres in Chicago; the Appel Amusement Co. and in turn the Appel Theatre Circuit, operating jointly 10 theatres in central Pennsylvania, and the Crescent Theatre Circuit. Forty-four theatres and four sites in the Crescent circuit will be acquired outright, 19 theatres and two sites will be owned in fee and 26 theatres and one site will be held under lease. The Crescent company operates in Kentucky, Alabama and Tennessee.

The Heins Theatre Circuit, with four theatres in Virginia; the Burroughs & Boas Theatre Circuit, with seven theatres in Massachusetts; the Mid-West Theatre Circuit, with seven theatres in Oklahoma City, and other theatres in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Wisconsin and California were also acquired, as was the Harris circuit of 27 Pennsylvania houses.

Warners is reported dickering or to have closed for the W. C. Hunt houses at Wildwood and other New Jersey beach resorts, for John Snyder's three houses at Pottstown, Pa., houses at Salem and Pitman, N. J., and the Tower, West Philadelphia. The Hawthorne, Newark, was bought for $250,000.

Excess of population gains over losses in 5,003 country towns, as shown by the 1930 census—1,861,121.

Urban Trend Indicated at Start Offset; 3,395 Small Towns Show Increase

Country towns are gaining in population, despite popular belief, an analysis of 1930 census returns shows, according to the American Press Ass'n., which has prepared a chart by states to back up its contention.

First census returns had shown a definite urban trend, and the impression was gained that country towns as a whole were losing population.

In its effort to obtain the truth of the matter, the American Press Ass'n. analyzed the census figures of the first 5,003 towns reporting, which showed that country towns, as a whole, are gaining in population, the association declares.

The gain for 3,395 of the 5,003 towns is 2,145,076, according to the analysis, while the loss of the other 1,608 towns is only 283,955. The net gain for the 5,003 towns, therefore, is 1,861,121, it is pointed out.

The analysis included country towns ranging from less than 1,000 to 5,000 population inclusive.

101,000 Tickets Given Away by Seattle House

Seattle—The greatest distribution of "ducats," 101,000, ever attempted in this city, was made this week by the New Orpheum in an effort to bolster summer business.

The distribution was made via the "Seattle Buyers' Guide," a local weekly newspaper of the "shopping news" style distributed free to the 101,000 home-owners and apartment residents of this city.

Each copy of the newspaper, left on every city doorstep, contained a fancy two-color coupon entitling the holder to one free admission to the New Orpheum when accompanied by one paid admission.

There were no strings to the offer. Tickets were good at any performance, matinee or evening, and apparently had no time limit.

Patrons of B. & K. Loop Houses Get Gratis Parking

Chicago—Publix-B. & K. this week inaugurated a free auto parking plan for all patrons of the circuit's Loop houses. The motoring movie fans may leave their cars at the North Loop Motoramp any time between 11 A. M. and midnight; bring their parking check to the theatre and have it stamped at the box-office and claim their car later without charge. The motoramp is convenient to four of the circuit's Loop houses, but is five blocks removed from McVickers theatre.

The Loop parking problem is either a troublesome or an expensive one to theatre patrons, and this move, offering the solution it does, is considered to be in the nature of a coup on the part of Publix-B. & K.

Clara Bow's Navy Film Dies at L. A., "Angels" in Lead

Los Angeles—It may be the publicity she's been receiving as the result of her "love" affair, or it may be any number of other things, but the nosedive taken by Clara Bow's "True to the Navy" in the brand new Hollywood Pantages is the news of last week so far as the local picture rialto is concerned. Miss Bow's new film pulled only $8,800 to the ticket window, vieing with "Bright Lights" at Warners' Downtown as the week's prize turkey.

"Hell's Angels" and "The Big House" continue to lead the procession among Hollywood and Los Angeles first runs, the two big money-getters running away from strong opposition in a week of hot weather, which sent many to beaches and mountains. Howard Hughes' air film, being presented by Sid Grauman at the Chinese in Hollywood, got first money with a take of $26,000 on its seventh week, holding up well from its sixth weeks' gross of $28,500.

M-G-M's "The Big House" dropped sharply from its second week's gross of $23,500, getting $15,900 on the week. At that, this was big intake for the Fox Criterion, getting the picture a rating of 159 per cent. The only other Los Angeles house to finish above par was the Carthay Circle with "So This Is London," the Will Rogers film copping a 105 per cent rating. Hollywood's only attraction other than "Hell's Angeles" to enjoy anything like a big week, was Warners' Hollywood, which got $16,000 for a rating of 114 per cent. "Oh! Sailor, Behave" was the picture, but a big share of the draw is credited to the stage shows.

Seattle—Addition of one more city in the Pacific Northwest to play the Fanchon & Marco stage "ideas" was announced here last week by local booking officials for the producing company. Effective this month, the Capitol Theatre in Yakima will show the revues for two days each week. Under the revised routing, now becoming effective, the acts will close in Seattle as usual on Wednesday night, lay off in this city on Thursday, and then proceed to Yakima for Saturday and Sunday performances. 'Rogue Song' Dives As 'Dawn Patrol' Clicks in N. Y.

Flop of "The Rogue Song" at the Roxy, where it is threatening to skid the house to a new low, and the big business being done by "The Dawn Patrol" at the Winter Garden where it replaced "Numbered Men" featured the week along Broadway. In spite of some good summer show weather, "The Rogue Song," playing pop prices after its $2 run at the Astor, could get only $61,000 on its first five days.

The other new entry on the street was "Anybody's War," which sliced two days off the fifth week's gross of the Byrd film, the two garnering $21,300 on the week. The Capitol is doing business with "Let Us Be Gay," after having a good week with Lon Chaney's "Unholy Three." Paramount has another western in "A Man from Wyoming," which doesn't seem to be getting the dough that Clara Bow drew last week.

"Holiday," last week's big hit, is continuing strong at the Rivoli. The Strand looks weak with "Sweet Mama," and the Globe appears so-so with "Lawful Larceny," after a good week with "Inside the Lines." "The Big House" seems to be hitting on a pretty even keel. "Swing High" on Wednesday bowed out of the Cohan after a fairly successful run of three weeks, with Pathe leasing the house. Last week's estimated takings:

"Big House" Good For $50,800 1st Week of Chi Run

Chicago—Cool, pleasant weather and a neat assortment of box-office pictures sent the Loop to one of its best business weeks of the summer. Grosses at most houses compare favorably with the banner weeks of last winter.

"The Big House" (M-G-M) set a new record, taking $50,800 (155%) in the last seven of its first ten days at McVickers. The management expects it to hold up for a total of three weeks, when it will be replaced (July 25) by "Journey's End" (Tiffany). The war picture had two weeks as a roadshow in the Loop during May, hence its McVickers' booking will constitute its first run at popular prices here. "Richest Man in the World" (M-G-M) was good for $16,700 (150%) in its second week at the Woods but was shunted out, regardless, by an earlier booking of "Lawful Larceny" (Radio). "All Quiet on the Western Front" (U.), playing its second week at the Garrick and sixth week in the Loop, was good at $11,900 (135%). This Shubert house hopes to hold the war picture until the legit season reopens, when it will return to stage policy.

The United Artists enjoyed unaccustomed prosperity with "Song o' My Heart" (Fox), which drew heavily on the city's large "harp" population to get $28,600 (130%) in its first week. "With Byrd at the South Pole" (Par.), which had begun to sag at the opening of its third week, was appreciably revived by Admiral Byrd's presence in the city. It picked up over the week-end and managed $26,000 (130%), which took it into its fourth week. Also on the right side were the Castle and Orpheum. The former got $6,100 (200%) in its first week with "Ingagi" (Indie), which has had nine Loop weeks at the Garrick. The Orpheum, with "Back Pay" (F.N.) in on a "pink" permit, hit its best figure in weeks—$6,500 (100%).

Others were slightly off, with the Oriental trailing with $28,700 (55%). "Sweethearts and Wives" (F.N.) was the feature.

"INGAGI" (Congo Pictures)
CASTLE—(300), 60c. 1st week here, 10th in Loop. Other attractions: newsreel. Gross: $6,100. Rating: 200%.

"THE UNHOLY THREE" (M-G-M)
CHICAGO—3,940), 35c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: stage show, comedy, newsreel, novelty short. "Chaney Talks"—but not money, here. Gross: $37,100. Rating: 82%.

"THE BIG HOUSE" (M-G-M)
McVICKERS—(2,284), 35c-85c, 2nd week. Other attractions: Comedy, newsreel, musical short. Scheduled to be replaced July 25 by "Journey's End" (Tiffany) for its first time here at pop prices. Gross: $50,800. Rating: 155%. All-time record.

"SWEETHEARTS AND WIVES" (F.N.)
ORIENTAL—(3,900), 35c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: Stage show, organ, comedy, newsreel, novelty short. House has tough time making the grade without a name draw when Loop competition amounts to anything. Gross: $28,700. Rating: 55%.

"BACK PAY" (F. N.)
ORPHEUM—(762), 25c-50; 7 days. House did its best business in months with this picture, in on a "pink." Gross: $6,500. Rating: 100%.

PALACE—(2,509), 35c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: 6 acts of vaudeville, headed by five Hunters (new world's endurance flying record holders). The Hunters may be eagles on the outside but they're only English sparrows in a theatre. Helped the draw very little. Gross: $22,300. Rating: 90%.

Heat a Break for Omaha; Lead for Dix with $18,125

Omaha—The hottest week that Omaha has experienced for 15 years was a break for the box-offices. With the mercury past 100 most of every day, the theatres were the only cool places in town. High mark for the week was 104 degrees.

Dix's following among the flappers gave the Orpheum a great week with "Shooting Straight" (Radio). Gross ran to $18,125, 125%. Peter Higgins, radio singer, and Davidson's Louisville Loons headed the R-K-O stage bill.

After a week at the Paramount, "With Byrd at the South Pole" (Par) continued to pull good business at the State for the first half. Got $2,415, or 115%. "In the Headlines" (W.B.), last half, brought $2,025, 90%.

Powell is always a cinch here. "Shadow of the Law" (Par) gave the World a 110% week, totalling $10,450. Paramount slipped to 90% with "Border Legion" (Par). Did $7,650.

Gish Film Nearly Doubles Gross at Valencia Balto.

Baltimore—The highest rating for the week was obtained by Loew's Valencia, where "One Romantic Night," starring Lillian Gish, was shown. This picture caught on well with the public and did approximately $6,500 for the week, making the rating for this house run up to 186%. It could be seen that patrons like Miss Gish in her new style of acting and they enjoyed the play as a whole, especially the work of Marie Dressler, who now has a big following here. It is a pity the picture was not offered in a larger house.

Considering the time of year, the large theatres had a very good week. Another picture which the public liked immensely was "Young Man of Manhattan," with the Capitol stage unit, "Hit Bits of 1930," which did $20,800, giving it a rating of 99%. This was at Loew's Century.

Then, at Loew's Stanley, "The Texan," with Gary Cooper, went over nicely with a rating of 93%, giving this house a gross of $16,300.

The surprise of the week was the gross done by "White Cargo" at the Auditorium where business has been rather dull during the season. This picture, offered on a grind policy with 25 to 50 cents admissions, rated 65 per cent on the week, which figured at about $3,575.

Rogers Clings to No. 1 Spot Among Frisco 1st Runs

San Francisco—Heavy fog, winds and cool weather sent patrons running to the theatres instead of the country. Vacations in schools and offices brought crowds to the theatres all over the city, both afternoons and evening.

"So This Is London," which was moved from the Fox to the Warfield, continued to draw. The Warfield reported $27,000 gross for the week at a 160% rating. This was the big rating for the week. "The Big Pond," shown for a fourth week at the St. Francis, continued to pull. Its gross receipts were $11,100 and its rating 108%. Three other theatres did 100% or more. "With Byrd at the South Pole," at the California, was shown for a second week at a gross of $14,000, or 100%. "Runaway Bride" at the Golden Gate drew a Monday night audience which was largest in 21 weeks.

"White Cargo" will be shown a fourth week at the Davies, since it is continuing to draw. "Ingagi," previously shown at other houses in the city where it had had some trouble, was brought back and shown at the Premier to crowds.

One reason for good business was midnight shows.

Golf Bug Hits B. O. At Mpls. with All Clubs in the Bag

Minneapolis—With the town goofy over golf, the National Open Golf Tournament, which was held at the Interlachen Club here and which was given with a cast of great and near-great stars of the Scotch game, hit the box-offices of the local theatres with every club known to the game. And if that wasn't enough to give house managers gray hair, a heat wave, which topped 100 degrees in the six days in which it held the city, wrecked what hopes the theatres had of making any kind of a profit on their week's offerings.

The Minnesota had the best take of the group. It showed "The Border Legion" to a gross of $22,000, giving the house a 60% rating. The Orpheum could only rate 50% and a gross of $14,500 on "Good Intentions." The Century, which was making heavy dough on "With Byrd at the South Pole," which was playing for a second week at the house, was ordered to jerk the film and open Thursday with "The Unholy Three." The house hit the rate column at the 90% mark. It grossed $9,000. The State showed "The Bad One" to a 60% gross, or a take of $6,000. The Lyric showed "Mamba" to a take of $2,000, or a rating of 70%. The Aster plugged "Sweethearts and Wives" for a 65% rating, or a gross of $1,500. "White Cargo," which has been held over for a second week at the Shubert, grossed $5,790, to register in the rating column with a 70%.

Des Moines Boils But Grosses Do Well; No Wows

Des Moines—With the thermometer registering 102 to 105 degrees and the heat wave registering distress in all sections of Iowa, theatre men in Des Moines are optimistic about the fact that business had suffered no more than it had here. With a good line-up of pictures, the box-office registered average business. The Orpheum alone reported business above normal with the RKO feature, "Midnight Mystery," registering 110%, and Fox's "On the Level" getting 120%, or a gross of $5,606. It has been estimated that more than a dozen people have died as a consequence of torrid weather. The swimming pools, lake and river beaches are drawing huge crowds.

The censor board, it is said, will not pass any pictures depicting a prison break.

Leisurely Ladies Get First Money At Ottawa Houses

Ottawa—Business was fair to good all around, although nothing sensational. In fact, mid-summer patronage showed a firmness that was refreshing. There was a marked difference of opinion between the sexes regarding the week's preferences. The women flocked to see "Ladies of Leisure" at the Regent, while the men folks steered to Keith's for "The Social Lion" and the "Fox Movietone Follies of 1930," or to the Imperial for "Women Everywhere." Lowe Holds Gross To 130 Per Cent In Portland Heat

Portland—Warm, sultry weather and the start of the vacation seasons for many sent a number of the cash customers both to the mountains and beaches, but incoming tourists helped first-run business. With "Good Intentions," with Edmund Lowe, grossed but $12,400 for a rating of 130%; the cool Paramount with Zane Grey's "Border Legion," plus a lot of laughs in the stage show, "Northern Nites," stepped up to $12,000 and 120%. Methodists Hang Everything But Murder on Films

Portland—Blaming films with practically all of the criminal influences in the book, save Bishop Cannon's alleged stock market gambling, and declaring that efforts to raise standards by co-operation with the industry have "failed to secure desired results," the Oregon annual conference of the Methodists is on record for government regulation.

The conference blames films for "undermining the Christian influence of home and church, menacing law-abiding citizenship and misrepresenting American life to the nations of the world."

The resolution pledged co-operation to the Federal Motion Picture Council in America, in "its effort to obtain the passage of the bill declaring the motion picture to be a public utility and providing for a Federal motion picture commission to regulate the trade practices of the motion picture industry and to establish definite moral standards to be applied before the production of films which are to be licensed for interstate commerce."

South Pole Lure Helps Cleveland To Forget Heat

Cleveland—A week of excessive heat with no relief didn't do the theatres a bit of good. Chaney's first talking picture, "The Unholy Three," William Powell in "Shadow of the Law" and "With Byrd at the South Pole" exceeded the summer averages, while the other pictures got by with small margins of profit.

Weather: Continuous excessive heat with no rain to clear the atmosphere.

Brunswick Moves Into New Warner Building

Chicago—The new six-story Warner exchange building at 13th St. and Wabash Ave., received new occupants this week when the Brunswick Recording company vacated its former quarters in the Brunswick building here for the entire sixth floor of the exchange building. This constitutes the first addition to the building's occupants since its opening six weeks ago. At that time, Warner Bros., First National, Vitaphone and Vitagraph took over the third floor of the building.

In the near future Warners' Chicago area theatre staff will take over the fourth floor of the building. The first floor is used for shipping, storage and poster departments, which leaves only the second and fifth floors vacant. Warners' music company subsidiaries will probably get fifth floor space, while the Chicago Warner Club may establish quarters on the second floor.

Language and Backwoods Exhibition Bar U. S. Talkers from Little Nations

Baltic Countries No Market, But Trade Won't Worry Over the Loss

Washington—The future for talkers in the Baltic countries is very slight, the report of the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce on Continental conditions points out.

Never important outlets for American films in the silent days, the language barrier, plus the relatively slight advances made in exhibition in those countries, appear to provide sufficient reason to count out of the reckoning such nations as Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Finland.

The report, now appearing serially in Motion Picture News, continues:

ESTONIA

By EDWARD HUNT

Office of Commercial Attache, Tallinn

There are approximately 55 cinemas operating in Estonia, with a total of about 13,000 seats. There are 14 at Tallinn, six at Tartu, five at Narva and three at Parnu, the best being distributed in the provinces. During 1929 only two were constructed, one at Tartu, and one at Parnu, with approximately 500 seats each. Only a few minor cinemas were reconstructed during the year, the number of seats, however, remaining unchanged.

In 1929 only one cinema, Gloria Palace, Vabaduse Plats, Tallinn, was equipped with sound apparatus of a phonograph type operated in the projection booth with a loudspeaker stationed behind the screen.

Marska Film Production, four Viru tanav, Tallinn, produced two films in 1929; (1) "Vigased Pruudid" (Brides with Defects), featuring Estonian country life, in seven acts, length 2,100 meters, cost of production 1,500 crowns ($400); (2) "Dollarid (The Dollars), a feature film in eight acts, length 2,400 meters, cost of production 7,000 crowns ($1,870).

"Sirius Film" (Theodor Luts), 19 Aia tanav, Tartu, produced only one film in 1929, "Noored Kotkad" (The Young Eagles), featuring the Estonian War for Independence, in eight acts, length 2,400 meters, cost of production 15,000 crowns ($4,000).

Mrs. Ershova, 1 Vene tanav, Tallinn, produced one film, "Juri Rumm" (the name of a legendary hero), featuring certain historical events, in two series, 14 acts, length 4,200 meters, cost of production 15,000 crowns ($4,000).

The only studio in Estonia is operated by Estonia Film, of 4 Viru tanav, Tallinn. It is equipped for the production of silent films exclusively.

Films for release in Estonia are censored first by the department of police, political division, Toompea Loss, Tallinn. Films approved for release by that department are further passed upon by the Estonian Ministry of Education to decide whether they are fit and proper to be attended by minors. In compliance with the decision of the local educational authorities, cinemas usually display an announcement in their different advertising mediums as to whether the particular film can be attended by minors.

Wiring Theatres Slowly

It is proposed to equip the following cinemas in Tallinn with sound apparatus during 1930:

	Seats
Gloria Palace	1,000
Rekord	500
Endla	600
Bi-Ba-Bo	350

In Tartu three cinemas, seating 1,500, are also expected to be wired during the year.

There is considerable interest in Estonia in sound films. It is very difficult, however, to ascertain at present where the necessary equipment and requisites will be purchased. Local cinema owners are not entirely against the American equipment provided the prices are reasonably low. Considerable interest is also displayed in sound apparatus which produced sound from the film itself, although it is thought to be rather too expensive to warrant a wide use.

Thus far the wiring system employed in local cinemas has been considered to be quite satisfactory. Rearrangements have been made only in a few houses. Large cinemas have a good wiring system and operate their own power plants to supply electric current in case the city power plants fail.

With the exception of cinemas at Tallinn, Narva, Tartu, and Parnu, those operating in other parts of the country are hardly of adequate size to warrant their being wired, beyond the first-run houses.

A number of feature films have been planned for production during 1930. The programs will not be made public as yet, and it may be that some of the plans will have to be curtailed owing to the lack of capital.

The local agent of an American concern is awaiting the receipt of a sound-recording apparatus from New York so that he can start producing local sound news reels.

The only studio in Estonia for the production of silent films is operated by Estonia Film. It is difficult to say whether any expansions are proposed for sound filming. The company produced no films in 1929, but may lend the use of its laboratories and studio premises to other enterprises.

There are no laws in force in Estonia which are in any way inimical to the interests of American films, nor are there any such laws in prospect.

LATVIA

By BASIL DAHL

Acting Commercial Attacha, Riga

No new cinemas were built in Latvia during 1929, but the Casino, in Riga, was reconstructed and its seating capacity increased from 550 to 750. No other reconstruction work was undertaken.

Only one theatre in Latvia, the Splendid Palace, in Riga, which has a seating capacity of 1,000, is equipped with sound apparatus, installed toward the end of 1929. It is a German-made double-disc reproducer (Prasing, Berlin) and costs $4,000 installed. Two dials were made with sound-reproduction equipment in the Capitol cinema, Riga, but the apparatus failed to give satisfaction and no more trials were made. It is reported that the owners of the latter cinema have made an arrangement with representatives of Soviet Russia manufacturers of sound-reproducing equipment. For the time being, however, the Russians are not selling their equipment. They have offered to lease it to the Capitol for trial, providing they are given 50 per cent of the profits. It is reported that the Russians will sell their patents to foreign manufacturers as soon as it has been proved that the equipment is satisfactory.

Two other cinemas in Latvia, the Forum in Riga, having a seating capacity of 900, and the Kammerspiele in Libau, with a seating capacity of 500, are contemplating the installation of sound-reproducing apparatus in the near future. The owners of theatres in Latvia are, as a rule, familiar with only continental equipment (chiefly German and French), and the general opinion is that none of it gives full satisfaction.

It is thought that American equipment, although superior in quality, is much too high in price. Theatre owners assert that American equipment is sold in Europe at prices that are about 50 per cent higher than in the United States, which price increase, they think, is not justified. Local film dealers and cinema owners have shown much interest in catalogues and general sales literature of American-made sound equipment. It must be borne in mind that the purchasing power of the Latvians is very low and that this results in their favoring medium and low priced equipment.

Production Slight

Only one film, a silent film called "Latvijas Tapsana" (Formation of Latvia), was started during 1929. It is an educational and patriotic film of local importance and is being produced under the auspices and at the expense of the Ministry of the Interior and the War Office. It is 3,000 meters long and cost 32,000 lats ($6,175).

Two dramas of the Latvian studio, Latvju Filma, were completed in 1929. Both of these are silent films. The first is called "Heinrich Rautenfeld" and the second "In the Whirl of the Times." The former is 2,100 meters and the latter 1,850 meters in length. These films were shown in two cinemas in Riga and in the country districts, but without much success. Latvju Filma went into liquidation recently. It is estimated that the cost of producing each of its films was less than 10,000 lats. The cost of producing news reels is 105 lats per 150 meters.

Sound films have not been produced in Latvia.

There are no studios equipped for sound-film production in the country.

The company Latkino, m. Peterbaznicas iela 1, Riga, was established in 1929. This company publishes the film journal Kino and operates a studio for training film artists. Latkino has not yet evinced any activity in the production of films.

Four sound films were censored for release and shown in Riga near the end of 1929, three in the Splendid Palace cinema and one in the Capitol cinema. The sound films shown in the Splendid Palace met with success, both with respect to technical performance and attendance, but the Capitol show was a failure, largely because of technical reasons. It has been said that the sound-reproducing equipment was defective.

Only American sound films have been shown in Latvia.

No Field for Talkers

The business in Latvia in 1929, as well as other branches, was adversely affected by the 1928 crop failure, but it is gratifying to note that the ratio of American films released increased from 38 per cent of the total length in 1928 to over 50 per cent in 1929.

Theatres Too Few and Too Antiquated for Return To Be Worthwhile

Night Baseball Is "Dead Issue," Says Franklin

Los Angeles—The scare that night baseball threw into theatre operators is subsiding and this form of amusement is no longer feared as competition of a serious nature, according to Harold B. Franklin, president of Fox West Coast Theatres. And there are many reasons for the anticipated demise of these fads.

Night baseball made a desperate attempt to invade the evening amusement schedule, says Franklin, "and for a brief while threw the amusement world out of its stride." However, he adds, "the nocturnal sport now appears to be withering in the chilly night winds, combined with the disapproval of the ball clubs themselves."

"Launched with fanfare and heavy publicity in the northern sectors of California, and centering around Sacramento," said Franklin, "the night games drew heavy crowds in the first flush of their novelty. It took but a few games, however, with bitterly cold winds assaulting the fans, to show the enthusiasts that there was nothing pleasurable about straining their eyes in the semi-glow.

Players in Opposition

"Still greater opposition sprang up among the players themselves, who, despite the siege of press agent stuff promulgated by the club owners, were unfriendly toward the night schedule because it deprived them of any personal leisure and ruined their chances with the bigger leagues. Class A. A. leagues instructed their scouts to have no dealings with players who had played the night ticket, because the unusual lighting too greatly strained the eyes.

"A letter from F. C. Burhans, manager of the Fox Senator Theatre in Sacramento, states:

"'Last night we had a very strong wind. It was also very cold. The fans froze to death in the stands, and tonight it is still colder. All that is needed to put the finishing touches on the game is a few more cold nights.'

"As a menace to night theatre attendance, night baseball is practically a dead issue."

Kalafat May Get Ohio Amusement Chain of 10

Cleveland—Although Judge George Baer ordered the Ohio Amusement chain of ten bankrupt houses sold under auction to Greater Realty Co., a new deal, it is understood, may switch the string to John Kalafat, second high bidder. Kalafat's price was $106,000, while the realty unit offered $161,379, with Greater now reported backing out.

A Scotch Idea

If there's anything in the power of the imagination, when a theatre shows the Antarctic news films the theatre can shut off its cooling system.—Tampa Tribune.

Talkie Stuff

Hollywood—Sarah Y. Mason, M-G-M scenarist, brings the following story back from New York.

A Scotchman, an Irishman and a Jew were having lunch together. When the meal was finished, the Scotchman said, "I'll take the check," and the other two started to walk out.

The next day, glaring eight-column headlines in the newspapers announced:

JEWISH VENTRILOQUIST MYSTERIOUSLY MURDERED.

"Amateur Golf," Night Ball, Close 2 in Nebraska

Omaha—Miniature golf and night baseball are blamed by Louis and Sam Epstein of the Nebraska Theatre Corp., neighborhood chain, for a business drop that is inducing them to close two or three of their houses for the summer.

With the acquisition of the Tivoli and Isis, the string has grown to 10 houses. All are wired, except the Isis, which is closed at present for installation. Other houses in the Nebraska chain, all in Omaha, are the Avenue, Uptown, Maryland, Magic, Benson, Circle, Roseland and Corby.

Sunday Closing For Tom Thumbs

Ottawa—Ottawa exhibitors have won a victory in the ruling of the authorities that Tom Thumb golf courses cannot operate on Sundays, in spite of the operation of recognized golf on that day. Theatres cannot conduct Sunday performances and therefore the trick links must also close for the day.

W. C. T. U. Boycotts Films Showing Drinking Scenes

St. Louis—A boycott on films "so long as drinking scenes and the use of liquor are shown as the smart thing to emulate in our college and family life" has been declared by the W. C. T. U. at a meeting in its headquarters.

The organization has a membership drive under way here and asserts that it will do everything in its power to discourage attendance at picture shows that disobey its mandate.

St. Louis Regulates Tom Thumb Golf Courses

St. Louis—An ordinance regulating Tom Thumb golf courses has been signed by Mayor Victor J. Miller. The bill provides that the courses may open at 7 A. M. and must close at 1:30 A. M. An inspection fee of $40 will be collected annually from each course. The courses may only be built in commercial, industrial and unrestricted zones, being barred from strictly residential sections.

Tom Thumb Golf Courses Raising Havoc in Seattle

Seattle—This city, like many others in other sections of the nation, is in the midst of a sudden attack of Tom Thumb golf courses. At last count, there were said to be well over two dozen such courses here, with new ones springing up daily in any available empty lot.

Theatre managers, without exception, charge these courses with taking much business which would otherwise be deposited, at least in part, in box-offices. The average expenditure at each of the courses is fifty cents per person, according to checkers, which just about represents one theatre admission.

The Seattle Paramount is the only local theatre that has so far taken steps to combat the inroads. This house, on the balcony promenade, has installed an indoor Tom Thumb course, where theatre patrons may play nine holes without charge, before or after the show.

Indiana Carnivals to Be Socked Heavy Taxes

Marion, Ind. — Carnivals visiting here will have a tough time in the future if an ordinance just introduced in the city council at the behest of the retail bureau of the Chamber of Commerce is passed. The ordinance provides the extremely high fee of $100 for the first day, raising $50 a day until the sixth day, when it is $350 a day thereafter. Medicine shows, side shows and animal shows will be forced to pay $50 a day flat rate. It was said the local ordinance was written following that in effect at Anderson, Ind.

Tampa Night Baseball Harms B. O. Business

Tampa, Fla.—Night baseball is drawing immense business. It may be that the big draw is because of the novelty, as day baseball has never been patronized to any extent here. If the night competition continues as it started out it will cut into theatre business materially.

Indiana Theatres Get Fire Hazard Inspection

Indianapolis—Inspection of local theatres is to start immediately under the direction of Alfred Hogston, state fire marshal. The work will be done by a deputy marshal and a member of the Indianapolis fire prevention bureau. Three days a week will be given to the survey, during which time every hazard in each theatre will be checked.

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

IT was stated that a simple D.C. electric circuit consists of a source of D.C. potential connected to a conductor so that urrent flows in the circuit. Such a structure was shown in Figure 20 in Lesson 7. Mention was also made o ithe fact that all conductors possess the property of resistance, hence the simplest circuit includes a resistance, even if it be the resistance of the conductor which joins the two terminals of the source of potential, a battery.

Further analysis of simple D.C. circuits shows three classifications, namely: series, parallel and series parallel. This time, however, the segregation is not governed by the arrangement of batteries. Instead, it is governed by the arrangement of the elements which introduce the resistance into the circuit. If this be true then the classification of the circuit is also governed by the current flow through the circuit, since the relative positions of the resistances influence the flow of current. Such is actually the case, and the description of a circuit as to any one of the three terms stated is one allied with the current flow in the system. Of course just one source of potential is being considered.

Series Circuit

Referring once more to Figure 20 (Lesson 7), one path only is provided for the flow of current in that circuit. Since the potential of the battery is fixed and the resistance R is also of fixed value be it large or small, the presence of this resistance will limit the flow of current to a fixed finite value. This current will flow through the one path provided in the circuit and will be the same in all parts of the circuit. The resistance R can designate whatever device is being actuated by the current in the circuit, be it a lamp, a soldering iron or a vacuum tube filament. Hence it can be said that:

A series circuit is one in which but one path is provided for the total current.

Also that;

The current is the same in all parts of a series circuit.

These two laws are important and should be committed to memory and remembered for future use.

One is apt upon first glance to say that the resistance R in Figure 20 is connected in parallel or shunt with the battery B. Such is actually the case but because of the single continuous path for the current, the circuit is a series structure.

If we assume that R is the filament of a vacuum tube and B is the filament battery, a certain amount of work is expended to cause the flow of electric charges through the filament (the resistance R) so that it becomes incandescent and glows. If the voltage of battery B is 100 volts and the resistance of the filament R is 10 ohms, the rate of electronic flow through R is the equivalent of a current flow of 10 amperes.

Since there is a flow of charges through the resistance R, there exists across the two extremities of the resistance a difference of potential. The same is true across any two points within that resistance or within that circuit. Since the magnitude of the current flow is governed by the presence of that resistance, the difference of potential across the resistance is equal to the current times the resistance. The same is true of any part of the resistance. That is, the difference of potential across any part of that resistance is equal to the current flow times that part of the resistance. Thus we can state that;

The difference of potential or the voltage across any part of a series circuit is equal to the current times the resistance of that part of the circuit.

Lesson Eight

Further delving into the classification of circuits, John F. Rider, in Lesson Eight of The Projectionists' Round Table series, outlines basic formulas controlling the electrical end of sound reproduction.

This voltage, or difference of potential, is frequently referred to as the voltage drop or IR drop since the product of the resistance and the current is equal to the voltage. In the case cited the voltage drop across the resistance R of 10 ohms when the value of current is 10 amperes is 100 volts, the value of potential available from the battery B. This may be expressed by stating that the voltage drop is equal to the applied voltage.

The last sentence in the preceding paragraph has a great deal of significance. A series circuit need not consist of but one resistance. Just as it is possible to divide the resistance R shown in Figure 20 into several separate units of say 1, 3, 4 and 2 ohms respectively, it is possible to employ four such resistances in series as in Figure 21. While the appearance of the circuit has been altered, only one continuous path is available for the flow of current, hence the circuit is still a series structure. Under the circumstances, the total resistance offered by these four separate resistances R1, R2, R3 and R4 is the sum of the individual values. Simple addition shows the total to be 10 ohms, the value indicated in Figure 20 by just one resistance. Hence we can state that;

The total resistance of a number of resistances in series is the sum of the individual resistances.

Thus

$R_t = R1 + R2 + R3 + R4$ where R_t is the total resistance.

Since all of the resistances are additive, it is possible in a series network to consider all of the resistances as a single resistance of an ohmic value equal to the sum of all the resistances in series.

Let us now consider the effect of such resistances upon the current flow. Whatever the value of current in the circuit, it is evident that the flow of charges has but one path from one end of the battery to the other. No matter what the value of current, that value will flow through all of the resistances. The total resistance R_t according to formula (4) is $R_t = 1 + 3 + 2 + 4 = 10$ ohms.

According to Ohm's Law for current, the current flow in the system will be 10 amperes since the voltage E of the battery B is 100 volts. This circuit is, therefore, the same as that shown in Figure 20 except that four resistances are connected in series instead of the single resistance unit employed in Figure 20.

As in the case of the previous example, the total current of 10 amperes flows through each of the resistances and since there is a flow of charges through each of these resistances, a difference of potential or voltage drop will be produced across each of these resistances, just as if we had divided the resistance R in Figure 20 into four separate units.

We now note a difference. Whereas the voltage drop across R in Figure 20 was singular and equal to the applied voltage, we find four distinct voltage drops across the four separate resistances in Figure 21. According to the previously stated law for the IR drop in a series circuit.

the IR drop across R1 = 10 x 1 = 10 volts across R2 = 10 x 3 = 30 volts across R3 = 10 x 2 = 20 volts
across R4 = 10 x 4 = 40 volts

Since the four series resistances are additive, the four IR drops are additive and we note that the total drop across the four separate resistances is equal to the applied voltage since 10 + 30 + 20 + 40 = 100 volts. Hence

The sum of the IR drops in a series circuit is equal to the applied voltage.

The fact that the IR drop across any one of the resistances is equal to the total current times that one resistance is evident in the above computation. The above relation holds true irrespective of the number of resistances in the circuit or the devices employed which may be represented as resistances. Thus, the four resistances in Figure 21 may be four filements of vacuum tubes connected in series, or three filaments and one current controlling element.

Internal Resistance

It might be well at this time to refer momentarily to the internal resistance of the battery. Just as the four resistances shown possess definite values of resistance, there is present within the source of potential a certain value of resistance, which also limits the magnitude of current flow and should, therefore, be considered as a series resistance.

Furthermore, a voltage drop must take place within the battery since the total current flows through the battery and the external resistances. This drop is known as the internal drop. Fortunately it is so low that it may be neglected. If this internal resistance of the battery (the internal resistance of a battery or a cell increases as the state of discharge increases and is appreciable when the battery or cell is rundown or discharged) is appreciable, the sum of the IR drops across the resistance will not be equal to the voltage available from the battery without current flow through the circuit.

At best, that is when the battery is new, the total IR drop across the external resistances with the internal resistance of the battery neglected will not be equal to the voltage of the battery, but this discrepancy will be very small and really of no consequence. If we consider the internal resistance of the battery, we must alter the expression for current in a simple circuit to read as follows

$$I = \frac{E}{R + r} \qquad (5)$$

where R is the resistance of the external circuit and r is the resistance of the battery.

It is this quantity r which limits the maximum amount of current which may be secured from a battery when it is short circuit by a conducter of supposedly zero resistance. The determination of the internal resistance of a cell or battery is slightly premature at this time, but we include it for the reader who may be interested.

The internal resistance of a cell or a battery is the same as if an external resistance of like value is connected in series with a perfect cell or battery entirely without resistance. This means that the internal resistance r will increase the total resistance of the circuit and thus reduce the current flow in the system. Quite naturally, the voltage drop across the various resistances in such a circuit (exclusive of the drop across the battery resistance) will not equal the supposed voltage of the battery. Hence, the true expression for the circuit shown in Figure 21 would be

$E = Ir + IR1 + IR2 + IR3 + IR4$ or (6)

$E = I \times (r + R1 + R2 + R3 + R4)$ (7)

If the internal resistance of the battery is included as shown above, then the expression for the current in the circuit again becomes

$$I = \frac{E}{R}$$ where

R is the total resistance inclusive of the resistance of the source of voltage.

How to Determine It

If the battery, or the source of voltage, is possessed of a certain value of resistance, the drop across that resistance serves no purpose and is lost. To determine the internal resistance of a cell or battery it is necessary to make two observations. First, the voltage of the battery without current flow through the external circuit. Second, the current flow through a known resistance. The first is known as the no load or open circuit voltage. Suppose that the open circuit voltage of a battery is 100 volts and when connected to an 18 ohm resistance causes the flow of five amperes. The IR drop across the external resistance is only 90 volts. Ten volts appear to be lost somewhere. Bearing in mind that the five amperes of current flows through the battery as well as the external resistance, a resistance of two ohms is present somewhere in the circuit external of the regular specified resistance and the leads. Since the IR drop is supposed to be equal to the applied potential.

$E' = IR$

$= 5 \times 18 = 90$ volts

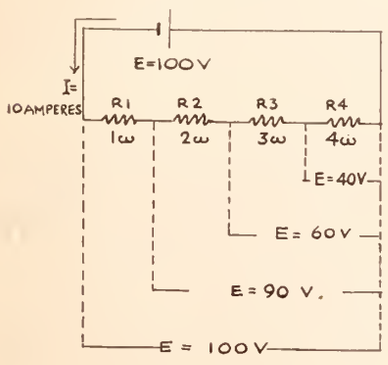

FIG. 22

E' = 90 volts the terminal voltage of the battery when 5 amperes of current are flowing in the circuit.

The open circuit voltage was found to be 100 volts hence the internal drop $= E - E'$

$= 100 - 90 = 10$ volts

Since the same current flows through the battery and the external resistance the internal resistance r of the battery $= \dfrac{E - E'}{\dfrac{E - E'}{I}}$

$= \dfrac{100 - 90}{5}$

$= 2$ ohms internal resistance

If we consider such a battery employed in conjunction with the resistance shown in Figure 21, the total resistance of that network will be

$R_t = r + R1 + R2 + R3 + R4$

$= 2 + 1 + 3 + 2 + 4$

$= 12$ ohms instead of the 10 previously stated.

An Example

If we neglect the resistance of the battery, the circuit of Figure 21 is the same as the circuit shown in Figure 22 and the distribution of voltage drops across different parts of the circuit is as shown. In each case $E = IR$ where R is one resistance or two or three considered as one. As is evident in such series circuits, the function of a series resistance is to reduce the value of current flowing in the system.

This is the same as if the voltage applied to a device had been reduced. Suppose that we consider the resistance R1 in Figure 22. The voltage of the battery is 100 volts and the resistance of R1 is one ohm. Normally if such a resistance were connected to the battery, the current flow would be 100 amperes, perhaps excessive for the device. Say that the maximum current allowable through R1 is 10 amperes.

The presence of resistance R2, R3 and R4 in series with R1 produces such a voltage drop across the R2, R3 and R4 combination that the current flow through R1 with a battery potential of 100 volts is the same as if the potential of the battery had been reduced to 10 volts, the value necessary to limit the current flow through a one ohm resistance to 10 amperes.

Thus, series resistances produce voltage drops necessary to allow the operation of certain devices. Expressed in a different manner, series resistances produce voltage drops which are the equivalent of a reduction of the initial voltage so as to allow the operation of a device at the normal voltage. Suppose that R1 is a lamp filament rated at one ohm and 10 volts. The only available voltage is 100 volts. How can one arrange to operate the 10 volt lamp from the 100 volt source? The solution is the use of a series resistance which will cause a voltage drop of 90 volts and allow the flow of 10 amperes. This means the use of a resistance of a certain value located in series with the lamp filament. What is the value of this resistance?

$$R_x = \frac{E' - E}{I}$$ where (10)

E' is the available voltage and
E is the required voltage and
I is the required current flow

$$R_x = \frac{100 - 10}{10}$$

$= 9$ ohms

Like Series Resistances

In many instances all of the resistances in the series arrangement have like ohmic values. In such cases, the total resistances of the series system is equal to the value of any one of the resistances times the number in series, viz;

$R_x = R \times n$ where (11)

R is the resistance of any one of the units and "n" is the number of resistances in series.

Parallel Circuits—Another circuit structure is known as the parallel circuit and the definition of the system is:

A circuit which has two or more parts connected between the same two points is known as a parallel circuit

Parallel Circuits

Such a circuit is shown in Figure 23. The two resistances R1 and R2 are in parallel and connected between the same two points X and XI in the main circuit. If we momentarily neglect the resistance R2, then the current due to the voltage E from the battery B through the resistance R1 is since this resistance operating in conjunction with the voltage E comprises a series circuit.

If we now neglect resistance R1 and consider resistance R2, we once again note a simple series circuit and the current through R2 is

$$12 = \frac{E}{R2}$$

One fact is evident, namely that the same voltage acts upon both resistances. This gives rise to a law related to parallel circuits, that;

The current flowing through any branch of a parallel circuit is equal to the voltage acting across its terminals divided by the resistance of the branch.

An examination of the circuit shows that the terminals of the two resistances in parallel are the points X and X1 in the circuit. Each one of these resistances offers a path for the flow of current and is, therefore, a branch and the voltage E is the same across X and X1 for either one of the two resistances. Since R1 and R2 are both in the circuit and it is possible to consider either one individually, the total current flowing into the point X and out of the point X1 must be the sum of the two currents I1 and I2. If I is the main current and

then

The total current through any parallel combination connected between two points in a circuit is equal to the sum of the currents through the branches.

One can readily understand that the total current I is greater when both R1 and R2 are in the circuit than when either one of the resistance is removed and the voltage E remains constant.

I1 according to Ohm's Law $= \dfrac{100}{10} = 10$ amps.

I2 according to same law $= \dfrac{100}{10} = 10$ amps.

$I = I1 + I2 = 10 + 10 = 20$ amperes

With a constant voltage, it is apparent that if the total current is 20 amperes with R1 and R2 are in the circuit and only 10 amperes when either resistance is out, the joint resistance of two resistors in parallel is less than the resistance of any one of the branches.

Under the circumstances, it is possible to replace a parallel combination of any number of branches with a single element of the proper resistance. Let us solve for the joint resistance of the parallel combination shown in Figure 23. The individual equations for I1 and I2

Court Ends Long Kansas Fight, Won By "Blues"

Topeka, Kas.—The Supreme Court has declared the state statute which prohibits the sale of "goods, wares or merchandise" on the Sabbath is also applicable to the sale of tickets for any theatrical show.

The decision is the result of a long and bitter statewide fight between the "blues" and antis, with the court being asked to decide the validity of the measure, in a test case over a violation for operating a picture show. The conviction was upheld.

It was also ruled that the statute which prohibits all unnecessary work on Sunday is valid and does not violate any right of religious freedom. The contention that it compels a person to accept Sunday as a day of rest was rejected.

Closer Relations Between Austria, Germany Seen

Berlin—Agreement which gives to Austria the choice of light operas for sound films, and to Germany, the heavier Wagnerians, has prompted much speculation in picture circles over possibilities of working out closer producing arrangements between the two countries in an effort to avoid duplication in turning operatic classics into film form.

Eastman in Realty Deal

Eastman Kodak Stores, Inc., an E-K subsidiary selling photographic materials, has leased space on the Fifth Ave. side of the new 32-story Squibb Bldg., New York at a term rental of $850,000.

Midnight 'Preview' In Seattle R-K-O

Seattle—Another lure to the public in an effort to build stronger summer business will be inaugurated next week by the local R-K-O New Orpheum theatre. Manager Emil C. Bostick, newly arrived, has dubbed every Friday night "previous night," a la Hollywood, and explains the idea thusly:

Patrons coming in for the final performance of the current show at 9:30 p.m. on any Friday night will see a complete vaudeville program and feature picture, and will then be allowed to remain in their seats without extra charge to see a "preview" of the film attraction that begins a week's engagement on the following day.

"Oom-Pah-Pahs" Absent Though Tooters Fidget

Ottawa—An orchestra sits in the pit of B. F. Keith's here, but no "Oom-pah-pah" greets the ears of the audiences and the drum emits no rat-a-tat during performances. The musicers occupy their seats during the scheduled hours, holding their instruments in the professional manner, but no baton stirs them to action. Their eyes flit from the music in front of them to the audience, to the picture and back to the score.

Expressionless until a sour note from behind the screen tortures their souls, they are itching to play, but they can't. That is, they're not allowed to.

When vaudeville was cut out for the summer by Manager Joe Franklin he served "services no longer required" notices on the musicians. They had a sense of humor, it appears, and thought it a good joke. Even when their pay was stopped they weren't discouraged. Every day they appear at their posts and "see and hear" the pictures free of charge. They expect to be paid some time for their willingness to toot and fiddle.

Just how and when harmony will be restored is a moot question.

Friends of Films In California Governor Race

Hollywood—The Coast film colony is taking more than passing interest in the present three-corner Republican primary race for governor of California.

The present Governor, C. C. Young, who is a candidate for re-election, has among his chief sponsors several prominent producers and executives. He is well liked among the upper strata of Hollywood filmdom society, and will have their complete backing.

Mayor Rolph of San Francisco seems to be in line to poll the greatest number of votes in the film colony. Rolph has time and again demonstrated his friendship for the industry and show business as a whole; and the rank and file of players, directors, technicians and studio workers are lining up under his banner.

The third candidate for the governorship is Buron Fitts, present reform district attorney for the county of Los Angeles, who is also well known socially in select film society. From present indications, local observers of the state political situation feel that Fitts will run a poor third in getting the support from the Coast film group.

Prague—City fathers here created a commission which will organize a museum containing every available film record of the town.

Atta Boy, Harry!

Tampa, Fla.—With the advent of talking pictures the blind get a break, and many of them have been attending sound theatres here. To make life a little sweeter for those condemned to eternal blackness, Harry Weiss, general manager of Publix houses, has offered to admit the blind free if accompanied by a guide, the latter paying the regular admission charge.

Backgrounds in U. S., Closeups Abroad, Is Plan

Hollywood—Economies in time, money and effort in production of foreign talkers are claimed by Richard Zelnik, for his new plan of photographing backgrounds in this country and sending the negative abroad where closeups would be taken of foreign players. The scenario would likewise be fashioned for each country.

Zelnik has joined Carroll and Dodge Dunning in furthering the plan. The Dunnings are sponsoring a process for superimposing scenes taken in the studio on scenic backgrounds, similar to the New York shots in "Anna Christie" upon which the players were later photographed.

Fire in Projection Booth; "Rain Checks" Are Given

Goshen, Ind.—Fire which started when the Jefferson theatre was crowded destroyed all the projection equipment and ruined the film, but the audience was not alarmed and none was hurt. The film jammed and caught fire immediately. Operator Robinson left the booth and closed the door. The loss is more than $3,000 and is covered by insurance. New equipment will be installed immediately. The value of fireproof projection booths was more than demonstrated. The audience did not know a thing was wrong and sat calmly waiting for the show to proceed. The customers were given rain checks—perhaps fire checks would be better. Oscar Hausen is manager of the theatre.

Talkers Improve Providence Hold

Providence—Passing of the Opera House, legitimate, and wiring of the Empire, burlesque, gives sound pictures almost undisputed sway here. The Empire, it is understood, is to be taken over by Abraham A. Spitz, who plans to show low-price talkers.

Canada Removes Bond Restrictions On Sound Trucks

Ottawa—A ruling that sound film trucks used in the taking of topical views for newsreels are to be admitted into the Dominion as tourists' automobiles has been passed by the excise branch of the department of national revenue. This removes considerable red tape and the heavy bond required as in the case of commercial vehicles used for business purposes in Canada.

With the restrictions removed, various sound trucks are busily engaged on practically virgin ground in the Dominion. One reason for the action on the part of the Federal government was the complaint from Provincial censors that sound news weeklies did not contain sufficient Canadian views to meet censorship regulations.

Duffy May Reopen Four Bankrupt 'Frisco Houses

San Francisco — Four Duffy theatres darkened by receivership proceedings will be reopened in a few weeks again under management of Henry Duffy, it is understood. Radio Slander Penalized

New Orleans—House of Representatives has passed, by a vote of 71 to 3, a measure "to prohibit slander over, through or by means of what is commonly known as the radio."

The measure provides "that any person who shall falsely use, utter or publish words over, through, or by means of what is commonly known as the radio, which in their common acceptation shall tend to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue or reputation, or publish the natural defects of one who is alive, and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or financial injury, shall be guilty of slander."

The bill provides a penalty of a fine of not more than $100 or imprisonment in jail for not more than 30 days, or both.

Milwaukee Cops Blaming Unions For Vandalism

Milwaukee—Police suggestions that labor trouble has been the cause of the attempted bombings of the Studio, Greenfield and New World theatres here have been vigorously denied by union men. An attempted bombing of the Studio theatre resulted in the breaking of several windows in the building, but no other serious damage.

G. C. Kalkhoff, business manager of the Union of Motion Picture Operators, has stated that he will ask the organization's board for funds to make a complete investigation of the bombings. The police always, he stated, when such troubles occur, give labor troubles as the cause.

"Ours is not a bombing union. Our men earn from $45 to $125 a week and we have very few out of work. We have never placed non-union houses in Milwaukee on the unfair list. Of the 70 or more theatres in Milwaukee about five employ non-union operators," Kalkhoff stated.

One of the city's papers commented on the disturbances editorially and advocated a thorough investigation less the business racketeer acquire a foothold in Milwaukee. Six theatres have been attacked, either by paint or bombs, on nine occasions in Milwaukee during the last few months.

To discount the solution of labor trouble, it was further pointed out that both the Venetian and Uptown, operated by Warners and Fox, respectively, employ union operators and were splashed with paint several months ago.

DeForest Injects Motion Grid Into Vacuum Tubes

Motion has been put into vacuum tubes. Now, with a moving grid, it is expected that radio tubes will offer new possibilities. The new tube, invention of Lee De Forest, has a rotating grid in the form of a cylinder, with slips and vanes, the electronic stream rotating the grid.

"Blues" Win Again In Hot Battle In North Dakota

Fargo, N. D.—This state's "blue" law, cause of trouble aplenty over a long period of years, will remain in force indefinitely, the "anti blues" falling to defeat in the special referendum by several thousand votes.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union and other Sunday show enemies fought the newly-created Sunday Theatre Law Repeal Ass'n., in a vigorous campaign to induce voters to say "yes" on the repeal question.

Roy Olwin, state organizer of the theatre body, obtained 18,000 signatures throughout the state, several thousands more than was necessary to secure the state referendum.

Madelia Outs Sunday Shows

Milton, Ia.—The Opera House is unable to operate without Sunday shows, although the town's population is understood to be in favor of "open" Sabbath.

Warners Promote Payette

Washington—A meeting of all executives and managers of Warner theatres in the Washington zone was held at South River Park, Md., at which John Payette, general manager of the district, announced that Frank M. Boucher, in charge of theatres in Hagerstown, has been appointed manager of all theatres in Maryland, excepting Baltimore.

Boucher has managed Warner theatres in Hagerstown and vicinity, including Maryland, Waynesboro, Pa., and Martinsburg, W. Va.

Brisbane Favors U. S. Projectors, Gov't Declares

Washington — American-made projectors are preferred in Brisbane, Australia because of the interchangeability of their parts. This is pointed out in the report on possibilities of domestic equipment in the East and in Africa compiled by Nathan D. Golden of the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce.

The report covers 33 countries, including large and small markets alike, and is being published in full in Motion Picture News. The second instalment follows:

BRISBANE

From Report by R. L. Rankin, American Consul

Projectors.—There are 268 motion picture theatres in the State of Queensland. About 75 per cent of them use projectors of American manufacture, 15 per cent are Kalee (British), and the remainder miscellaneous German makes.

The American projectors sell for about $975 and the German and English at $825. It should be noted, however, that in order to bring the American machines down to this price, German lamp houses and Australian stands or bases are used. The German lamp houses are reported as cheaper and are considered by certain individuals to be better in both appearance and operation than the American. Bases and other minor parts of Australian manufacture are used solely on account of their cheapness, which results from the lack of transportation charges and the customs duty.

American projectors are preferred mainly because of the interchangeability of parts. They also have an excellent record for standing wear throughout a long period of years.

The equipment in theatres in Queensland varies widely. Most of them, however, have two projectors. Models of all ages are found, from the latest to some at least 15 years old. The old American projectors are giving better service than those of other nationalities, and the new American machines are preferred.

Arc Lamps and Generators.—Mirror-reflector arc lamps are used in about 70 per cent of Queensland theatres, while the high-intensity type is not in use at all. There is no demand for American generator sets, the complaint being that they are not adaptable for the mirror arcs; this can hardly be true, however, inasmuch as they are being used with mirror arcs in the United States. A German machine, manufactured by Max Levy, is the most popular.

Screens.—There is little uniformity in the type of picture screens in use. Most of them, however, are sheeting of comparatively cheap quality.

Visual Education.—The Department of Public Instruction supervises matters pertaining to education, but has not adopted motion pictures to any considerable degree. The cost of such an undertaking in a state of so great area as Queensland is likely to prevent the government from taking action along that line. Definite attempts are being undertaken by private firms to introduce motion pictures on an educational basis, but no plan has been developed as yet which would be on a paying basis. It is hoped, however, to work out a system comparable to that which exists in New South Wales.

ADELAIDE

From Report by Leo J. Callanan, Vice Consul in Charge

Projectors.—Metropolitan Adelaide has about 16 motion picture theatres, of which it is estimated 60 per cent use American projectors, 30 per cent Australian projectors, and 10 per cent other projectors.

For Foreign Travelers

Passports from the U. S. now cost only $5, and renewals $2, reduction having been ordered by a new measure signed by President Hoover.

One American machine has been most favored and most widely used because of its workmanship, simplicity, and long life, but the C & W Australian machine is gaining in popularity and is much cheaper. Australian Films (Ltd.), 33 Grenfell Street, Adelaide, is the agent for that American machine and the German Hahn-Goerz, and Harrington's (Ltd.), 10 Roundle Street, Adelaide, is the agent for the other American machines and Kalee projectors There is no other firm of importance in Adelaide handling motion picture equipment.

Most of the equipment in use is modern. The majority of the Adelaide theatres are equipped with two projectors, while a few have three. American projectors are considered superior to all others.

Generators.—It is estimated that 75 per cent of the generator sets in use are British. They have given good service and are strongly established. The chief obstacles American generator sets have to overcome are the tariff preference accorded to British equipment and buyer preferences for British goods. There is not, however, prejudice against American equipment.

Arc Lamps.—Mirror-reflector arc lamps are generally used, those of German manufacture being favored. Hoyts new Regent Theatre has the only high-intensity arcs in Adelaide.

Screens.—Specialized motion picture screens are not used. Ordinary canvas screens are made to suit particular requirements.

Visual Education.—The schools of South Australia have not made any regular use of visual education.

NEW ZEALAND

From Report by Julian B. Foster, American Trade Commissioner, Wellington

There are four different makes of American projectors in use in New Zealand, besides the Ernemann (German, Kinex and Kalee Indomitable (Britsh), and Pathé and Gaumont (French). It is estimated that 60 per cent of the projectors used are brought in from the United States, 30 per cent from Germany, and the balance divided between the French and the British.

Prices of these projectors range from £175 to £230 ($850 to $1,120) according to the equipment attached. There is no wide variation in the prices of the machines.

There are no special features that make the American machines appeal to the theatre owners in New Zealand. It is felt, however, that American machines are in far greater demand because the United States supplies by far the greatest portion of the films. Undoubtedly good salesmanship accounts for our heavy sales to a certain extent. The Australian Films (Ltd.), Wellington, handles practically all makes with the exception of Ernemann and one American make. These are handled by Ernemann Supplies (Ltd.) and Harrington's (Ltd.). These three firms are the chief importers of projectors in New Zealand. During the past three years by far the greater portion of machines installed have been American, and according to the reports they are giving excellent service.

The three firms above mentioned are practically the only ones in New Zealand who could do justice to the lines in question. They have the confidence of the theatre owners, and it is a very difficult matter for other dealers to make sales as the interests of the theatre owners are closely allied with the concerns named. Another small concern handling that type of equipment in a small way is Waterworths (Ltd.).

Interchangeable Parts Aid Sales In the Antipodes

All of the larger theatres are equipped with two machines, and the smaller ones are gradually installing two. Owing to the small size of the projection rooms, it is felt that a good machine with two heads on one stand would find a ready sale in the smaller theatres which are too small to take two separate machines. Most of the machines in the larger theatres are recent models; during the past two years over 200 American machines of one make have been installed. While there are many old types still used in the smaller theatres, the general trend seems to be to install up-to-date operating appliances. The American projectors in use at the present time are said to be giving much better service than the other models.

Generators.—The possibilities for the sale of American generator sets for use in theatres to convert alternating current to direct current seems to be exceedingly good at the present time, owing to the number of hydroelectric plants providing power for exhibitors.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—High-intensity and mirror-reflectors arc lamps are used in theatres in New Zealand and are constantly in demand. Screens used are canvas and plaster.

Visual Education.—Visual education has been used very little in New Zealand. Several attempts have been made to secure the attendance of school children at the theatres in the afternoon, but the lack of suitable and sufficient films has been a handicap. It is said that the education department has now refused to allow children to be taken away from school to attend educational pictures, but that the matter of visual training by educational pictures meets with the approval of that department, and machines will probably be installed in the larger schools in the not far distant future. If a regular and good supply of educational subjects was assured, together with a suitable type of portable machine, it is believed that the department would feature that means of education.

FIJI ISLANDS

From Report by Quincy F. Roberts, American Consul at Suva

There are six motion picture theatres in the colony of Fiji, with an estimated total seating capactiy of approximately 2,000.

Projectors.—There are two American machines, two English machines, and two German machines in use. The newest machine in Fiji is the English Kalee installed in the Universal theatre at Suva.

The Suva theatres are equipped with two projectors, a new machine in use and an old projector kept for emergency use.

There appears to be no special features that appeal to theatre owners in Fiji, and there is no evidence that American projectors are giving any better service than other makes. Owners of British and American machines feel that their equipment is giving satisfaction.

The market for projectors is so small that dealers and merchants of Suva are not interested in handling them. The theatre owners deal direct with agents in Australia, New Zealand, and England.

Current—The power supplied at Suva is direct current at a voltage of 240. It is understood that power at other places is also direct current.

Arc Lamps and Screens—Mirror-reflector arc lamps are used in both the Suva theatres. Ordinary canvas screens of local manufacture are used in Fiji.

Visual Education.—The Director of Education has charge of education in the colony of Fijif. Visual education has made no progress in the colony, the great problem being to obtain funds for schools and teachers.

Federal Bureau Favors Ia. Law Governing Signs

Washington—Although providing for the heavy penalty of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, Iowa's regulation governing erection of billboards along highways is officially accepted by the Federal government as being the best defined law affecting outdoor signs.

State laws governing commercial advertising signs on the highways range from the most general to well defined regulations, according to the Bureau of Public Roads.

Some states, it was explained, merely prohibit commercial advertising signs on the rights of way, while others prohibit them both on the rights of way and on private property along highways without consent of owner or of property officials. A few stipulate the distance from public highways at which the signs may be placed, and a number specify distances from curves, intersecting highways and streets, and at railroad grade crossings at which they may be placed.

According to the bureau, some of the states bar signs that obscure the view of highways at curves, intersecting highways or at grade crossings, and prohibit the erection by unauthorized agencies of any warning or direction signs, markers, signals, or lights in imitation of any railroad crossing or other official sign.

Various Regulations

In a few states, it was said, signs are prohibited on the public domain, near parks, cemeteries, state forests, and other local sites, and advertising matter is prohibited on traffic and direction signs.

In the majority of states, various state, county and local officials are authorized to remove unlawful signs; a few states permit anyone to remove signs erected in violation of the law.

About half the states prohibit the painting of advertising notices on or affixing them to rocks, stones, fences, culverts, bridges, trees or other private property, in some cases anywhere in the state, in others within the limits of the highway, without the consent of owners or of proper officials.

The laws of four states—Connecticut, Nevada, New Mexico and Utah—require that all advertising signs be placed certain distances from public highways. Thirteen states either require that advertising agencies be licensed and collect an annual fee for each sign, or impose a tax for each sign. In most cases they require permits, to the applications for which must be attached the written consents of owners of property on which signs are to be erected. Applications, as a rule, must state the sizes of signs and proposed locations.

Connecticut levies a license fee of $100 a year and an annual permit fee vary from $3 for each panel of every sign of 300 square feet or less to $9 for those between 600 and 900 square feet. Vermont collects an annual fee of $25 and levies an annual tax ranging from 50 cents for each panel or separate display of 6 to 15 square feet to 9.25 for 550 to 600 square feet, increasing the rate 75 cents for every additional 50 square feet.

A license fee of $10 is collected in North Carolina from agencies for signs outside incorporated towns and cities. In cities the fees are based on population and vary from $10 for less than 5,000 inhabitants to $100 for more than 35,000.

After Jan. 1, 1931, every outdoor advertising agency in New Jersey will be required to secure an annual license from the bureau of motor vehicles and pay an annual fee of $100, and an additional fee of 3 cents for each square foot of display. Nebraska requires a state permit for advertising signs and collects a fee of 25 cents to $5 for each sign. No sign may have a surface area of more than 10 square feet. Similar fees are assessed by other states.

Seventeen states forbid the erection or maintenance by advertising agencies upon private property of any commercial advertising sign without consent of the owner and impose a fine of $5 to $200 or imprisonment of five days to one year for violation. The laws of 19 states prohibit signs on public highways under state control and most of them stipulate fines from $5 to $500 or imprisonment of from 10 to 90 days or both.

In 20 states, advertising signs are not permitted upon any highway without consent of proper officials, and in some states a fine of from $10 to $500 is imposed for violation. The laws of 11 states prohibit the erection on any highway of any danger or direction sign bearing commercial advertising.

Iowa Law Favored

It was explained that of the 13 states, the laws of which specifically state that no sign shall be erected to obscure the view of highways at certain points, Iowa probably has the best defined. In that state, "billboards, signboards, and advertising signs, whether erected and constructed on public or private property, which so obstruct and impair the view of any portion or part of public street, avenue, highway, boulevard, alley or of a railroad or street railway track as to render dangerous the use thereof," are public nuisances and may be removed; and whoever is convicted of erecting or continuing such nuisance is subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year.

The laws of a number of states make mention of the fact that certain advertising by manufacturers or landowners located along highways will be permitted, and some designate a prescribed area for such advertising. Such signs, however, it was pointed out, must not obstruct views along highways.

Camera Smashes Arson Ring

Buffalo, N. Y.—Motion pictures secretly taken while an arson ring was at work resulted in the capture of nine suspects by Buffalo police.

The coppers hid the camera diagonally across from a furniture store where the suspects were in the alleged act of starting another in a string of commercial fires for which they were paid between $50 to $300 each.

"Florodora Girl" Basis Of Infringement Suit

Los Angeles—Executors of the estate of Leslie Stuart, composer of the musical comedy, "Florodora," have filed suit against M-G-M, Cosmopolitan Productions and others for damages, alleging that the Marion Davies picture, "The Florodora Girl," infringed the copyright owned by the estate. Attorneys for the executors estimate that the total damages sought exceed $1,000,000.

Brin Milwaukee Theatres Offer Free Parking

Milwaukee—L. K. Brin's Garden and Majestic are offering free auto parking at a nearby garage on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday nights. All that is necessary for the patron is to take the garage check, have it stamped by the theatre cashier when buying his tickets and on calling for his car and presenting the stamped check he is not obliged to pay for parking.

Both theatres are located on Wisconsin Avenue and the tie-up is working out satisfactorily in view of the fact that these nights are ordinarily quiet for the garage as well as the theatre. The free parking plan is advertised in newspaper copy.

Loew's Canada Theatres Pass July 15 Dividend

Toronto—In order to conserve liquid cash resources, dividends payable July 15 on both the preferred and common stock have been passed by the Marcus Loew's Theatres, owning the Yonge Street and the Uptown, Toronto, and Loew's London theatre at London, Ont.

The statement indicates that both companies are in better financial position than they were one year ago, but the dividends were passed by the directors until the summer patronage slump is over. During the past year, the Toronto Loew company earned $1818 on each share of preferred and paid the $7 dividend. First and second mortgages of $850,000 on the Toronto theatres were reduced to $160,000 in recent years, a substantial amount having been paid off only this year.

In the case of the Loew theatre at London, Ontario, considerable in the way of alterations has been carried out and ready cash is required to pay off the obligations. All of the theatres concerned have been wired.

Our Blushing Brides

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Popular Stuff; Big B. O.

(Reviewed by Sherwin S. Kane)

HAVING the same—if not greater—box office possibilities as its two predecessors, "Our Dancing Daughters" and "Our Modern Maidens," this trilogy may become a serial. Followed to its logical conclusion, it is not difficult to imagine a later trio comprised of "Our Cheating Wives," "Our Disillusioned Divorcees" and "Our Exhausted Grandmothers." This third installment has many points in common with its two antecedents.

Far from being a dramatic triumph, it, nevertheless, possesses many of those qualifications which make for box-office success of no ordinary variety. It makes use of a popular and capable cast in telling, in its own spectacular way, a familiar, modern story—that of the processes by which working girls progress from lodging houses to luxurious apartments and, occasionally, desirable husbands. Considerable public interest attaches to these processes which, in themselves, are either entertaining or tragic, according to the viewpoint. In either case, they are intriguing enough to get a representative number of your drawing populace inside the theatre.

Joan Crawford, Anita Page and Dorothy Sebastian impersonate "our blushing brides." None of them blushes and only one of them becomes a bride, but that is incidental. This capable trio is employed in a metropolitan department store. Jerry (Joan Crawford) is a model; Connie (Anita Page) in the perfumes, and Francine in blankets. They occupy the same rather dingy living quarters and possess the same understandable desire to supplant them with a taste of luxury. Francine and Connie are more eager than wisdom allows; Jerry is merely cautious.

Francine's opportunity comes in the shape of Martin (John Miljan), who buys lavishly in her department. David Jardine (Raymond Hackett), as the son of the department store owner, is the means by which Connie achieves her apartment—the marriage, of course, to come later. Jerry's play—distrusted by the girl—comes from Tony Jardine (Robert Montgomery), an older son. It makes little progress up to the time of a fashion show at the Jardine home, where Jerry leads the models. At the close of the show Tony brings Jerry to his bachelor retreat on the estate, but, failing to mention matrimony to the practical model, his efforts are a physiological failure.

Returning to the girls' lodging, Jerry is advised by Connie that David has selected an apartment for her. Later the same night, Francine brings David back to the lodgings with the explanation, not too convincing, that they have been married. Later, Martin is arrested as a thief and Francine taken into custody with him. At the same time, Jerry overhears David discussing marriage plans with Evelyn Woodforth (Martha Sleeper), a society girl. She seeks out Connie with this information and, while still with the girl, David returns and the expose follows.

On the eve of David's wedding Connie takes poison. Jerry goes to the Jardine reception and brings back David to hearten the girl. The best his presence can accomplish is a happy death for Connie. The two indiscriminate girls having been thus dealt with, virtue is further triumphant in having fate reward Jerry—the lone holdout—with a promise of marriage from Tony.

Action and direction are uniformly good; however, the length of the production permits it to lag—and interest with it—on frequent occasions. There are some lavish settings and some effectively authentic ones, among the latter the department store sequences are noteworthy. Dialogue is excellent for the most part.

If your audiences went for either "Dancing Daughters" or "Modern Maidens" there is no reason to be skeptical of this one. Its appeal is to the same patronage, and with more effective weapons than either of the others. It is good entertainment, ably staged, but is no bet for the kiddies.

Newsreels and cartoons or comedies will balance your program.

Boosting the Boss

The boys at Tiffany's Coast studio believe in giving the big boss a little publicity on the screen. In the current Voice of Hollywood, George K. Arthur, as announcer for Station S-T-A-R, picks up a letter and, holding it upside down, says:

"I have here a request from Mr. L. A. Young of Detroit for a saxophone solo."

L. A. Young is president of Tiffany.

Lawful Larceny

(Radio—All Talker)

Intelligent

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

BEBE DANIELS gets the stellar position, but the picture is mostly Lowell Sherman's. Not only did he direct it, in an extremely expert manner, but his performance is a finished piece of work that is delightful always. And he nets every laugh in the production.

The masses who revel in action may not fall hard for "Lawful Larceny," for it is produced in the stage manner, but it will be relished by those who desire intelligence in story, direction and acting. Despite the fact that the dialogue is almost 100 per cent of the picture, it packs an accelerated tempo, builds up suspense and never allows the attention to falter.

Bebe Daniels is cast as a young wife who, upon being told by her husband (Kenneth Thomson) that he has had illicit relations with another woman (Olive Tell), who conducts a private gambling house of her own, and that she has despoiled him of all his possessions, determines to ruin the vamp. She lands the job of secretary to the lady of easy morals in furtherance of her scheme. There she meets Lowell Sherman, who falls hard for her in a nice, clean way.

Thomson, horrified at meeting her there, but pledged to remain silent, is forced to watch Sherman making love to his wife. When Sherman proposes marriage Bebe consents, but compels him first to reveal the nature of his livelihood. Sherman thereupon admits that he preys upon the type of women who prey upon men, as a result of an experience he has had with the species, and that he had been on the verge of decamping with the vamp's valuables, when he met Bebe and decided to go straight.

There is a highly dramatic scene when Miss Tell, who is deeply in love with Sherman, is told that he and Bebe are about to be married. She denounces her secretary as a cheat and a thief, and Bebe rubs in a moral or two about stealing men from their wives. Then she induces Sherman to empty the contents of the safe into a bag, and flees with it to her home. She is pursued there by Sherman, Miss Tell and a judge, who tells her that it is "lawful larceny" to steal a husband, as Miss Tell had done, but not to steal property. However, when Bebe demonstrates how the vamp had won her earnings through marked cards, the vampire makes a quick exit, and there's a reconciliation.

The story has been developed with smoothness and logic and the dialogue is crisp and sparkling at all times. The picture is good for week stands in the better houses. The star is convincing in a difficult role and all of the members of the cast know their stuff.

Musical and shorts and cartoons sufficient to balance.

(First National—All Talker)

Thrilling

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

TENSE scenes of air fighting in the late war, some strong dramatic sequences and fine acting characterize this picture. It has been given fine production values and the direction is splendid. However, the story is repetitious and somewhat obvious, there is a lack of comedy and the picture is devoid of love interest, and hasn't a woman in the cast. But sold properly on its thrills, it should be a money-getter, even though its chief appeal is to men, and the thrills its best selling point.

Richard Barthelmess is starred, although his part does not rate far above that of Neil Hamilton and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., both of whom give outstanding performances. Hamilton dominates the early scenes. Clyde Cook, Frank McHugh and Gardner James do good work.

The story is of the Royal Flying Corps, a squadron of which is usually picked out for "dirty assignments." The commander cannot abolish the thought that he is an executioner, sending untrained recruits out to be slaughtered by the Germans. He seeks solace in whiskey and gruff words, and is relieved to learn that a subordinate toward whom his particular hate is directed has to take his place when the chief is transferred. The same development is re-enacted, for the carefree aviator, who disobeyed commands to go out and strafe the Germans with a pal, now becomes the hardened commander bearing the burdens of war on his shoulders. At length, a suicide mission is ordered and his pal wins the assignment, but the commander disobeys and takes the task. He is successful in his mission, but is killed, whereupon the pal is shown as commander, gruff and whiskey-drinking as the two who had gone before.

The strafing expedition of the two pals is well done, but a litlte far-fetched, for they succeed in destroying a whole German squadron, when repeatedly the superior equipment of the Germans had been stressed. There is real pathos in the scene where the commander is forced to send his pal's younger brother to his death, and another touching bit when the commander believes his pal killed. Howard Hawks has managed to maintain tenseness, despite the repetitious story. The photographer deserves

Good Programmer

(Reviewed by Sherwin S. Kane)

LIGHT enough at the start, but increasingly heavy as it unfolds, this, nevertheless, is good program material.

H. B. Warner turns in a fine performance, easily leading a capable cast. As Henry Grayson, merchant and influential citizen, his activities bring about the election of a "reform" mayor, pledged to a lily-white administration. While Grayson listens to endorsements of the puritan platform at a political banquet following the election, his children, played by Frank Albertson and Joyce Compton, are whooping it up at a beach club. Albertson takes on a too plentiful load of intoxicants and is abandoned by his sweetheart (Mildred Van Dorn), after which he pays a visit to a speakie where he meets Sally, an entertainer, played by Charon Lynn.

Sally's boy friend, Joe Hardy (Kenneth Thomson) is a crooked racketeer and instructs the girl to give young Grayson a play in order that the family's influence may be invoked in the event Hardy's operations get him into a jam. The youth falls heavily for the entertainer and appropriates numerous costly gifts for her at his father's department store. A house detective reports the situation to Grayson, Sr., who upbraids his son. The youth, angered, leaves home, and is framed by Hardy to the extent that he is on the scene when Hardy, caught robbing a roadhouse safe, shoots the proprietor of the place. Young Grayson is seen fleeing from the place by his father, who has arrived to bring the youth back to his home. The father forces a confession from his son which implicates Hardy and Sally. Grayson, confident of his son's innocence, turns him over to the police along with Hardy and the girl. Their testimony implicates the youth and he is found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to five years in the penitentiary. This sentence is then vacated and the youth is paroled in the custody of his father for five years. The fadeout suggests reconciliation with his former sweetheart.

The picture moves at a good pace and provides an ample amount of action. Situations, for the most part, are reasonable and interest is well sustained. Sharon Lynn sings two songs, "Joe" and "That's What I Like About You," both very average in theme and tune. Thomson, as Hardy the racketeer, turns in a good performance.

Light shorts, particularly good comedy, are needed with this.

Entertaining

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

ALICE WHITE turns in a fine bit of acting in this picture; in fact, she demonstrates that her talents have been wasted in the past in sappy sex roles. Who would have thought it? She comes through with a snappy dance in a modest evening gown, but no attempt is made to capitalize her curves and s. a., unless it be in the title. But by no stretch of the imagination is the title applicable to the story.

The story centers about a band of bank robbers, the chief of whom, Kenneth Thomson, has headquarters in his gilded cabaret. Alice's sweetie, David Manners, gets caught in the toils of the Thomson gang. Alice learns of his arrest on another charge while with a burlesque troupe and beats it back to the big city. David will not listen to her entreaties to quit the game, and Alice is later induced by Robert Elliott as a lieutenant of detectives, to get a job in the cabaret in order to spy on them and save David.

She gets wind of a plot to hold up another big bank and telephones the message to the police, but the latter are foiled because they are detected watching the scene. Suspicion centers on David, and they are about to give a twist to the "taking a ride" process by throwing him from a penthouse when the cops and Alice arrive. Everything sweet thereafter.

The role is not a soft one, but the star carries it with ease and conviction. She should be given better parts from now on. Manners was somewhat uncertain in his histrionics, but he should develop into a draw juvenile. The rest of the cast was more than capable. Eddie Cline did a fine job of directing, and the production is closely-knitted, fast-moving, coherent and plausible.

While this can be classified as another gangster story, its originality and rapid tempo will make it click with the average audience.

The Bottom of the World

(Talking Picture Epics)

(Synchronized with Lecture)

Very Interesting

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

BIRD, animal and sea life in the Antarctic feature this adventure picture taken by Dr. Ludwig-Kohl on an expedition to South Georgia. The picture has a lecture throughout by Dr. Robert Cushman Murphy, who explains in detail the various scenes.

The picture is a very interesting one, and it has been cut to a length which makes it an enjoyable entertainment of slightly more than one-half hour. With another feature on the bill, a diverting and instructive program can be built up. In addition, the picture is presented under auspices of the American Museum of Natural History, which offers a good exploitation hook-up.

Whaling in the Antarctic, including the harpooning of a blue whale, is shown in fascinating detail, with the lecturer advising that whales will soon be extinct if the present rate of killing continues. There is a real thrill in a savage fight between two mammoth sea elephants, and kick in the way the various species of penguins, "the little men" of the Antarctic, live. These birds, which cannot fly, but which make their homes in the highest crags, are pictured in detail; and the famed albatross is shown. Altogether, it is an offering which will please.

However, it is in no way similar to the Byrd South Pole film and all confusion along this line should be avoided carefully.

Comedies, musicals and dramatic shorts will fit.

Produced by Ludwig-Kohl Larsen. Distributed by Talking Pictures Epics. Length, 3,800 feet. Running time, 39 minutes. Release date, Sept. 1.

Excellent

TOM TERRISS, "The Vagabond Director," takes us this time to the mysterious city of Angkor in Indo-China, which at one time housed a million inhabitants, but today has but one—a demented native who poses as king. Magnificent turreted buildings, seven and eight stories in height, are shown, and their interiors, containing weird statues and gods, give the subject a punch. It is accompanied by a lecture by Terris. At times he becomes too theatrical in his spiel, and at all times it is almost drowned out by the synchronized score. Any audience will enjoy this novelty. A SCENIC tour of Santiago, Cuba, showing the historic Spanish-American war sites, is the highlight of this issue. It will impart a thrill to all types of patrons. There are views of San Juan Hill, made famous by the charge of Roosevelt's Rough Riders, and of the monument to that great regiment with a bust of T. R. and flanked by American and Cuban flags. Then we are taken to the office of M. Bacardi, showing him dictating to his secretary, and given a close-up of many bottles of the refreshment for which he is noted. The other units comprise shots of a poppy field in California, a miniature railroad which hauls tourists through the mountains of Wales, and a quartette of cowboys singing "Oh, Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie" against a drop depicting the western plains, but not very successfully. Fair

T. ROY BARNES is the master of ceremonies in this issue, but he's never shown with the actors and actresses figuring in the tour of Hollywood, and most of them must be local newsreel shots. Appearing in this short are Mei Lan Fang, Chinese actor; Mary Pickford, Arthur Lake, Robert Woolsey, Dolores Del Rio, Maurice Chevalier, Buster Keaton and Bert Wheeler. Mildly interesting. Running time, 10 minutes.

Will get by on average bill.

The Body Slam

(Vitaphone Varieties, No. 4123)

Dull

EDDIE LAMBERT, Gene Ledoux and William Irving have the leads in this alleged comedy, centering about a wrestling racket, but they don't earn many laughs. Lambert's forced grimaces are sad to watch, and the story contains few gag situations. Running time, 9 minutes.

Use where other units are strong.

Voice of Hollywood, No. 14

(Tiffany—Talker)

Fair

GEORGE K. ARTHUR is the announcer of Station S-T-A-R in this issue, but it's not so hot. However, the fans who like to see off-the-lot shots of their favorites will get their money's worth, for they will see Frank Fay, Barbara Stanwyck, Eddie Quillan, Edmund Breese, Louise Dresser, Montagu Love, Carmel Myers, Jimmy Finlayson, Vera Gordon, Ben Bard, Ruth Roland and Eddie Lambert. Running time, 10 minutes.

Needs help from other shorts.

Carnival Revue

(Pathe—Talker)

Good

SOME one slipped up on this, for while all the exteriors are circus settings, the interiors are laid in a theatre with the regulation fixings. However, that defect is not sufficient to detract from the fun. T. Roy Barnes as a circus owner and barker, Ruth Hiatt as a dancing girl and Ray Hughes as her suitor manage to put over a number of laughs and the comedy should please generally. A Whoopee Comedy. Directed by Wallace Fox. Running time, 19 minutes.

Okay where fun is needed on a program.

Second Hungarian Rhapsody

(United Artists—Synchronized)

Pleasing

THIS is a pantomimic interpretation of the Hungarian Rhapsody, and another of the pleasing United Artists Featurettes produced by Lothar Menzies and Hugo Riesenfeld. A romantic little number showing the rescue of the fair maiden by her blacksmith lover, after she had been taken captive by a gypsy. It's told against a musical background. Running time, 11 minutes.

Where musical novelty fits in.

Glow Worm

(Screen Song—Paramount)

Clever

ANY audience will get a kick out of this community singing number, one of the clever series made by Max Fleischer. It is based on the famous Glow Worm song, perennial favorite, and there are some clever cartoons, plus the bouncing ball to help the audience join in the singing. Running time, 6 minutes.

For any bill.

Amos 'n' Andy Had To Step Fast

Chicago—Amos 'n' Andy resumed their nightly broadcasts in Hollywood early this week after a two-day interval of silence which ensued while the boys were en route from this city to the Coast. They are scheduled to begin work on the Radio production, "Check and Double Check," at once which, it is estimated, will take them about seven weeks to complete. During this time their nightly broadcasts will originate at a Hollywood station.

The proximity of their home studio, WMAQ, Chicago, to the Northwestern terminal—across the street from the station—was all that made it possible for Correll and Gosden to arrive in Los Angeles according to schedule. They had only four minutes to spare in which to catch the Los Angeles Limited following their last broadcast here.

Settle Copyright Suit by Berlin

Cincinnati, O.—United States District Judge Neven has entered an order dismissing copyright infringement suit of Irving Berlin, Inc., New York, against Robert and Joseph Stern, owners of the Marlowe, Ironton, O., in which the complainant charged that the defendants had violated copyright on a popular song. Settlement of the case has been effected out of court.

Cleveland Exchange Progresses

Cleveland—Work is well under way on the new exchange building, now under construction at Payne Avenue and East 24th Street, which will be occupied by M-G-M, Pathe, and Universal. It is expected that the buildings will be complete the first of August. When these companies move into their own structures, the only national distributors left in the Film building will be Columbia, Educational and Tiffany.

have been shown. From them it is possible to deduce by solving for resistance that

$$R = \frac{E}{I1 + I2} = 5 \text{ ohms}$$

Such a process is too lengthy.

If $I = I1 + I2$

then

$$\frac{E}{R} = \frac{E}{R1} + \frac{E}{R2}$$

$$\frac{1}{R} = \frac{1}{R1} + \frac{1}{R2}$$

which results in the law that

The joint resistance of a parallel combination of resistance is equal to the reciprocal of the sum of the reciprocals of the resistances constituting the branches.

(We refer to the arithmetical review in Lesson 2 for the definition of the reciprocal.)

The above may be shown as

$$R = \frac{1}{\frac{1}{R1} + \frac{1}{R2}}$$ and if we substitute numerical values as before, we have

$$R = \frac{1}{\frac{1}{10} + \frac{1}{10}} = \frac{1}{.1 + .1} = \frac{1}{.2} = 5 \text{ ohms}$$

Seattle Met Gives Use of House to Clubwomen

Seattle—The Publix Metropolitan, one of the leading downtown first-run houses, postponed its opening hour from 11:30 A. M. until 4:00 P. M. for two days during the last week in a novel good-will-building stunt.

The occasion was the gathering in this city of several hundred women from every part of the nation to attend the annual national convention of the Garden Clubs of America. Inasmuch as their headquarters were the Olympic Hotel, in the same block as the Metropolitan, the theatre management donated the use of the house without charge to the Garden Clubs officials for their two business sessions.

Announcements reading, "Through the Courtesy of Paramount Publix, this theatre remains closed until 4:00 P. M. for the Convention of the Garden Clubs of America," were used in all newspaper advertising of the theatre, and attention of the delegates was directed to the kindness of Paramount Publix, operating houses in a majority of the cities from which the delegates arrived. The idea was put across by Robert Blair, Pacific Northwest division manager for Publix, and Star Buell, manager of the Met.

New Theatre for Tampa

Tampa, Fla.—Construction of a new theatre in Ybor City will start Monday, replacing the Rivoli, which was closed and dismanteled three months ago. Work has been held up because a special ordinance had to be passed permitting the closing of an alley. And the matter of finance has taken some time.

High and Low On Music Row

IT DOESN'T take a Robert L. Ripley to discover that the music business is a strange one. Just a few items to prove our contention. Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby have already left for Hollywood to write the book and musical scores for the forthcoming "Amos 'n' Andy production. The picture will be produced by RKO and despite the fact that this firm has its own music publisher, Radio Music Co., the songs from the picture will be published by Harms, Inc., a Warner subsidiary. DeSylva, Brown & Henderson are under contract to write originals for Fox and DeSylva, Brown & Henderson, Inc. will publish the music instead of Fox's own publishing house, the Red Star Music Co., Warners' own half of the Famous Music Corp., publishers to Paramount. Gene Austin, Inc., have organized a new company to sell popular songs for ten cents and the other publishers are hoping that this venture is an overnight success. Funny business, eh?

DeSylva, Brown & Henderson are publishing a book, "True Stories of Famous Songs," written by E. M. Wickes, which will be sold in the 5 and 10 cent stores. Wickes gives the low-down on how 16 of the most famous popular songs were conceived and the result is an interesting narrative which ought to sell to every buyer of sheet music.

Abe Olman, manager of Forster's New York office, was largely responsible for the success of "I Get the Blues When It Rains" and has just taken another "Rain" song by Al Hoffman and Max Rich called "I Don't Mind Walking in the Rain, When I'm Walking in the Rain with You."

Being an ex-gob, Rudy Valle figured that 500 sailors could not be wrong and complied with their request that he warble—beg pardon, the word is croon, "Some Other Girl in Some Other Port," published by Bibo-Lang.

Harms is publishing the scores from two recent First National Vitaphone productions, "Bride of the Regiment" and "Song of the Flame." The songs included in the former are "When Hearts Are Young" by Sigmund Romberg, and "Broken-hearted Lover" and "One Life, One Love," by Al Bryan and Eddie Ward. The songs from "Song of the Flame," which include "Cossack Love Song," "Song of the Flame," "One Little Drink" and "When Love Calls," represent the combined efforts of several of America's leading composers, they being George Gershwin, Herbert Stothart, Otto Harbach, Oscar Hammerstein II, Grant Clarke, Harry Akst and Eddie Ward.

Jack Bregman, general manager of Robbins Music Corp., has just returned from Al Capone's stronghold and seems very pleased with the showing of "Blue Is the Night," "Moon Is Low" and "Should I" in the mid-west metropolis and the vicinity. This writer is satisfied that the firm's latest release "Just A Little Closer" is one of the sweetest tunes ever written and is headed for the big time.

Pat Flaherty, general manager of Red Star Music Co., recently returned, and shows no effects of his illness contracted while on the coast. He has, however, returned with several promising songs from the new season's Fox products. If they are as good as "I'm in the Market for You," which has held a prominent spot in the list of best sellers for some time, this house is going to enjoy a prosperous 1930.

Paramount Next To Ban Musicals As "Sales Poison"

Hollywood—Quickly following the lead of Warner Brothers when the latter came out against production of musical operettas Paramount is reported also to have banned production of any further heavy filmusicals.

According to inside report, Paramount's department of distribution informed the Coast studio officials that the musical operettas were "poison" with both exhibitors and the public at this time.

In view of this, Paramount halted preparations for filming "Her Wedding Night," which was already to go into rehearsal with Jeanette MacDonald, Charles Ruggles and Robert Chisholm heading the cast.

In announcing the postponement of "Her Wedding Night" Paramount stated that prior contracts of Chisholm called him East, necessitating delay in production to obtain a suitable substitute. In view of Paramount's attitude towards musical operettas at this time, it is expected that the picture will be shelved until the public's views towards operettas changes considerably.

Darmour Shoots Six Dane-Arthur Comedies

Hollywood—Having set all stories in advance, Larry Darmour is setting a production record in making the series of Karl Dane-George Arthur series of comedies for RKO release. The comedy team has finished a total of six two reelers in eight weeks. Speed was necessary on account of conditions whereby Dane was loaned to Darmour for a two-months' period from M-G-M studios, and the lanky comedian is scheduled to go into features after that time.

Although fast shooting was maintained, ample story preparation in advance of start of the series allowed productions to reach high standard set by Darmour for the series.

Fox "Props" Graduates Into Feature Roles

Hollywood—After viewing rushes of "The Big Trail," Fox has placed John Wayne, leading player in that picture, under term contract. Wayne, a former property man on the Fox lot, was selected for "The Big Trail" by Director Raoul Walsh when the latter saw him working on a set hustling props.

Upon completion of the Fox film, Wayne will be featured in two productions: "Wyoming Wonder" and "Alcatraz," under direction of A. F. Erickson.

Polish Industry Organizing

Warsaw—Producers and exhibitors are formulating plans for the organization of a co-opeartive trade association, similar to the German unit. The new association will produce, running all product first in members' houses and then booking in theatres of non-members.

Before the "Mike" In N. Y. Studios

BY FAR the most ambitious two-reeler ever attempted at the eastern Vitaphone studios, and occupying three stages, was produced when "The Nightingale," a night club drama, was reeled under the direction of Roy Mack. The story, written by Wallace Sullivan and Burnet Hershey with music by Harold Levy, features Vivienne Osborne, supported by Lysle Talbot, Austin Fairman and Pat O'Brien.

Murray Roth, director-in-chief of Warners' Flatbush picture plant, firmly believes in novelties and with "Believe It Or Not" and "The Snooze Reel" series well under way, has added "The Modern Fairy Tales" series to the Vitaphone Varieties program. Harold Beaudine will direct this latest novelty, with A. Dorian Otvos writing the dialogue and E. B. Du Par in charge of photography.

Famous bonds—U. S., mortgage, building, Bottled In, and Lillian Bond, soon to appear in Arthur Hammerstein's "Bird of Paradise." She has just starred in the variety, "Putting It On," under Arthur Hurley's direction. Miss Bond was supported by Bobby Jarvis, Peggy Shannon and Walter Pearson.

Ripley, take notice. On Sunday, June 29, 1930, E. B. Du Par, chief cameraman, and Ray Foster, another "man behind the lens," made a trip to Bantam Lake, Conn., and TOOK PICTURES. That's wussin the letter-carrier's hike on his day off, ain't it?

It happens every time that Old Sol does his "coming out" act. The boys (the girls, too) at the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio every once in a while become languid and a spell comes over them, giving them that well known far-away look in their eyes. Nor are they victims of the affliction which the famous Samuel Johnson called "ignoble morbid propensity to procrastinate." No, kind readers, no. They're merely gazing on the spot, now a parking space for automobiles but which in the good old Vitagraph days was a swimming tank, used in the filming of most of Annette Kellerman's pictures.

For the first time in many months only one feature was in production at the Paramount New York studios this week. "Heads Up," starring Buddy Rogers, was completed last week, leaving Nancy Carroll's "Laughter" the sole picture, although "The Best People" is expected to go into work next week under Fred Newmeyer's direction.

Frank Morgan has in the last few months portrayed an important role in "Dangerous Nan McGrew" and "Queen High," is now appearing in "Laughter" and is slated to join the cast of "The Best People." Despite this strenuous screen routine, he has continued to star simultaneously in the New York stage success, "Topaze."

Walton Butterfield, short subject writer at the Paramount New York studio, has written six original and six adaptations in the past eight weeks. Victor Moore, Willie and Eugene Howard, Armida, George Dewey Washington and Ginger Rogers have appeared in his stories.

* * *

Give this li'l gal a big hand. Peggy Quis, the ever smiling script girl at Paramount, was a great help to Ed Sutherland during production on "Sap From Syracuse," starring Jack Oakie. She also kept tabs on the Ginger Rogers short, "Office Blues." (What will my wife say?)

THE STUDIO SLEUTH.

Warners Acquire Four in Chicago Area; 60 is Goal

Warners' theatre invasion of the Chicago metropolitan area, destined to bring about 60 more theatres under the Warner wing eventually, made some progress this week when, it was announced, four houses in northern Indiana had been picked up and negotiations are under way for a fifth in the same section. The latest acquisitions are the Hoosier at Whiting, the American and Indiana at Indiana Harbor, and the Jefferson at Goshen. Results of the dickering now under way between Warners and Independents in Indiana will be the acquisition of one or more houses in Elkhart, it is said.

That Warners are combing this territory for indie houses in strategic locations is admitted by representatives of the company here. The entire fourth floor of the new Warner exchange building in this city is being put in readiness for occupancy by the company's theatre force which will operate the new acquisitions in the metropolitan area. The probable scope of these operations may be estimated by the fact that identical space on the third floor of the building has been found to be sufficient to house the entire distributing activities here of botn Warner Bros. and First National.

Further indications of theatre buying activity in the area are furnished by the Chicago visits of Dan Michalove of Spyros Skouras's office and the frequent New York jaunts of Jimmy Coston, slated to direct Warners' theatre operations here. Observers regard the activities of the two as having but one significance, that of progress being made in negotiations for purchases in this section.

M-G-M to Move

Final arrangements for the removal of the M-G-M exchange from its present quarters at 831 South Wabash Ave. to the Paramount exchange building at 1325 South Wabash were completed last week during a visit by John S. MacLeod, in charge of M-G-M exchange maintenance. The home office man announced that the move would be made early this fall when Paramount vacates its present exchange building for its new quarters at Michigan Ave. and 13th St., now nearing completion.

Belpark, Cosmo Figure in Fire Law Test Cases

Court hearings of alleged violations of the city fire laws by the Belpark and Cosmo theatres were continued to July 23, after preliminary testimony had been heard in municipal court here last week. The two theatres will provide test cases for twenty-four other Chicago theatres against whom similar charges have been brought by the Chicago Fire Prevention Bureau, which is seeking to prove that the acoustical insulating materials employed by the theatres are inflammable.

The insulating materials used by the Belpark and Cosmo are typical of those in use in the other theatres. Test case victories for the two houses, it is believed, will result in dismissal of the complaints against the other twenty-four theatres using similar materials. August 6 has been named for hearing of the complaints against the latter twenty-four houses.

Chicago Warner Club Stages Golf Meet

The Chicago Warner Club this week launched its summer entertainment program with an organization golf tournament at Cog-Hill Golf club. Low gross honors were captured by T. Tyrell (Highland theatre) with an 83. The lucky draw prize was won by Frank Reimer, Vitaphone cashier, who turned in a 93. Blind bogie foursome prize winners were: Carl Leserman, 85; Tom Reidy, 86; Clarence Parrish, 80; K. Schaffer, 85; Tom Gilliam, 97, and C. Lindstrom, 97. Al Blocker, Vitaphone booker, captured the high gross with a well played 135. A dinner was staged for the golfers at Cog-Hill in the evening.

The second Chicago Warner Club outing will be a picnic dinner, August 2, at which 300 members and their families are expected.

Rosenwald Batting for Herbel as "U" Manager

Gil Rosenwald, assistant western sales director for Universal, has been pinch-hitting as branch manager here during the illness of Henry Herbel. Herbel, who went to the hospital several weeks ago with pneumonia, is improving slowly. He was expected to be able to return to his home during the week past after which his orders are to take ample time for convalescence.

42 Theatres Closed in Chicago District For Summer Due to Heat; Breaks Record

Tanned

Chicago — An epidemic of sunburn complaint all over Film Row with the golfers the worst sufferers. The origin of Sam Gorelick's case remains a mystery since he's not a golfer and doesn't fish, yet has the best, or, according to your viewpoint, the worst, case on record.

Chicago Citizens Can't Endure the Endurance Fliers

Chicago—The four Hunter brothers, with a sister thrown in for good measure, holders of the new world's endurance flying record, nose-dived during their week at the Palace Theatre and finished on the bargain counter. The negligible draw with which the family was accredited at the Palace resulted in R-K-O's failure to exercise its option on the later services of the quintet and they were, in a manner of speaking, thrown up for grabs by their manager, Clyde Elliott.

Essaness Theatres reached for them, but not too high, it is understood. The family was given a week end (Sat. and Sun.) at the Pantheon and Center theatres; after which they were anybody's.

The scramble for a cut-in on the fliers' coin, which began almost before their plane had landed, is said to be the explanation of their box-office depreciation. Local newspapermen and photographers walked out on the fliers after meeting with rabid interference from a swarm of publicity men, press agents, bookers and miscellaneous chiselers who had annexed the farmer fliers the minute they touched the ground. The result was the Hunter family's publicity portion was short-weighted, and the rank commercialism into which the feat was transformed disgusted the public to an extent that the box-office value of the fliers was about on a par with a second rate acrobatic team.

The public's impression of commercial taint was further enhanced by the poor stage appearance of the quintet. The Hunters—gawky country boys—were led onto the stage singly and left to be stared at by the audiences. Ill at ease and practically wordless, their entertainment value was nil. Derogatory word-of-mouth advertising finished what the chiselers had begun.

Film Board June Report Lists Hot Weather Casualties; Twelve Change Hands

Chicago—The disastrous effects of hot weather on theatre business in this section is reflected in the June report on theatre closings issued recently by the Chicago Film Board of Trade. The report lists 42 theatres in the Illinois district as closing either indefinitely or for the summer. "Anxious to make the scene realistic, Bill actually did put plenty of red pepper in the beans. He took a mouthful and made a bee-line for the stream. He shot his head under the water but when he brought it up, Webb, the director, noticed he was gulping and trying to keep his face away from the camera.

"Investigation showed Bill clutching a baby trout between his teeth. The story doesn't say, but we suppose the entire company dined on trout that evening."

Language Bars U. S. Talkers in Little Nations

The first sound films displayed in the local cinemas were considered a matter of curiosity by the public, and, as a result, all performances were shown to full houses for two weeks. The subsequent sound films did not meet with such enthusiasm, and considerable adverse criticism was heard regarding the reproduction, the value of sound films in general, and the foreign-language problem. The opinion of the trade regarding sound films is that "talkies" in a foreign language will not become popular, but that films with singing and music (revues, etc.), if satisfactorily reproduced, may meet with the general approval of the public. One of the leading local picture experts said that sound films consisting of about 80 per cent music, 18 per cent singing, and two per cent dialogue are likely to meet with the greatest success in Latvia.

Some of the leading cinemas in Riga that are not equipped with sound film reproducers, and a few of those in the large provincial towns, will probably be wired in 1930.

It is believed that not more than one or two feature films and a number of news reels, all of only local importance, will be produced in Latvia in 1930.

There is no present plan nor demand for the establishment of studios with sound recording equipment in Latvia.

No legislation inimical to the interests of American films or equipment has been passed in Latvia, nor does it seem that such legislation is contemplated. However, the attitude of the Film Censoring Board toward sound films is rather uncertain, and difficulties may arise. There are no special laws governing the censoring of sound films, and no difficulties have been encountered in getting such films passed. The basic Latvian law regarding silent films stipulates that all titles must be in the Lettish language. Titles in other languages may follow, but these are considered only as translations and of secondary importance. Whether an exception in this respect will be made in the new law on sound films is to be seen. This problem is being discussed by a parliamentary commission. Whether or not the insertion of local news reels in the program will continue to be obligatory and whether entertainment other than the display of films in cinemas will be permitted is also being considered by the commission.

"The Golden Rule"

Omaha, Neb.

IF the trip to the coast will be productive of very few things, it will at least, reveal the interesting fact that showmen out in the West are greater believers in the Golden Rule than their brothers back East.

"Do Unto Others As You Would Have Others Do Unto You," (maybe I've not hit on the exact words, but the idea is there just the same). It's darned good policy both from the standpoint of manager to manager and manager to superior.

It was my pleasure to meet several of the district managers working out this way, especially between Chicago and Omaha, and my first impression was the lack of domination displayed by those D.M.'s, I had grown accustomed to around New York.

They seem to be anxious, out here, to create a friendly feeling between themselves and the house managers under their supervision, with the happy result that everyone gets a great kick out of his job and works with a spirit almost entirely unknown in the East.

But the most important point of my discovery was that these D.M.'s out here are getting much better results out of their men and their theatres. They seemed less desirous of constantly changing men, they appeared to be building up a real business instead of just a "flash in the pan" to impress their home offices.

And did the managers appreciate them? Say, it would have done your heart good to see the way they talked to each other. You would think that they were old friends (and the chances are that they were). But it was the sort of friendship that didn't overstep the bounds.

Back East I noted one peculiar thing that I have yet to encounter on this trip. The managers back there were not very liberal in their opinion or praise of brother managers. Their pet game was always telling you what was the matter with this, that or the other guy. So busy were they doing that, they failed completely to find out what was the matter with themselves. Many a man dropping in to see if a job was open, bitterly criticized some other manager on his former circuit. They could never understand why so and so was kept and they were let out.

Well, in my humble opinion, the reason is mighty plain. Mr. So & So was busy attending to his job, so he is still working, while Mr. Bellyacher is out pounding the pavements.

Must be something to that Golden Rule business after all.

James C. Quinn Wowed Them With Special Kid Show

Every showman, no matter what part of the world he is located in, knows that the greatest asset that a theatre can have is good-will. He is constantly striving to keep his house before the public in such a manner that they will always talk favorably about it. Many means are used by the showman to do this. He runs benefit shows, kiddie matinees, co-operative shows and all other kinds possible. One of his biggest is the kid shows, for he knows that it is going to make a favorable impression on the youngsters' parents when he invites the kids to see a show free of charge. James C. Quinn, manager of the Warner Theatre in Fresno, Calif., did it and the results more than justified the time he put in while planning the affair.

When he booked in a Rin-Tin-Tin picture, Quinn felt that the time was ripe to gather a load of good-will and publicity for his house. He went to one of the local newspapers and laid a plan before them whereby the paper was invited to act as co-sponsor for a kiddie party that would be open to every kid in Fresno. In addition to this he persuaded them to run an essay contest on "Why I Love Dogs," which contest was to start after the kids had witnessed the picture and for the best composition on the subject, the winning youngster was to be presented with a police dog. The paper agreed to the plans and Quinn went ahead with his party.

In the next two days every youngster in Fresno knew about the free party, so thoroughly did Quinn cover every angle. The paper came through with plenty of pictures and stories. On the day of the free party five thousand kids stormed the doors of the theatre and it was necessary to run two shows. The papers ran front page stories on the event and took many pictures of the crowd of youngsters. When the show was over and the bunch of kids went home to the evening meal, you may be sure that their shining faces told more stories than words, as, in their youthful trebles they endeavored to describe the hectic moments of the battle they had witnessed on the screen, and unconsciously building up good-will for Quinn's house. We feel that it is not necessary at this time to go into any more detail about a party of this sort as every real showman recognizes the value of it and if local conditions permit, he will make use of it sooner or later.

Nicholls Gives Us Some Dope On Show Selling In Africa

In response to the many letters received at headquarters asking us to secure a little dope on how the foreign showmen merchandise their attractions, we shot out a batch of messages to the men operating houses in various parts of the world. Our latest reply is from R. K. Nicholls, manager of the Grand Theatre in Grahamstown, S. Africa, a showman who needs no further introduction at this time as his corking work has been shown on these pages before.

In discussing his house, Mr. Nicholls says:

"This is the only theatre in a small town of some 7,000 white inhabitants. It is essentially an educational centre being the situation of many schools as well as that of the famous Rhodes University. Now to the theme song of the letter. As I know well over three-quarters of my patrons more or less personally, my treatment of them differs to a certain extent with each individual. Some I welcome as I would friends to my own home, some I treat with the deference and honor due to great men! I am always ready to have a short chat with any and all for a short time in the vestibule and make a point of being well up in all local topics. I have gained the appreciation and, what is almost more important, the regular patronage of several very elderly ladies and gentlemen by personally conducting and helping them to their seats. Once my patrons have passed into their seats there is little else for me to do, as they all have their own particular, favorite seats. However, when I see any new patrons or strangers entering the theatre I always make it a point of approaching them when they are seated and asking them if they are comfortable, etc. If they are sitting in a draught zone or an otherwise inconvenient place, I point out the fact and suggest more comfortable seats. In fact I aim (as all keen managers doubtless do) at the ideal of politeness, consideration and practical helpfulness.

"I have introduced two items of interest into my programmes which have proved very popular indeed. The first is a musical interlude once a week (on Fridays) during which solos—both classical and dance, songs, etc.) are rendered by members of my orchestra. The second is the screening of the latest sports news during the programmes as the news comes through on the wireless."

Milk Bottle Cap Stunt Is Creating Plenty of Comment

Giving Mobile, Ala., a run for its money must have been the intention behind the stunt that Harry Marchand pulled recently to merchandise "Hold Everything" when he tied up with a local auto race driver on an endurance stunt, which sure proved a wow.

He tied up with the News-Item for readers on front page for nine days on the "Daredevil" Derby—always mentioning that the driver would sleep in the lobby of the Saenger Theatre at the conclusion of his 100-hour drive. Other tie-ups made it possible for the furnishing of a bedroom suite, a mattress and other necessities in the lobby for the convenience of the driver. The company furnishing the mattress also held a guessing contest on how long the 'driver' would sleep. One of the local beverage companies served soft drinks to patrons coming out of the show between 2 and 4 P. M. and also to "Daredevil Derby" on his drive.

It was estimated that over 2,500 people were waiting for more than an hour in front of the theatre to greet the endurance driver at the conclusion of his 100-hour drive. The furniture company that furnished the bedroom suite for the lobby also made an announcement over the radio relative to the picture, theatre, playdates and that the bedroom suite was especially selected by "Daredevil Derby." A stunt that got more than ordinary attention was the hanging of seven alarm clocks on the edge of the marquee with cards attached to them reading, "Time to see 'HOLD EVERYTHING'." These clocks were set to alarm every five minutes.

That song hit "You're the Cream in my Coffee," had nothing on the dairy tie-up that he promoted in Mobile, Ala., for the simple reason that his stunt was also the cream in his coffee.

The tie-up was effected so that the accumulation of ten milk bottle caps would permit any child under twelve years of age to the theatre when they were presented at the box office on Saturday before 6 P. M., with the adults being included in the stunt by being permitted free admission between 11 A. M. and 1 P. M. on the same day with the presentation of twenty-five caps.

The accumulation of ten milk bottle caps admitted one child under 12 years of age when presented at the box office on Saturdays before 6 P. M. 25 caps admitted one adult between 11 and 1 P. M. on Saturdays; the theatre's admission price at this time being 25 cents. The milk company advertised the stunt by announcements twice weekly over the radio in addition to passing out handbills and window cards to all stores which they serve. In addition to defraying all the publicity expense, the Company payed the theatre full price for the tickets issued.

An usher was stationed in the lobby close to the box office to count the milk caps—giving the person a card for the cashier to issue a ticket on same. By having an usher handle this work, it saved the cashier from being troubled with counting the caps or getting her hands soiled. Although the tie-up was only in its second week, the milk company was more than pleased with results and hoped to continue the arrangement indefinitely.

The picture went over to big box-office receipts and the crowds of standees in the house made Marchand feel that the next time he planned a campaign he'd have to hold everything to make sure that he didn't give the city too much. Right, Harry?

Lew Levey's Local Stunt Had People Flocking To House

Cashing in on local events is one of the things that has become quite a habit with Lew Levey, manager of the Dyckman Theatre in New York City. No matter what sort of celebration is going on you may be sure that the Dyckman is going to get a lot of publicity and good-will.

Working on his well-known theory, Lew stepped out and gathered some more good-will and additional business for his house by tying up two schools in the district and a swimming pool. The local schools were planning to hold a June Walk and Flag Day celebration at one of the large parks. Over 4,000 children and adults were expected to be on hand. Lew persuaded the officials of the swimming pool to shoot over 900 feet of the event, for which he promised them an ad on his screen.

When the celebration began the school principal gave the idea a good send-off and announced that the pictures would be shown at the Dyckman for an entire week. The announcement was greeted with interest and when the film was run off at the theatre Lew enjoyed the pleasure of seeing a packed house on the showing.

This stunt is typical of the many that Lew engineers in his section of the Big City and we know that we are going to pass along a lot more of them in the near future. Right, Lew?

Harry Landau Of Tientsin, China, Enrolls In Club

We want to extend a cordial welcome to another foreign showman who has just joined the Round Table Club, Harry Landau. Mr. Landau is the manager of the Gaiety Theatre in Tientsin, China.

The Gaiety is the most modern theatre in the city and features a policy of sound and talking pictures. The house is the only air-conditioned and fire-proof amusement place in the city, built according to modern requirements. Western Electric equipment is used in the presentation of the films.

Mr. Landau tells us that he would be glad to communicate with any of the Club members providing they write in English as that is the only language he is familiar with; so if any of you would like to learn about conditions in China, drop him a line. Incidentally, in his position he has to cater to one of the most cosmopolitan elements in the city and for that reason has to be more than on his toes at all times.

Since he promises to keep us posted on his future work, we look forward to hearing more from him very soon. Keep us posted Mr. Landau, so that we can shoot the information along. And you might send us one of your photos with your next contribution.

CHICAGO!

With Kane on the job it is hardly necessary for me to attempt to cover this town, but just the same I've been having a great time mixing with some of the crowd and I can't resist the temptation of passing something along.

As usual, Jack Hess was as busy as a one-armed paperhanger with the well-known itch, but not too busy to talk show-shop for awhile. Hess has some marvelous slants on the business and is managing to get everything possible out of it for the benefit of the part of the country under his supervision. If you know your R-K-O, then you'll agree with us. I always get a great kick out of picking up a Chicago paper to see what the latest Hess ads look like. Never disappointed, either, and to prove it we are going to show you a pair of corkers that could be revamped for any man's town.

Bill Adler looked as full of pep as ever and apparently he is. I'd hate to get into a scrap with that baby. Wow! what a wallop he must pack in those Dempsey arms of his. Certainly felt good to meet those boys again and we'll be looking forward to the next time we can make Chicago.

Anybody with the queer notion that New York has a monopoly on theatrical printing plants ought to take a jump to this town and look over the National Program & Printing plant. Efficiency, plus the most modern equipment, is the answer and under Steinberg's eagle eye they are turning out some great stuff for their accounts. There's pep in that outfit and you'll be hearing lots more about them, too.

Irv. Mack, of Filmack, has his hands full doping out new ideas and copy for his many friends in the theatre operating business, but he was sport enough to consent to our running some of it in future issues of the Club pages as suggestions for good institutional trailers.

But, whenever we talk of Chicago, we must always remember that as far as this town is concerned, Hal Young of National Screen Service is the Prince of Hosts. He was only an hour ahead of us in reaching Chi. but he found time, nevertheless, to show us a grand time. Gosh, if he is selling trailers the way he sells this town to strangers—well, no wonder National is knocking 'em dead. Great organization he's got functioning out here; try looking it over, you'll be surprised. It's a dirty trick to play on Young, but if you ever get out this way let Hal play host. He thrives on it and you'll be having a marvelous time.

Always plenty doing here theatrically, so we're on our way to see some of the other boys. If the machine guns start popping—we won't be in the way of the bullets—we run too fast.

His Kiddie Trade Continues To Pay For Billy Stillman

From what Billy Stillman is doing at the Ritz Theatre in Jersey City, it looks to us, from where we're sitting, that he is going to have that house rating with the best of the class B's before long.

One of the most important moves that he has made to date is his kiddie club that meets every Saturday morning, and on the first day that the club met over 1,500 members were enrolled.

The gag ties in the homes, schools and the theatre. Each child who becomes a member receives a card which makes him a member in good standing just as long as he behaves himself at school and at home. Parents and teachers are informed that the theatre will cooperate with them to help keep the children on good conduct. In return for this, the theatre receives a plug from the teachers and the homes.

The reward for good conduct and attendance at the theatre for ten consecutive weeks is free admittanne to a special "honor matinee," at which a full program is shown.

The kids are enthusiastic about the idea of the free matinee and as a result are enrolling other youngsters by the score. All that Billy puts out for is the cost of the tickets and when he can achieve the results he is getting who cares about the trivial cost the printing incurs. We are glad to note that Billy is hitting it well over at the Ritz and we want him to know that work of the sort he is turning out can result in only one thing—bigger and better box office.

Just to prove, once again, that all the good showmen are not in these United States we take pleasure in presenting (as the producer would say) three photographs showing how the Grand Splendid Theatre in Buenos Aires, Argentina, arranges attractive and beautiful displays.

At a quick glance you would almost believe you were looking at one of your own local theatres, and even if you were to try and pick this work to pieces you would have your hands full, and then some. Notice the immense face of Marilyn Miller above the marquee and how it is flooded at night with bright lighting. The flood light is located right below the face at the edge of the marquee, and makes a beautiful job.

The middle photo shows another part of this fine display and if you will look closely, you will note the cutout dancing figure of Miss Miller. Just what the crowd is standing there for is not clear, but it must be something good.

The bottom picture is a close-up of a large layout, combining attractiveness in design with a still from the picture, all captioned and arranged so as to make the prospective patrons look it over.

We have received many examples of live-wire showmanship from all over the world, but this type of stuff is certainly outstanding in many ways. Incidentally, this is one of the theatres owned and operated by Max Glucksman down in South America. Here's hoping we hear lots more about those theatres and their activities in all lines of theatre operation and publicity stunts, so that we can keep their fellow showmen informed.

Limerick Promoted Publicity Covering Three Big States

With his house boasting a policy of "equipped to play any kind of an attraction," that alone should be sufficient evidence for us to know that George Limerick, Assistant Manager of the Coleman Theatre in Miami, Okla., must have a good working knowledge of show business; but he decided to prove it to us and so by means of photos we are able to show you what he did to exploit "Byrd at the South Pole." Before we start though, we'd like you to know that the first picture is George, himself.

The oil company that furnished Byrd with fuel for his trip to Antarctica have been carrying on a national exploitation campaign in connection with the picture and have centered the campaign around the party's return to America. Knowing this, Limerick kept his eyes open and when the company broke with a full page ad in his local paper, he immediately set out to tie up the various dealers and distributors of the product. He called upon the local warehouse manager and arranged to place banners on the company's trucks, as the photo will show you. These trucks covered the entire Tri-State district of Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri. The twelve-foot banners were placed on the sides of the trucks and gave plenty of play to the picture.

In addition to this stunt, Limerick also arranged to tie-up every window in town which was owned by a dealer of the oil company's product. On the opening day of the picture, full page ads were carried in the local paper and on the closing day another special advertising layout was made up that served as a credit page for both the theatre and the oil company. The campaign went over to big success and when Limerick and Mr. Griffin, the manager saw the crowds flocking into the house they knew that showmanship is certainly a valuable asset. We want to welcome George into the Club and we hope that he is going to be a very active member.

Latta Is A Frequent User Of This; It Must Be Good

News is news, and when C. J. Latta, managing director of the Roger Sherman Theatre in New Haven, Conn., pulls a stunt, that stunt, no matter how small it is, will always mean something to his box-office, as witness the stunt below.

When he played "The Return of Dr. Fu Manchu," he used the dope capsule gag, which, as every showman knows, consists of inserting a small herald into a capsule so that only the word dope can be seen. The other stunt that Latta used on the picture, and one that clicked very well, was to hand out cards plugging the film, which were labeled, "The Chinese Mystery of New Haven." The cards were all numbered and a note requested that any person holding corresponding numbers to call at the theatre and receive free tickets. The first person to respond was given a cash sum.

In order to pep up interest in his stunt, Latta had a girl calling persons on the phone for three days prior to the opening and asking whether they had secured any of the Chinese Mystery cards that the theatre was distributing. This, not only put over a message, but started others calling to see if they could find the duplicate cards, and in this manner a lot of favorable comment was created and Latta's showmanship came through with another big box-office week.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

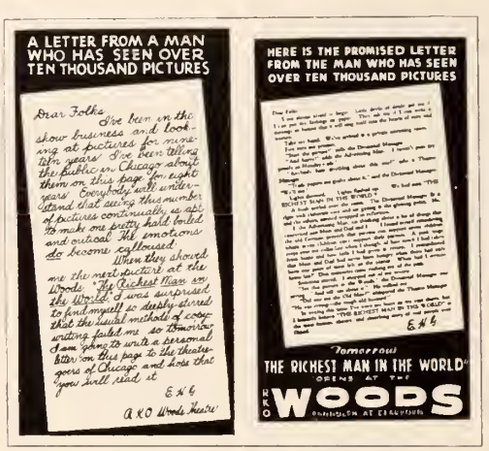
J. Noronha, Jr. Of Hong Kong Joins; Look At His Work

Here's the dope we promised you on the work being turned out by J. Noronha, Jr., advertising manager of the Queen's Theatre in Hong Kong, China, and Mr. Chan, manager of the house.

The Queen's Theatre, operated by the Hong Kong Amusements, Ltd., is the only sound equipped theatre in the colony. Western Electric installation is featured. The house seats 1,100 and the prices range from a buck and a half to 40 cents Mexican money, which doesn't mean an awful lot of dough in American cash. The shows run two hours in length, four times a day with two changes weekly. The house plays United Art, Metro Goldwyn, Fox and Universal pictures.

When they played "Putting on the Ritz," Noronha and Chan pulled some samples of merchandising that rate credit any place. Two weeks before the picture opened teasers were inserted daily in the newspapers. The ads started off small and increased in size until the house broke with a half page ad a week before the opening and for the rest of the time and during the run three columns were used daily. The trailer for the picture was used for two weeks in advance. Tie-ups were arranged with the various music stores to advertise the song hits of the film and the result of these tie-ups can be seen in the layout of ads we are showing and about which we will have more to say elsewhere in this article. At present we want to call your attention to the corking front that was created by Chan. A special cut-out of Richman, flanked by dancing girls, was placed against a modernistic background, and what an effect it created. It is impossible for the cut we are showing to do it full justice, but we judge from the photo we have on hand that the effect was done in black and white, and the simplicity of the setting enhances its value tremendously, achieving a selling effect that would bring anybody in.

Now take a look at the ad layout we are showing and you'll see how showmanship in the Old World is progressing. We want to point out to you the novel way they have of enumerating the various shots in the newsreel, in order that every possible selling angle be presented before the readers and prospective patrons. The judicious use of scene and ad mats, coupled with copy, gives the desired selling punch to all of the ads.



In the layout you will also notice the special and very showmanlike manner in which the theme songs as well as the film itself is plugged. Heralds are printed in black on white, both sides on good stock paper. The top of the herald bears the attraction and play date, with the rest of the space being devoted to the theme song plugs. A song is printed on the front and back. This angle enables the showmen to plant the heralds in all of the music stores, in the dance halls and other places in the vicinity. We think that if you will give this angle a little consideration you will decide to make use of it yourself in connection with some of your future musical or other attractions.

Another slant which these showmen use, and one that is paying them dividends in free publicity is by tying up with the local music dealers who run ads, as the cut shows, plugging the picture and the records which they have on sale. This gag has met with great favor and the dealers are more than pleased with the results. We want to thank Mr. Noronha and Mr. Chan for letting us see their work and we know that they are going to keep us posted so that we can pass along these mighty interesting accounts of their activities to their fellow Club members who are just as interested as we in learning about their merchandising. And, by the way, Mr. Noronha, how about sending us in a photo of yourself and Mr. Chan when you shoot us your next contribution?

Competition Was Taken For A Ride By Hess' Ace Ads

We assume that you are all on the lookout for new and different slants in order that your newspaper advertising be as effective as possible, and with that thought in mind we are passing along something we picked up in Chicago and which we suspect originated with none other than Jack Hess of the RKO outfit. Look it over and see if what he has created cannot be fixed up to fit with some picture you have coming along.

No doubt about the "different" slant standing out head and shoulders above the theatre ads on a page packed full of 'em. It gets away from the usual class of advertising and makes the readers wonder what it is all about. From what they tell me in Chicago, this one had been responsible for plenty of talking among the cash customers down around the Loop. No wonder. Just picture a theatre that carried a wallop of an ad all the time, coming along with a gag of of this kind.

We have not come across many of these "different" ads in quite a while but we would sure like to see many more of its kind. Some years ago we used a box idea in which the man who previewed the pictures for a small New England circuit expressed an opinion something along these lines. It was not in the form of a letter or a "rave," but merely gave an honest expression of opinion from someone who was supposed to be rather hard boiled when it came to looking at pictures.

Just like Hess' gag, it clicked for good returns and if we play up the importance and value of this type of material, it's because we know from actual experience that it will help out the b.o. providing you select the proper kind of picture to tie it in with. Be mighty careful about lending this sort of advertising to a "cluck," the picturegoers are too smart and it will react in a way that won't do your house an awful lot of good.

Maybe if some of you boys would spend a few cents once in a while for some Chicago papers you might pick up many a new idea to pep up your advertising copy.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

AN EXHIBITOR IN HOLLYWOOD

We can't bring Hollywood to you, so we'll take you to Hollywood. So pack up your imaginary suit-case and take a trip through Movieland with Chick Lewis. He'll give you his impressions as he sees things while drifting from studio to studio and from theatre to theatre. Some of it you can take seriously and then again there is some you must take with a grain of humor. But it's all in fun and maybe a bit of it will be educational as well. Let's go! Oke?

IF FIRST impressions count, and with me they generally do, I'm going to like this town. Why? Well, particularly because there is a type of showmanship being displayed that actually fascinates anyone in the business.

In Chicago you would be impressed with the large deluxe houses, their colorful front displays and their gigantic electric signs. Here, the dignity and beauty of the houses, especially in the Hollywood section, immediately lifts you to a different plane. And, of course, how would one spend his first evening in this city but to go to the Chinese Theatre.

It has been my privilege to visit many marvelous theatres, but so far, there has been nothing to compare with this unusual amusement palace. It was so different from anything I had seen before that I could hardly keep my mind on the show. The impressive entrance, with its Chinese attendants, from carriage man to doormen and pages, all carrying out the atmosphere of the house.

As for the inside, well, you would really have to see it yourself to appreciate it, but to me it was a revelation. The heavy incense creates the unseen background for what the eye encounters and what the eye takes in is enough to make you stare as only a "foreigner" can stare. Figures of Chinese mandarins, etc., so life-like and realistic that one expects them to walk away from their appointed posts, and when one of the ushers stood still for a few moments, you were at a loss to know whether she was another figure or really alive.

For "Hell's Angels" the immense open front was equipped with airplanes and other accessories of the flying phase of the war and altogether the effect was so good that even a little disappointment over the show and the picture could not stop me from enjoying my visit to the Chinese Theatre.

It's a Great Town

BUT, talking about Hollywood itself, you can get many laffs out of it, so don't pass up a trip to this part of the movie world if you can ever promote a vacation for yourself out this way. One thing you will certainly notice is the way everybody looks at one another. They constantly seem to be trying to recognize you as some sort of a celebrity (whatever that may be) and after a while you get that way yourself. I know that I entered into the pastime with a real zest. In fact, any time I spotted a likely prospect for celebrity honors, I gave him the double stare, but hell, I always dismissed him as a candidate and started scouting around with my eyes for some more prospects.

Walking down Hollywood Blvd., early in the evening, I almost went cross-eyed trying to find some of the movie stars that are supposed to be running around loose and springing out from behind all the ash cans. But nary a star did I spot, then to cap the climax after an hour of hunting (yep, it's a great pastime) I stopped to light a cigar and heard someone say, "There goes Joan Crawford," and I almost broke my neck with a quick twist, only to see the rear end of an elaborate car speeding away. Wot a life, boys, wot a life.

And all that stuff we had heard about concerning the "yes men" of Hollywood vanished when we observed a certain well known player, who is financially independent, come back at a caustic director with a belligerant "Yeah?"

Star Gazing a Great Game

BUT, even an exhibitor likes to get an eyeful of these "names" which cost us plenty (plus percentage) and I made up my mind that I was going to get my share. So back to the Roosevelt Hotel I trotted and taking up a choice spot in the lobby I was determined to see what there was to be seen. (Note: I just washed my eyes out for the skatey-eighth time). Well, to make a sad story short, I must have been outaluck. Many came, and many went, but I'm doggoned if I could recognize anybody in the mob. Must have held down that spot for hours, 'cause the next thing I knew someone was tapping my shoulder to remind me that hotel lobbies were not popular for napping purposes.

Well, I'm young (no wise cracks solicited) and maybe before I leave this city of whatchamacallit, I'll get to see some of the lights of the screen even if I have to start camping on their doorsteps. There's an idea, boys. We'll take a basket of lunch and a pup tent and set it up on the front lawn of some famous actress (note, the gender please, I'm no fool) until said famous actress comes home or leaves the house. Might end up in the hoosegow, but whatinell's the use of coming all the way across the burning country (and I mean burning too) if you can't grab a look at someone worth raving about. Sez me.

Studio Visiting Is Next

I OUGHT to have plenty to rave about within the next few days. Thanks to the courtesies extended by the Publicity Boys of the various lots. Started off with a visit to Culver City and the M-G-M Studios. Wow, whatalayont they have, but the only trouble seems to be that you can never see anyone about the place. There's a gag for you. Seriously, I can't begin to figure out what all those people do at that studio. The lunch room was jammed to overflowing and the studio streets and alleys all held their crowded quotas.

As one exhibitor to another, we'll surely have to pay big money for our product, how can we ever try and cut down the cost with so many people dependent upon the theatre-owners for their livelihood. Just think, boys, suppose we only paid one-half the price for pictures next season as we paid last. That may mean that the studio would have to cut everything in half, including the number of people they employ. At least a thousand people would be thrown out of soft jobs and would have to go back to real work.

But the first "highlight" after filling up our reserve tank with food, was to catch Louise Fazenda ambling down the main road all fulla pep and make-up. She seemed in high spirits, so I guess all's well on the Culver City front. Just who the surrounding bodyguard happened to be, will, like many other things out here, remain a mystery, but it's all in a day's work.

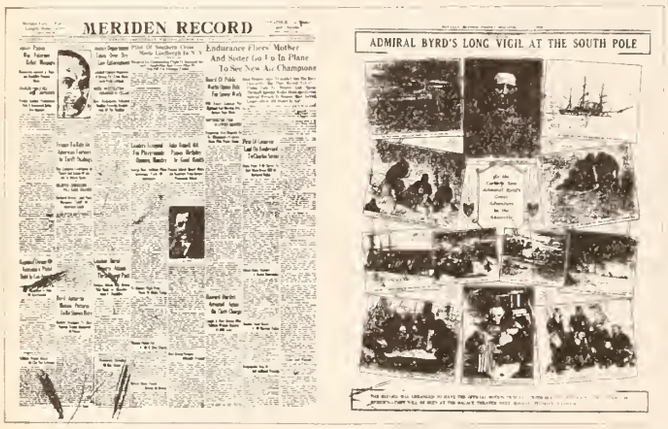
We "Crash" a Set

AFTER dodging a few dozen special cops, hired to keep pests like ourselves off the sets, we sneaked (honestly, that's just the right word) onto one of the stages where, as luck would have it, they were just getting ready to shoot a scene for "Jenny Lind," featuring none other (so they tell me) than Grace Moore of opera fame. It was real interesting to see and hear how they test the sound recording apparatus, the care exercised in getting the offstage chorus voices at the right volume and the orchestra to blend in properly with the proceedings. Then when everything was in readiness, orders were fired in rapid-fire fashion until the cameras started grinding. They went through that scene, soldiers and all, in a real stage fashion and we wondered whether we ever gave a thought, when the pictures are thrown on our screens, to the amount of time and work necessary before one scene like that is taken.

This was only a short and sweet flying trip, but we'll have to see lots more of that studio, especially the sound recording and mixing rooms. There is the place where our weakness for things mechanical insists we look things over. We'll have to write Hoover at once and after he O.K.'s our pass maybe we'll get as far as the second gate.

Tonight I'm scheduled for a flying trip to San Bernardino to catch a real studio preview and incidentally to meet a couple of real theatre managers, whom I've corresponded with for many months but never met face to face. Between getting around to the studios and trying to visit theatres and managers, I'm going to be as busy as some of those studio experts I've been hearing about. You know the kind we mean, you have an appointment on Monday, 1930 and you finally get in to see them in December of 1932.

Signing off for the time being, but we'll be back on the Club pages next week with lots more news about an exhibitor in Hollywood. (That is, if I'm still able to sit up and give the typewriter nourishment). You can never tell how you'll feel from one day to another out here, but you can't appreciate that remark unless you know your California.



They gave us the low-down on a party being thrown on one of the big lots, by a couple of stars. When we finally crashed we found out that it was a bubble-blowing party being indulged in by two juvenile players. Yes, we went home to bed.

"WATCH THE 'BYRD-IE'" SEZ WAUGH

With Byrd at the South Pole, what was Howard Waugh, at the Palace Theatre in Meridan, Conn., going to do? That was Howard's question—what was he going to do. Simply this—nothing. For with Byrd at the South Pole it still meant that Howard had to merchandise shows at the Palace. But—when Byrd left the South Pole and came up North with a print entitled "With Byrd at the South Pole"—then came the question—What was Howard going to do this time "With Byrd at the South Pole"? The cut will show you that he did plenty.

The noted Monarch of Meridan, being a very sagacious showman, decided to tie in the local newspaper on the film and he laid a plan before the big moguls of the paper whereby they would act as a co-sponsor of the picture when it played the theatre. And did they act? Look at the cut again. All of that publicity at no cost to the theatre and. in addition, as an extra measure of goodwill, the paper ran a coupon daily which admitted any child under twelve to the theatre at a reduced rate during the film's run.

This is a natural for you and it is certainly a credit to Howard's showmanship and the progressiveness of the Meridan Record. If you contemplate playing this picture grab onto this angle hot and heavy. It means plenty of publicity and goodwill for you; to say nothing about the dough. That's an accepted fact. Ask Howard, he knows. Not only on this film can you work this stunt but on almost any picture of merit, but we will say at this time that you can't find a better picture to work it with, especially in view of the fact that the whole world is talking about Byrd. Here it is—if you can use it you're welcome to it.

Tie-Ups Are Sort Of Second Nature With Sid Lawrence

The residents of Lima, Ohio, get twice as much as their moneys' worth when they patronize a show at Schine's Ohio Theatre, due to the fact that they witness some corking merchandising when Sid Lawrence sets out to sell them a show.

It's simple for Sid. Why? Well, when you've been in the show game for a good many years you sort of get wised up to what your patrons want, so it's no uncommon sight to see Sid stepping about town tying up every window and every other thing in sight. Take the time he tied up the Ohio Power Company on a stunt that meant something to both the house and the company. He arranged to have the power company place one of their refrigerators in the lobby of the theatre. A reversable pump was attached which poured water over it for one solid week. And did it attract attention? Necks were strained from the time the house opened to the time it closed.

To plug this special feature, the company pasted new 24 sheets on all the boards with a snipe announcing that the stunt could be seen at the Ohio Theatre. With all these boards located on the highways and other prominent parts of the town, it can easily be seen that they meant something, as far as publicity went. In addition to the boards the company ran considerable advertising in the papers and mentioned the theatre in all of the ads. The stunts according to the power company, had merit aplenty since a number of refrigerators were sold.

With this stunt over, Sid next went to work to put "Swing High" across, and calling his showmanship into play he pulled some stunts that had them talking. One of his gags was a monster cardboard peanut measuring about six inches in length which he handed out to every patron as a novelty plug on the picture. Another novel stunt, was the printing of tickets in the form of reserved seats that were used to plug the picture. Instead of carrying a seat number, the space wherein it was supposed to be carried the letters, "U R Left," and directly underneath, in small type, "If you do not see this picture." These two stunts proved to be excellent medium for attracting attention as did the one in the photo we are reproducing above. This gag consisted of a dilapidated flivver painted with a coat of brilliant colors and driven about the main streets of the town, with a picture plug on the back of it.

Before closing this little story, it is also necessary to mention a bit about the good-will Sid picked up in Lima not so long ago, by inviting over a hundred Lima boys to inspect the theatre. The tour was conducted by Sid under the auspices of the local "Y" and the newspaper. He took the boys all through the theatre and explained the mysteries of operation to them. Here's an angle that can help you, too. The leading business men of the town get together and arrange with the local "Y" and the newspaper to sponsor a tour to their factories or establishments. Boys between the ages of 9 and 16 are invited and the tours are held every Tuesday. In this manner the paper and the business place gets the good-will with the local business crashing for free publicity.

We want to thank Sid for wising us up on what he is doing to pack his house out in Lima and we know that the slants we have set forth will be more than appreciated. Keep it up Sid, and remember we're always glad to hear from you.

Base-Ball Team Represents Lamm's House In League

A good way of securing publicity is being used by Julius Lamm, manager of the Fox Theatre in Sheboygan, Wisc., in the special baseball team that he organized to plug the theatre.

When the baseball season started, Lamm, knowing that Sheboygan is a town of rabid enthusiasts of the national pastime, promoted a ball team to represent his theatre in the city league. The team was comprised of young men who were more than willing to go under the name of Fox Theatre and play in the league. When it was first announced that the theatre was going to enter a ball team into the league, considerable comment was rife and all of it tended towards giving the house loads of publicity. The stunt is a natural for Lamm, as most of the games are played on the home grounds and with the name of the theatre before thousands of persons, there is sure to be a lot of box-office reaction.

Another angle that this showman, whose photo appears with the article, engineered was a popularity contest inaugurated to stimulate interest in the sale of Thrift Books. Gifts were promoted from all of the leading dealers in the town with plenty of window space being devoted to a display of them. The girl acclaimed the most popular was presented with a free trip to the metropolitan cities nearby as well as being furnished with a complete wardrobe. The contest was run for a month and in that time the house and the merchants all reported additional business.

As these few things are typical of the work that Lamm is in the habit of turning out, we know that his future contributions will also prove to be interesting and we look forward to hearing from him again very soon. What do you say, Julius?

Procrastination is the longest way to reach the shortest distance.

Fred Hornscheidt Used A Novel Gag To Sell "Mammy"

One of Fred Hoenscheidt's best bets is his First Monday Shoppers' day which is celebrated on the first Monday of every month. On this day Fred secures the co-operation of the Chamber of Commerce and the local merchants and a fitting campaign is planned. As he was playing Al Jolson's latest "Mammy," Fred decided that he would have to do a lot of exploiting on it so he went vigorously to work.

The Chamber of Commerce, newspaper and retail merchants contracted with Binda—a blind-fold driver to drive a car through the streets in a special Oakland '8' automobile. This stunt was well advertised in the local papers in order to induce the rural shoppers to the city for the First Monday Bargains.

Seeing the possibilities of attracting the community to the front of the Rialto theatre, Hoenscheidt arranged to have Binda end his perilous driving in front of the theatre. By doing this, the theatre was given exclusive advertising privileges on the car as the car dealer who furnished the car reserved all advertising rights and specified that the only adertising the car should carry was the merchant in front of whose place of business the drive would end.

Copy on the banner which was carried on the car read, "Binda will end his perilous blind-fold drive in front of the Rialto theatre at 3:30 P. M. to greet Al Jolson in 'Mammy'." Another banner on the front hood of the car read, "Follow the crowd to see Al Jolson in 'Mammy' Rialto Theatre."

With all these things working to put the picture over, is it any wonder that by the time play date rolled around they were lined up strong at the box-office on the opening show? These stunts are typical of the work Fred turns out on every show at his house and ever since he has been handling the Rialto in Chickasha, Okla., the town has certainly seen some wonderful showmanship.

TRAVELING!

In the event that any of you boys get an envious thought because you think that I'm getting a break traveling around the country, let me tip you off that "it's not what it's cracked up to be."

While you were sipping iced drinks in the cool of your private office, your humble servant was sweltering in broiling pullmans across the country. And when I say sweltering, I mean hotterinell.

Chicago was not so tough, but at least, it gave us a chance to cool off after the train ride from New York, and atthough the Twentieth Century has every modern improvement, they ought to look into the refrigerating angle. Maybe it would increase train riding as it has theatre receipts.

From Chicago to Omaha was one dirty cinder in our eye, after another. We developed several muscles never used before trying to rub them out of our system, but a cold bath washed us clean off all animosity for the weather man.

Omaha was cooking in something like 99 degrees, and with such climate, how can a theatre manager act cheerful. The box offices were getting rusty, but nature must take its course, and HOW she was taking it!

The train ride from Omaha to Los Angeles will remain chiselled in our minds for years to come. If we ever go the downward path, after we die, we'll be prepared for what is to come. Imagine, 106 in the shade at one stop. And multiply that by 1000, then you'll have a faint idea of what a chicken feels like in the oven. That's us in a Pullman car. And ditto far into the night, with the first breath of cool air arriving just before we reached Los Angeles.

But we're here now and we expect to have so many interesting things to tell you about that we will probably forget the heat and the weather for the next few weeks.

It has been many years since we last visited the coast and how things have changed is nobody's business. This town has grown so large that we will never miss little old New York at all. Things look pretty tivety and we're getting all set to visit many of the boys whose letters and contributions have kept the Club pages so interesting these last few years.

No question but that we will have much to pass along on the way they do things here theatrically, and if first impressions count for anything, we can tell you right now that for snappy fronts and theatres, you have to go some to beat Los Angeles. Not flashy the way we would describe the Chicago houses, but in a different way. It's more than an education, it's a revelation and then some.

We'll be telling you more soon.

"OUR HAT'S OFF AGAIN!"

When a manager-showman will put down in black and white that his outfit is 100% and a little more for their district manager and his assistant, it is time for us to investigate and run a box on our observations. So here it is!

The smiling showman whose picture we are showing is Lew Preston, a charter member of the Round Table Club, who has long been an active member. As many showmen know, he is now assistant Division Manager of the Fox Bronx Playhouses and from the send-off that is given him and Mr. Harry Woodin, Division Manager, there must of a certainty be something to merit it, especially when experienced showmen hand out compliments.

Woodin comes to the circuit from the West where he established an enviable record for himself as a showman. Preston has long been operating around New York and Brooklyn and the work he turned out while acting as General Manager for the now defunct S & S Circuit still remains in our memory (and our files).

To quote from the letter on hand, "When West meets East and East meets West, big things are going to happen in the Fox Bronx Theatres."

Well, when a group of live wires have that to say and then follow it up with a declaration that long hours and summer heat don't mean a thing to them when they are working with men like Mr. Harry Arthur, the General Manager, Woodin and Preston, then we have to agree that they are going to "sell shows as they never were sold before."

L. Orlove Secured Plenty Of Publicity On Kiddie Benefit

There's hardly a showman in the country who doesn't know what Milwaukee is famous for; but it is taking that live-wire Louis Orlove, manager of the Uptown Theatre in Wisconsin to create a record for showmanship of a type that is making the residents sit up and take notice.

When the president of the local Parent and Teachers Association announced his intention to resign, Orlove immediately got in touch with him and sold him the idea of running a benefit show for the orphans at the Uptown Theatre. The idea was at once accepted by the retiring president, who willingly consented to give his time to secure the co-operation of prominent business men as sponsors for the plan.

Arrangements were made with the street railway company to transport the children to the theatre on the day of the party; an ice cream dealer served the youngsters with ice cream; department stores planned to present the children with novelties, and all of the arrangements went into a big one, making a huge success.

Realizing the tremendous news value of a stunt of this sort, Orlove set out to gather publicity from the newspapers and to this end contacted all the daily and Sunday sheets who devoted column after column of stories and pictures of the party. One of the hardest papers in the state to crash came through with four advance stories on the affair as well as running a special picture in the Sunday edition the day after the event.

The party over, Orlove next turned his attention to putting on a Stage Wedding. He secured the bride and groom, then went out and sold the local dealers on the idea and they all consented to co-operate to the extent of donating gifts for them. In return for this they received a credit line on a special trailer that was run at the theatre. A prominent judge was pressed into service to officiate and tie the nuptial knot. The local printer supplied the wedding invitations, which were sent out by the bride and groom to their friends. A special stage setting was made for the occasion and promptly at the appointed time, in full view of a large and appreciative audience, the happy couple walked down the aisle to the tune of "Lohengrin," on to the stage and in the hushed auditorium replied "I do" to the judge's question in the marriage ceremony; then amidst a shower of rice, which had been furnished the audience, the happy couple rushed out of the theatre and away on their honeymoon. Batteries of cameras greeted them as they came out the door, and the next day the local papers all carried pictures of one of the greatest stage weddings Milwaukee had ever seen.

Just to give you a line on the other things that Orlove does between times, we are showing a photo of the unique signboard he constructed on a hill alongside the highway leading into town. At the intersection there is a V slope and the sign was so erected that cars stopping there could see both sides of it. A different picture is plugged on each side. The display is varnished and the sunlight glancing upon it makes it shine so that it attracts a great deal of attention.

As Louis tells us that "these events are only a few of the gags being put on at this theatre" it is safe to conclude that we are going to hear a lot more of his work in the future.

Early Bird Mat. At A Dime A Throw Proving A Winner

"The early bird catches the worm" is a well-known phrase but to Joe E. Murdock, manager of the Rowland Theatre in Wilkensberg, Pa., his worm in a recent case was a large-sized chunk of dough.

In the photos we are showing, you'll get an idea of what he did on a recent "early bird" matinee. A special announcement was made in newspaper house organ and trailers that from 1:30 to 2 o'clock admission to the house would be slashed to ten cents. And did they flock in? There was over a thousand people lined up for an hour before the house opened. The cameraman was unable to get a bigger portion of the crowd in the photos because of the fact that they were lined up all around the block.

Here's one that can do a lot for your business, too. There's no question about it but that in the half house that you permit persons in for the dime you are going to more than triple your business. If you have a picture on hand that you think will stand a litle plugging of this sort, give it a break and you, too, will need a couple of cops to keep them back; that is, providing your local conditions warrant you pulling a stunt of this sort.

McCook Is Talking Yet About Stage Wedding Glass Had

June. The time of the year when the poets start to moon and the song birds to croon. And then it's the time of the year when showmen begin to make the most of the stage wedding slant; so it was not surprising to hear that O. Fred Glass, up-to-the-minute manager of the Fox Theatre in McCook, Nebraska, had followed the usual procedure and promoted a stage wedding. But the wedding itself was not the usual procedure. Oh, no! Fred saw to it that plenty of novel angles were worked into it; because, after all, it was engineered by a showman and the house could use all of the resultant publicity that the newspapers and other mediums would give.

The first novel touch injected into the event was to announce that a local couple, to be known as Mr. and Mrs. X. until after the wedding, were to be married at the theatre. The newspapers, airports, local merchants and even the adjoinning towns joined in to make the affair a success when Glass' plan was placed before them. Everything that a newly married couple could wish for in the way of household furnishings was given to the theatre to be donated to the pair. So many gifts were contributed that it required a couple of auto loads to transport them to the theatre.

To show his appreciation to the merchants for their lavish generosity, Glass arranged to have the mysterious couple visit the stores during the daytimes and the merchant's announced in their ads that special gifts would be given to any customer who would step up to the "nearly weds" and identify them as the mysterious couple. The angle caught on wonderfully well and the business of the dealers increased in no small measure.

With a theatre full of gifts, it was only natural that Glass would want to place them on display; so with still a week to go before the nuptials took place he had his men build a special background for the exhibition of the many articles. But it was found that the theatre lobby could not hold them all, and, as a result six of the leading stores in the town were pressed into service and they willingly consented to feature the remainder of the articles. All of this time the town was buzzing with accounts of the wedding; eagerly noting its progress and conjecturing as to the identity of the mysterious pair. Finally the wedding day arrived and hours before 9:15 P. M.—the date set for the wedding—those holding reserved seats were already at the theatre, sitting through the early show, though their interest was perfunctory, for who doesn't want to see a wedding, especially when it is held in a theatre. And with the feature picture entitled "This Thing Called Love," small wonder that with constant reminder of the event to come, they were impatient.

Promptly at 9:15 the organist entered the organ pit and a second later the mighty console burst forth with the first strains of the Wedding March. Every neck in the theatre was craned to catch a glimpse of the blushing girl and the equally red faced boy, who, heads held high, marched proudly and slowly down the aisle. Before them the ushers, bridesmaids, matron of honor and flower girls, like couriers of cupid, littered the aisle with freshly cut flowers and as the procession stopped to permit the bride and groom to mount the steps to the modernistic stage, the like of which McCook had never seen before, a salvo of applause was started that culminated in a boisterous clapping of hands and gasps of admiration, as the excited customers drank in the full beauty of the impressive scene. Spots played upon the modernistic background, causing it to reflect silvery beams, which played upon the silver of the bride's dress and glanced off over the packed auditorium. The party assembled itself upon the stage, and as the hushed populace watched with bated breath, a local celebrity performed the marriage.

The ceremony over the bride and groom, together with their party were transported to one of the leading cafes in town where Glass had arranged the wedding banquet. Local florists as well as the restaurateur co-operated to make it a success and amid a veritable garden of beauty the party supped. At the conclusion of the banquet the happy couple paired to the bridal suite which had been donated by a leading hotel.

At ten o'clock the next morning, an auto waited for them in front of the hotel and they were whisked away to the flying field where a plane, property of the newspaper, was waiting to transport them to the city wherein they would spend their honeymoon. The couple entered the plane and the ship pointed its nose skyward and carried the boy and girl to the town of Trenton, landing on the field, right in the midst of a group of forty cars, containing friends and well-wishers who were waiting to chivaree the newly-weds.

The affair was a tremendous success and the good-will that Glass annexed stands to hold in good stead for many months to come. Nothing happened to mar the occasion, and under his skillful guidance everything had gone over like clockwork. The theatre received additional business, plenty of publicity and good-will; the dealers received the same—and it all tended towards making McCook the talk of the neighboring towns. We want to thank Fred for passing this account along to us as we know that the many valuable suggestions which it contains will be put into use by his fellow members whenever the opportunity presents itself.

A SHOWMAN TALKS!

H. L. LAURENCE Says:

"This is a time of big organizations controlling not only the theatres but about every other line of business, and they must, in my humble opinion, be giving not only better satisfaction than the individual ownership for the simple reason that while some of us may be crazy it seems to me the majority of the citizenship in almost any community you investigate is patronizing the chain organizations. And if you dig deep enough you will find that they must be giving better prices and better service in the different mercantile lines. At the same time the chain theatre organizations must be giving better shows for less admission than the individual operators were offering, as well as better surroundings in which to present said shows." WHAT DO YOU THINK?

Margaret Lee Has Been Turning Out Some Fine Stunts

Miss Margaret Lee, publicity director of the Tudor Theatre, New Orleans, La., finally crashed the picture section of the local newspaper, The Times-Picayune, to get some publicity on "The Big Pond."

A group of French gentlewomen from the Maison Hospitaliere had attended a special screening of "La Grande Mare," the French version of "The Big Pond," as the guests of the management, and a picture of the group was taken just before these ladies entered the theatre.

The explanation underneath the picture also stated that the women in attendance ranged in age from 70 to 95 years.

Come on, boys, we can't let the ladies run away with all the honors. Let's try to show Miss Lee that we can equal what she engineered so successfully. You must not lose sight of the credit due any one for crashing a pictorial section of a hard-boiled newspaper.

Community Spirit Is Seen In W. H. Bergmann's Work

One showman who most assuredly has something to crow about is W. H. Bergmann, manager of the Columbus Theatre in Columbus, Neb., for the recent Rooster Day that he engineered has the Chamber of Commerce still offering him thanks.

It seems that the local farmers within a radius of thirty and forty miles raise roosters and once a year they come into Columbus or the surrounding towns to sell them. This year, Bergmann decided that they should all come to Columbus, so he put a plan up before the Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber had originally intended to make the farmers' visit a summer trade week, but when they saw the advantages of the new touch they immediately consented.

His plan was to pay five cents above the market price on every rooster that was offered for sale. The poultry dealer stood two cents, the merchant, two and the Chamber one. Instead of paying cash for the poultry, it was arranged that script tickets with a cash value of eleven cents be given. The script had to be spent within three days.

In order to plug the idea, teaser ads were run in the newspapers for ten days before the event, a special section was run off the press and five thousand copies of it sent to the outlying towns. The merchants featured special displays in their windows and the Chamber of Commerce plugged it at their headquarters. Bergmann tied in his picture "Caught Short" and planted a couple of hundred cards about the town which read: "Don't Be Caught Short—Bring Your Roosters to Columbus." Special notices to the effect that the poultry raisers would be permitted to witness a show at the theatre free of charge, were inserted in the newspaper. The Chamber bought out the house on a flat basis for this stunt. At both free performances Bergmann made an announcement to the packed houses (they had to call out the cops on the second show) to the effect that a special attraction would play the evening show. A novelty herald plugging the show was handed out as the audience was leaving.

As a good many of the poultry raisers had never before witnessed a "talkie" they were pretty well sold on it and many announced their intentions of returning to the theatre at some future date. The campaign built up a lot of good-will for the house and the town and business was increased for all of the dealers during the week.

We want to say that "W. H." certainly deserves a compliment for his work on this stunt and we are sure that if any of the Club members can make use of it they'll do it as soon as possible. We'd like to hear more from you "W. H.," so don't keep us in the dark concerning your work.

Garvin Passes Us A Dozen Samples Of Poster Artistry

Here we present a group of posters used by M. H. Garvin, manager of the Rivoli Theatre in Hastings, Neb., under whose direction Maurice Shields, the poster artist of the theatre, executed this unusually attractive work. Pretty snappy work, eh?

It is well to mention, in connection with the showing of posters on these pages, that black and white photography does not show up certain colors, and in the event that you are wondering where portions of the posters may be we want you to understand that it was merely lost in the photographing and reproducing process.

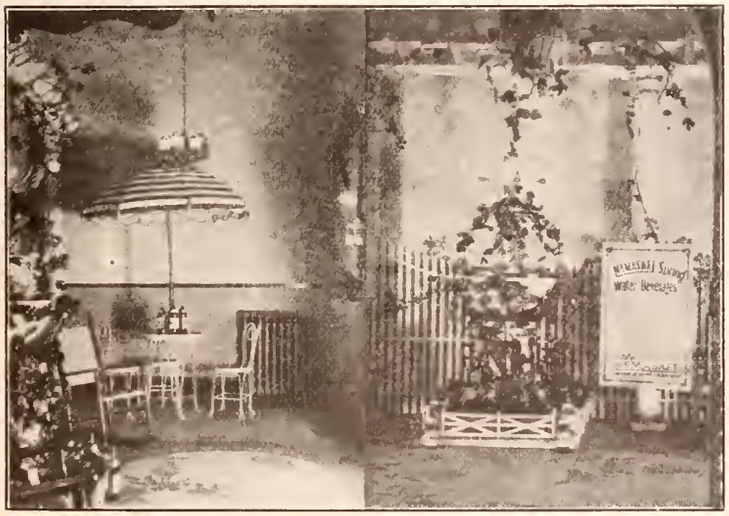
We have been more or less pushing poster work to a certain extent in the Club pages because we feel that even for the very smallest of houses, attractive fronts, with colors and life will help to build up the prestige of the theatre.

If this idea is practical and feasible for the bigger theatres, why not for the small? They are always competing with the nearby towns and first-runs and the more like those select houses they make their own the more attraction it will be for the patrons to come in.

Fine work, "M. H.," and convey our congratulations to Mr. Shields for what he is doing. Let's hear some more from you.

Congratulations are in order for: Warren A. Slee, manager of the Colonial Theatre in Allentown, Pa.; Heinie Johnson, exploiteer and artist of the R & R Theatre in Big Spring, Texas; George Landy, publicity director of the New Orpheum Theatre in Los Angeles, Calif.; and Harold Bailey, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Lawrence, Mass. These showmen were chosen prize winners in the recently Columbia Prosperity Month Contest conducted through the pages of the Managers' Round Table Club in Motion Picture News.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB



Bill Adams Turned Lobby Into Garden To Combat Summer

Even though his house doesn't boast a cooling plant, Bill Adams, manager of the Colonial Theatre in Brockton, Mass., isn't being stopped by Old Man Heat, or his ally, Humidity. When they put in appearance, Bill just shoots out a wicked left, hooks them on the chin, and down they go for the count. Don't get the idea that it's physical lefts that Bill shoots out. It's not. It's showman lefts, like the ones we are showing in the photograph.

The lobby is transformed into a summer garden and patrons entering the cool looking atmosphere immediately forget the heat and humidity until after they get out on the street again. But here—let Bill tell you how he constructed his summer garden, and what he did to enhance the effect by means of special tie-ups.

"The under part of our marquee is trimmed with wisteria and blossoms. On the sidewalk at each corner of our marquee we have evergreen trees about four feet high set in tubs. Our inner and outer lobbies are trimmed with hanging baskets and red, white and pink roses on lattices. We have an alcove opening off the lobby which we have transformed into a summer garden, with an electric fountain in the center, a lattice fence entwined with roses and vines, hanging baskets and window boxes. Green lights and shades are used throughout. We have furnished the garden with summer furniture and chairs and tables with large beach umbrellas.

"We just completed a two-weeks' tie-up with a local beverage concern whereby they served a full sized bottle of their cold beverage to all of our patrons, including children. We consider this the greatest good-will builder we have ever had in our theatre and it certainly put us solid with the children, as for ten cents they saw a complete show and received a ten-cent bottle of tonic on their way out. The beverage concern furnished the drinks, two refrigerators and hired a girl to take charge. We ran a trailer on our screen inviting our patrons on the way out to stop for a free drink of this certain brand of beverages and also mentioned in our daily "ad" that we were serving this brand of drinks free in our lobby to all patrons. We also paid for the ice. The plan worked out so well that the beverage people want to come back next month for another two weeks. We are now negotiating with an ice cream concern on a similar proposition."

And while we are discussing Bill's showmanship, we want to tell you about the way he plugged "Born Reckless." Through his friendship with the editors of one of the local papers he persuaded them to run the story serialization of the film which was one of the best sellers under the name of "Louis Beretti." The newspapers ran a chapter a day for three weeks with Bill running a small ad daily as the play date drew near. This angle was found to bring in a lot of extra jack when the picture opened as the interest which the serial story aroused was excellent. The mats were secured from the exchange distributing the picture and so at small cost Bill received some additional business and good-will. This mat angle is an excellent one to use if you feel that your patrons are sufficiently interested in your attractions so as to warrant a daily appearance of the story.

These couple of angles worked aces for Bill and if you think that they will also fit anything you may be planning, it won't hurt to give them a trial. Thanks, Bill, for keeping us up on your work because we know that you are turning out some great stuff in Brockton. Let's hear some more from you.

MERCHANDISING

Looks like breakers ahead. Just last week one of the mysterious Insiders who prowl about the movie marts of New York picking up exclusive chatter on the industry for the MPNews, took offense at the use of the word "exploitation."

Exploitation, in his opinion, is no fit word for a showman to use and he bases his statement on Webster's definition of it. At any rate, he wants to get a couple of converts to start a crusade against exploiting the word "exploitation."

The Managers' Round Table Club has long deplored the use of "exploitation," preferring instead to use "merchandising," a term agreed upon by "Chick" Lewis and a couple of thousand Club members.

Anything marketable is merchantable. Thus it appears that when a showman has so merchantable a product as amusement, the parts of which include advertising, exploitation, publicity, house service, community spirit, personality and good-will, it is only natural that these component parts of "show selling" be appropriately labeled to designate the compound "merchandising."

"Exploitation," like Greek, is a dead language, a language of yesterday. The showman of today "merchandises"; he does not solely exploit. Remember, it was only a short while ago that a "Director of Public Relations" was known as a "press agent." Times have changed and so have terms. As the industry grows, so grows the showman. Let's have your views. Are you satisfied with "Merchandising"? Or have you something else to suggest?

Harold Blumenthal Is Clicking With Own House In N. J.

Having been connected for many years with various circuits, Harold Blumenthal is well qualified to enroll as an A1 showman at any time or in any place so it was no surprise to us to hear that since he has gone into the business for himself as owner and operator of the Rex Theatre in East Rutherford, N. J., he is putting the house over in great style.

Contrary to many opinions that were advanced he decided that the only way for him to do just what he wanted in the line of merchandising was to buy his own house. This he did, throwing up an important position as supervisor of three houses for a large chain. As soon as he took over his new house he set to work to contact the local merchants and showed them how, by tying up with the theatre, they would both benefit. The merchants were more than willing to co-operate and as a result, Harold, today, is keeping his box office till busy from morning to night. All of which means something or other.

We want to compliment him on what he is doing out in his part of the country and we know that he is always striving to keep his house right up to the record breaking marks. Keep up the good work, Harold, and remember that your fellow-members in the Club are always glad to learn how you are making out.

SHOWMANSHIP!

(Thanx to "Mum")

In the world of the theatre the most vital essential for the success of a play or an actor or an actress is the quality of SHOWMANSHIP.

Showmanship means a thoroughness and painstaking care which amounts to genius.

Showmanship means the eradication of all that is weak, inexpert, creaky, evil and mistaken, and the cultivation of all that is good, strong, expert, smooth and well thought out.

Showmanship is a quality that may be developed in any walk of life; any trade, any profession, any vocation or avocation. It is the word which describes the technique of success.—Chicago American.

Fol's Newspaper Ads Show Evidence Of Careful Study

An introduction to H. A. Fol, manager of the Rembrandt Theatre in Arnhem, Holland, is hardly necessary, since it was only a few weeks ago that we published his article "Theatre Operation in Holland," and from which we gather that you learned a good deal about how the foreign showman work.

At this time we want to present some of the ads turned out by Fol and when you take into consideration the fact that he is somewhat handicapped in layout by lack of variety in mats and other accessories, you will agree with us that the work he is turning out is creditable showmanship. We want especially to call your attention to the black and white ad he turned out for "The Broadway Melody." When this ad appeared in the local newspaper it completely stole the page, all that you could see when you looked at the page was the attraction for the Rembrandt.

As we, too, are handicapped by not having sufficient knowledge of Fol's language to make any comments on the copy which, from what we learn from one of the staff, is well written, we will have to pass up that angle for the present. You may note in the ad that Fol also plugs his stage attractions which are a feature of every show at the Rembrandt. The stage show generally consists of a cycle or acrobatic act. Incidentally, the house organ at the theatre, which is labeled the "Rembrandt News," is not given away but sells for ten cents. It is a very well made up book and really carries news items, concerning the stars and players of Hollywood and Europe. The two middle pages are devoted to the program for the week, with the other pages carrying the news and advertising.

We want to thank Mr. Fol for his kindness in getting these samples of his work together and forwarding them to us and we hope to learn more of his work in the near future.

Kopplin Cut In On Political Battle With Special Stunt

All was not so quiet on the Miami front when Harold A. Kopplin, manager of the Capitol Theatre in the Florida city, set out to sell "All Quiet on the Western Front."

What a campaign he turned out! Every available medium was used to plug the picture. Window tie-ups were secured. The library granted him space. The newspapers gave the film a whale of a lot of publicity and everything tended to make the campaign one of the most outstanding the city had ever seen. It was complete in every detail. His display in the front of the theatre was perfect, and as you all know Hal's capabilities as an artist, we don't have to say any more about that angle; but we do want to tell you about his tie-up with the American Legion that did a lot to give the picture valuable publicity.

The Legion wanted to run a benefit performance and Hal arranged that it would be held in the Saturday midnite opening. In order to publicize it from their end also, the Legion staged a parade in the streets and the photos will give you an idea of its effectiveness. The men paraded about the streets of the town and were followed by the unique ballyhoo, in the form of a massive cardboard book, mounted on a truck drawn by a tractor. The size of the display can be estimated when you figure that the top of it was chipped off by a traffic light. A great deal of comment resulted from the parade and as usual Hal opened to standing room business.

In conjunction with this story we are also showing a cut which figured in a master showman trick engineered by Hal. The locals were all het up over the impending primaries for the election of the county solicitor and the papers were filled with mud slinging and all of the other nice things that go to make up those peaceful political contests. Hal was playing Will Rogers in "So This Is London" and he decided that since Will is the well-known nemesis of politics, he would have to represent him in some manner. To this end he made up a card of the type we are showing. The card, printed in black and white, measured 4½ by 3 inches and by studying it closely you will notice that the type reads to the effect that Will Rogers, the best bet in the talkies doesn't choose to run for county solicitor. Plenty of laughs were caused by this move, and in order that it might be still more effective, Hal omitted the name of the film. The proof of the gag was seen in another great week at the box-office and it also proved Hal's contention that so long as his picture had merit it would click through the adoption of the idea.

But They Didn't Feature An Indian As "Hair Remover"

Whoa! Whozzitt! Whatzit! Say, what is this? It's a terrible way to start off a story; but what can we do. Get a look at this photo of Jake Rosenthal's lobby in the Iowa Theatre in Waterloo, Ia., and see what Jake and Art Weld, the publicity director of the house, did on "Swing High."

Dashing gorillas and howling hot dogs, how is a feller going to write a story when he's laughing so hard at these stunts? There were more red faces in that lobby the days these stunts were used than there is when a Broadway hoofer pulls a couple of his wise cracks before an assemblage of staid and prim persons. But that's neither here nor there. The lobby looked like a side show and was a side show. A huge tent completely covered it. One flap of the tent was partially raised and a card invited the patrons to crawl under the way they did in the good old days. Thousands crawled, and believe it or not, a few of them who seemed to enter into the spirit of the thing with gust and gusto, must have had sharp recollections of yesterday, for they looked apprehensively around before crawling on all four and then, the way they scudded under would have set a mummy to laughing.

The wild animal "exhibits" were mounted on little express trucks, and what animals they were! The Flying Red Bat proved to be a brick. A bowl of Chili was billed as the Mexican Chinchilla. The missing link came into recognition in the form of bologna. Three live alligators were labeled "Florida Bedbugs," and the Caucasian Hoozit was a mirror in which the unwary and unwise patron saw his face. And the card was labeled "Almost Human."

Then the freaks. A wild man, securely handcuffed, was declared to have joined the cuckoos while trying to pronounce "Ingagi." (For all we know it might have been "Ingi" himself.) A monster cut-out of a fat woman in a bathing suit was appropriately labeled Miss Zoe Nizenfat. A cut-out showing the star of the picture on a trapeze was also used. The ushers were attired in clown suits. The front of the box office resembled a regular circus ticket wagon.

Well, to make a good ending (and a happy one), it is necessary that we tell you the whole town was talking about this lobby for a week after it was over. And when they do that, it is a sure thing that there's some showmen in the town who know their business. We'd like to hear some more about what these two live-wires are doing and we hope they will be represented again in a future issue, because it's a cinch that this stunt is going to meet with a corking reception from the Club.

Crockett Has What We Might Term A "Unique" Position

It has been some time since we heard from Joe Crockett, manager of the Y. M. C. A. theatre in Carney's Point, N. J., and we were pleased to hear that Joe has been working hard to keep his house clicking. In order that his fellow members might know how he runs his theatre and the type of house it is, we are going to try and describe it.

The policy is three or four shows a week and the rest of the time is given over to social work, boys' work, running a boys' camp, coaching two dramatic clubs, handling the athletic work of a plant employing 4,000 men, handling gym classes and a few other things. In between times he tries to find time to tell us what he is doing.

This job of Joe's is one of the most unusual ones in the country. He finds that he has to display plenty of showmanship to sell the persons who live in the village as well as the ones on the outside. In the summer, when the camps are in full sway, he has to work twice as hard to bring them in. He sends out a letter every week and in rapid fire description, tells the folks about the shows coming to the "Y." The letter is delivered to every one in the village as well as sent through a mailing list of three thousand names.

The "Y" has stiff opposition in one of the Warner Equity houses located nearby but so far as we know Joe is still pulling stuff that will keep everybody happy. Let's hear some more about your work Joe, and don't keep us in the dark so long because the rest of the Club is also interested in seeing how you sell them.

GEORGE LIMERICK is the Assistant Manager of the Coleman Theatre in Miami, Okla. With a send-off such as Mr. Griffin gives him he must certainly know something about the show game or he couldn't handle the advertising and publicity of the house in addition to his regular position. Let's hear from you real soon, George, so that we can see what you're doing.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JESS MARLOWE manages the Pheil Theatre in St. Petersburg, Fla., and the reason we know that Mr. Marlowe is an up-and-coming showman is because your Chairman received a very nice account of what Jess did to sell "Ingagi" in his city. And when a showman turns out work such as that he is certain to know his biz. Keep it up, Jess, and remember we want to know what you are doing to sell your shows.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! !———

I. J. CRAITE is the manager of the Fort Theatre in Fort Atkinson, Wis. Mr. Craite has been in the show game for quite some time now and his many and varied experiences have formed the basis for some great showmanship. Located as he is, he has a number of good opportunities for showmanship and if you'll watch the future issues of the Club pages we know that he will be represented a good deal.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! !———

F. J. MILLER is the manager of the Imperial Theatre in Augusta, Ga. We have heard a great deal of the showmanship being displayed about Mr. Miller's section and we also understand that he is largely responsible for some of the live-wire work turned out. How about this, "F. J.", why not let us in on the secret?

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

SIDNEY SMITH manages the Egyptian Theatre in Boston, Mass., and since he comes to the Club with Harry Brown, Jr.'s Okay stamped on him, it seems to us that he must be one of the Hub's leading showmen. You've got plenty of opportunity to display some good stuff Sidney, seeing where you're located. And we don't doubt but that you're doing it. Let's hear from you and include your photo along with the letter.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

GEORGE LANDY is the General Pacific Coast Representative for RKO, operating at the Orpheum Theatre in Los Angeles. As Mr. Landy has had his work represented on our pages a number of times, it is unnecessary for us to introduce you to him again. However, George, everyone must pass through these gates in order that our files be complete—so you're in. Now, let's go.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

HOMER GAUN is the manager of the manager of the Rivoli Theatre in Hastings, Neb. According to what we have learned from various sources, Mr. Gaun is one of the most progressive showmen around this district. And such being the case, we feel that we should have a photo of him and a little more dope on his career so that when we present his first contribution we will be all set. How about complying with our request, Homer?

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

HARRY LANDAU comes to the Club from Tientsin, China. He is the manager of the Gaicty Theatre, the finest theatre in the city and with such a background, it is small wonder that he has been turning out some excellent work. He promises to keep us posted on his future activities and we will pass the reports along to his fellow-members. Welcome, Harry.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

EATON M. SIZER is the manager of the Fox Theatre in Appleton, Wisc. From his state we note that a great many managers are members of the Round Table Club and now that Mr. Sizer is right in line with the rest we know that he is going to show us how he put his pictures across by becoming an active member. Are we right, Eaton?

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

JOE FISHER who is proposed for membership in the Club by his brother Harry of Cape Town, South Africa, is the managing director of the Capitol Theatres in Singapore, Straits Settlements. From what his brother says about him, Joe is a real wide-awake showman. Well Joe, in order to see for ourselves, it will be necessary for you to let us in on what you are doing. And you might also include your photo with your next contribution.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

MARK SILVERTON manages the Strand Theatre in Seymour, Conn. He has been in the show business for a number of years and is especially adept at exploitation and other forms of merchandising. Since your state boasts a good many live-wires Mark, how about hopping right out in front by shooting us one of your latest stunts, so that we can pass it along to your fellow-members.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

BILL BACHMAN is the Assistant Manager of the Capitol Theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y. We are glad to welcome this up and coming showman into our organization and since so many Assistants, after joining the Club, have gone up the ladder, we can only hope that Bill, too, is going to follow their example. And the best way to do it is to become an active member, Bill.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

J. E. NORONHA, JR., is introduced elsewhere on these pages and by referring back to the story you can see what this showman, who is the advertising manager of the Queen's Theatre in Hong Kong, China, is doing. We are pleased to welcome him into the organization and we know that he is going to keep us posted on the results of his merchandising over on the other side of the world.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

C. F. ROSE manages the Granada Theatre in Norfolk, Neb. In his many years in the show game, Mr. Rose has turned out some excellent work, and we are of the opinion that he is still doing it. In order that we may verify this, Mr. Rose, let's hear from you in the very near future.

THE Club is anxious to publish photographs of every member and would, therefore, appreciate receiving as many as possible for use in future issues of the Club columns. If you have not already done so, PLEASE send us your own photo at once. Thank you.

"How can we get color at low cost?"

...THE answer is easy. Eastman Sonochrome Tinted Positive Films, available in a number of delicate tints, lend color and atmosphere to every scene. They are especially designed to give faithful rendition of sound. And they cost no more than ordinary black-and-white positive.

"Just imagine being on your back, in this modern world where girls demand excitement, looking up into the red sky with good intentions of making good with the women of all nations. The painted woman, the spider, the cisco kid and other common clay renegades, all on the make for the man who came back, would be wondering, are you there? Sez you. Sez me! A Connecticut yankee from Scotland yard singing a song o'my heart would get a greater kick out of such a play called life than the heart breaker. A spy up the river with blondie could hardly be called a devil with women, but the ridiculousness of his going nowhere in such luxury with you, and the dancers of Barcelona, after one night in Paris would call for hot numbers. Living for love, the sea wolf would attempt to exercise woman control only to run into man trouble. Oh for a man, her kind of man! Men on call! That's the kind for these young sinners, and no favors asked. The last of the Duanes gave fair warning to the princess and the plumber, and broadcast it to the world over Fox Movietone News, that she's my girl — she wears the pants. Soup to nuts — that's the content of the big 48 Fox is carrying over the big trail of 30-31."

I caught a preview of Greta Garbo in "Romance" last night. This one will have them standing in the aisles, no less than did "Anna Christie." The Garbo portrays an entirely different character, the one you may remember Doris Keane in a few years ago. But the old lure will not be denied and the throaty Garbo middle register throbs give the spectators what they're willing to pay for. Greta's English shows improvement and her acting is the same tense thrill that you've learned to look for.

GARBO DOES IT AGAIN!

And Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer adds another hit to "Big House", "Let Us Be Gay" (Shearer), "Our Blushing Brides" (Crawford), "Way Out West" (Haines).

11th ANNUAL ANNOUNCEMENT ··· 1930 ·· 1931

The ONE BIG COMEDY PROGRAM

Educational Pictures

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"

GOOD COMEDY was never in such demand or of such importance as it is today. It is a vital, an essential, part of the new screen entertainment. In a year and a half of the talking comedy it has won an enthusiastic public approval, and has enabled exhibitors to build programs that are more satisfying as entertainment and more economical in cost.

It is the theatre's one best bet to appeal to the juvenile patronage that has been drifting away. The youngsters can understand and enjoy the comedy, and will come to see it.

This new meaning of the comedy makes it a matter that calls for the most careful thought in your planning for the coming season. EDUCATIONAL is the one sure, safe place to turn for it. Though acknowledged Short Feature leaders for more than ten years, EDUCATIONAL PICTURES have never stood out so far ahead of the field. Their leadership since they ushered in the New Day of the Comedy with their first sound releases has been so pronounced as to belie all competition. It is recognized by the entire industry.

The current season has seen these great comedies on the screens of almost every de luxe theatre in the land—and altogether in more than 7,000 of the country's 10,000 wired theatres. It has seen their box-office value attested by big exploitation campaigns by leading showmen, by an entirely new exhibitor attitude toward the advertising of short features.

And now, with greatly enlarged studio facilities, EDUCATIONAL is advancing to a still bigger year of comedy. The Educational, Metropolitan and Sennett Studios offer an array of specialized comedy brains and talent, under the leadership of MACK SENNETT and AL CHRISTIE, that is without a rival. And other studios in the East will provide humorous novelties on the same high quality plane.

With a comprehensive national advertising and publicity campaign behind these pictures, EDUCATIONAL offers you a line of talking comedies and novelties that, consistently played and consistently exploited, can be one of your biggest assets for 1930-1931; a group of pictures which we proudly and confidently announce as the greatest comedy program the screen has yet seen.

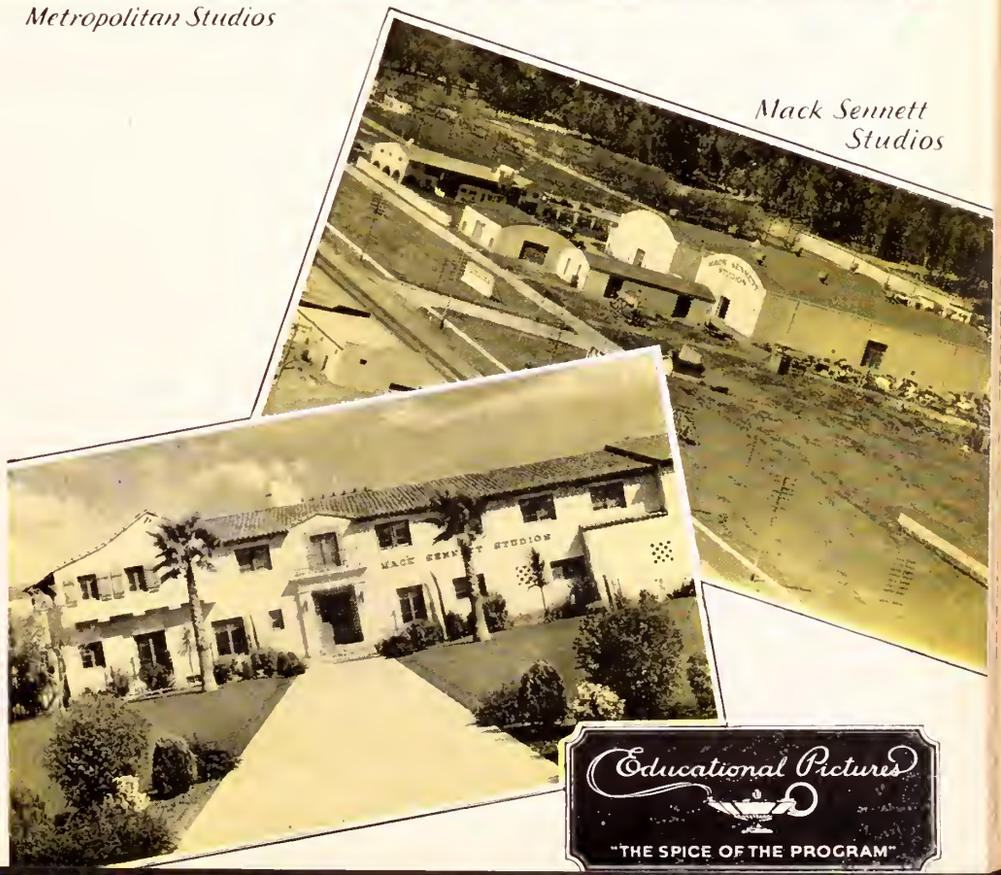
Greatest Studio Resources

Metropolitan Studios

BACK of the comedies offered in this announcement are the greatest studio resources and the greatest specialized brain power ever devoted to one company's short feature comedy program.



EDUCATIONAL has pursued a policy of steady expansion ever since the introduction of sound into comedies. This has recently culminated in the affiliation of the EDUCATIONAL and METROPOLITAN Sound Studios, giving EDUCATIONAL the finest studio facilities in the history of any short feature organization. There are thirteen big stages at these two studios, six of which, totaling over 60,000 square feet, are sound-proofed and furnished with the most up-to-the-minute sound production equipment. With several portable outfits mounted on trucks, the comedy units at the EDUCATIONAL and METROPOLITAN Studios have practically unlimited working facilities.

EDUCATIONAL Studios operate with the RCA Photophone method. METROPOLITAN Studios use the Western Electric System.

The MACK SENNETT Studios at Studio City, where the two-reel MACK SENNETT TALKING COMEDIES and the single-reel MACK SENNETT BREVITIES are being produced, similarly rank among the finest in the industry as well as the most beautiful. Here there are two big sound-proofed stages with a total of 40,000 square feet, as well as an aquatic stage, housing a swimming pool, also adapted for talking picture production, and portable truck equipment. The RCA Photophone system is employed.

From these great production centers will come the talking comedies which EDUCATIONAL now offers you for 1930-1931. A splendid guarantee behind a splendid program of short features!

For the Children

For the Grown-Ups

"The coming of talkies," says Photoplay Magazine, "has brought astounding advances in the field of short pictures, particularly in the comedy line."

Photoplay is so impressed by these "astounding advances" that it inaugurates a monthly review of short features. And, of course, starts it off with a review of EDUCATIONAL'S latest comedy release! A fine reflection of the public's attitude, which it is Photoplay's business to know.

EDUCATIONAL is justifiably proud of the leading part it has played in the "astounding advances" in short features in the last year and a half. For no one company's product has ever led the march of progress in its field with greater honor.

We direct exhibitors' attention to a review of the unfailing progress of EDUCATIONAL'S TALKING COMEDIES in the current season as an indication of the progress to be confidently looked for in the coming year. From "THE LION'S ROAR" and "THE BRIDE'S RELATIONS" down through such hits as "LOOK OUT BELOW," "DON'T BE NERVOUS," "PRINCE GABBY," "CLANCY AT THE BAT" and "SUGAR PLUM PAPA," to such current first run smash laugh successes as "HONEYMOON ZEPPELIN," "GOOD MORNING, SHERIFF," "WESTERN KNIGHTS" and "MATCH PLAY," they have been one steady procession of "astounding advances," until today they are playing in the finest theatres in every city in the land and are being watched for by millions of eager fans.

Here is a real background of national prestige and popularity for the biggest opportunity you ever had to make money with short features. Get these 1930-1931 talking comedies signed up now and begin planning now to exploit them consistently. Play these comedies for the pleasure of your child patrons as well as the grown-ups. You are sure the children will understand and enjoy them. How well the adults appreciate them is proved by the record of the last year. Advertise them to appeal to both the kids and their parents.

Whatever your feature picture line-up for the coming season, you can win new child and adult patronage, and make more money, by playing and advertising these talking comedies.

Getting at the Truth

During discussions at the recent 2-2-2 conference, one producer-distributor representative insisted that it cost 30 per cent of the total annual film intake to handle the 15 per cent gross received from the independents, referring to theatres not members of the producer chains. Later another member of the same group testified that since compulsory arbitration was ruled illegal by the Thacher decree, 45 per cent of the previously written contracts were a total loss to his company!

These two statements clash, in our opinion. Assuming the statement of the latter representative to be correct, either the gross intake from the so-called independents represents greatly in excess of the claimed 15 per cent gross intake of film rentals and certainly more than the alleged 45 per cent loss on unfulfilled contracts or the circuits didn't live up to the terms of their contracts with that representative's company.

We believe both statements of these producer-distributor-exhibitor representatives bear out our contention as set forth last week in this column. The former is deliberately lying with regard to the strength and importance of the independent operator, as substantiated by evidence of the second representative.

As previously pointed out, the chain operators and their associate members would dwarf the importance of the non-chain members for the express purpose of maintaining dictatorship over the large majority in prices, policy, runs, protection and other elements of extreme importance to the minority—the chains.

These points are brought out in this column primarily to prove to the independent operators that they should and do hold the balance of power—but that they do not exercise their rights. In the Minneapolis territory, with which we are most familiar, only about 140 theatres out of 1,400 are producer-owned. And they are not all important runs, either. We believe it would make interesting reading of figures to check the books of the various distributors to ascertain just what percentage of the annual gross film rental the 10 per cent producer-owned theatres in this territory composes of the total yearly intake.

We believe the statement of the first producer representative speaking is correct in one detail, i.e. —the annual cost of doing business with the independents to be approximately 30 per cent of the total cost of selling and distribution; the other 70 per cent of the selling and distribution cost, we believe, is chargeable to the sales to circuits by the high salaried executives with the enormous weekly expense sheets.

We stand by our original claims and contentions:

1. That the claim independents contribute but 15 per cent of the annual gross revenue from films at a selling and distribution cost of 30 per cent to be a deliberate lie for the purpose of holding the majority in awe.

2. That more than 16,000 independent theatres contribute more than 50 per cent of the annual gross film rental.

3. That the independent element actually upholds the public influence in the industry.

Furthermore, we believe, as previously stated that the total cost of selling distribution to the independents represents but 30 per cent of the entire annual cost and the balance should rightfully be charged against the producer-owned theatres.

Will those who stand accused in this column defend their actions and statements or will they discontinue their deliberate misrepresentations?

We wonder!

Economic Pressure Halting Theatre Grabbing Orgy; Zoning Unnecessary?

Double Entendre

Chicago—A local exchange manager who afforded one of the home town girls an entree that later led her to stardom has a recent portrait of the young lady prominently displayed in his office. It bears the following inscription: "You made me, Big Boy!"

"John, dear," queried the exchangeman's wife the other day, eyeing the picture for the first time, "John, dear, I've been wondering: Is that an acknowledgement or an accusation?"

Columbia's Notion Of Graves' Pact Results in Jam

Hollywood—Although Columbia thought it had Ralph Graves under a five-year optional contract, with three more years to go, Graves did a walkout and advised Columbia to look the contract over more closely, according to report. When Columbia found Graves could not be held further, deal was made for the player-director-writer to appear in two pictures for Columbia, the first of which will be "Dirigible."

After this adjustment was made, Graves arranged to write one story for Universal, and after that goes over to M-G-M under a long term writing contract at a reported salary triple his Columbia weekly check. Provision is made for Graves to return to Columbia to complete his agreement.

Graves has been with Columbia for about three years, and worked under a contract with the company for the past two years, directing, writing and acting during that time. It is reported that something happened to the final three years of the Graves contract during a period of disagreement over money matters—and only a small sum was involved.

N. Y. Securities Bureau Probing Duplex Affairs

Books and records of the Duplex Motion Picture Industries, Long Island, have been subpoenaed by the Bureau of Securities as part of an investigation of that company. The subpoena came when an accountant, detailed by the bureau to go over the books of the company, reported he was denied free and uninterrupted access to the books. Complaints have been made to the New York Evening Journal in that paper's stock fraud expose in connection with affairs of Duplex and Intercontinental Film Laboratories.

Scouts Being Recalled as Chains Find They Can't Stand Gaff

Readjustment of the situation caused by cut-throat building and acquisition of theatres throughout the country on the part of the four major circuits may eliminate need for corrective steps, such as proposed division of the United States into four zones with each chain to be kingpin of a zone to the exclusion of the other three.

This is the view taken in some quarters where it is pointed out conditions complained of are being corrected through shifting economic conditions. Thus, the money stringency is causing retrenchment, with the orgy of expansion being halted. Scouts are being recalled by the leading chains which are finding that working arrangements can replace extravagant expansion to their mutual benefit.

Paramount, Warners, Fox and R-K-O are the companies reported to have been considering a proposed parceling of the United States into zones to end the theatree expansion rivalry between them.

Committees Named for Rezoning at Philly

Philadelphia—Committees have been appointed by the M. P. T. O. and local distributors to draft a plan for the rezoning of the Philadelphia territory. A series of meetings and conferences will be held in the near future for the purpose of drafting a zoning system for the entire district.

Brandts, Former Operators In Bklyn., Back in Field

William and Harry Brandt, who retired as independent theatre operators when they sold their Brooklyn holdings to Fox Metropolitan, plan a come-back.

Indications that the former is preparing are seen in the formation of three companies in Albany, the William Brandt Windsor Amusement Corp., William Brandt Flatbush Theatre Corp. and William Brandt Jamaica Amusement Co.

Congratulations!

Hollywood—M. Stanley Bergerman, son-in-law of Carl Laemmle, is now general manager of Universal's short subject department.

Garbo Again!

Hollywood—"Romance" is slow in tempo, but it has Garbo. She carries the picture through by sheer force of her ability. The picture will go over because of her tremendous popularity, although it doesn't compare with several of her previous efforts.

Byrd Polar Film Shelved After Two Canadian 1st Runs

Toronto—Considerable interest has been aroused in the withdrawal of "With Byrd at the South Pole" from Canadian theatres. After playing two runs, one at the Tivoli here and the Palace, Montreal, further engagements of the Byrd production were cancelled and the film now is on the shelf. The presentations at Toronto and Montreal proved very disappointing, little enthusiasm being shown toward the portrayal of the Byrd achievement by the Canadians. Further, Canadian officialdom did not appear to be very enthusiastic.

Motion Picture News

Vol. XLII NEW YORK CITY, JULY 26, 1930 No. 4

KICKED, BUT NOT LICKED

TWO theatres—one a large and gaudy circuit house, the other a small "family" independent—face each other on opposite sides of a business artery in a city near Chicago. A woman and a child step up to the box-office of the circuit house are handed a ticket and change by machinery.

A little farther on, a stiff-backed, unsmiling attendant points automatically to a ticket chopper. A brusque employee in the outer lobby waves them mechanically and indifferently onward to where a machine-like usher sweeps them down an aisle to a front seat and leaves them.

Cold, disinterested, lackadaisical. Efficient, as the theory of efficiency goes, of course. No doubt about that.

Two Ways—One Good

IN the second theatre, another patron approaches the box-office and is greeted with a smile and a cheery "hello" from the cashier. A second greeting awaits the customer as she approaches the ticket taker. In the lobby is the owner-manager, who welcomes her by name and stops for a chat. Maybe he talks about the weather. Or the children. Or the show. Who knows or cares?

Occasionally, he escorts her to a seat in the theatre himself. Under all circumstances, she is at home in these friendly and familiar surroundings. So much so that she doesn't hesitate to acquaint the usher who serves her willingly and cordially with her preferences in seats.

And the Moral Is This—

THE circuit house has changed ownership three times since its opening four years ago. It has known closings on two different occasions. The chain which now has the theatre on lease has been attempting for some time to turn it back to its former owners.

The "lone hand" theatre has been owned and operated for the past twelve years by the same smart showman. In that period of time, it has been closed only twice: once for remodelling, once for installation of sound.

Two accurate extremes of the situation in exhibition today. Not confined to this particular city, but rampant, and flagrantly so, all over these United States.

THAT'S one slant. And this backs it up:

In Washington this week, economists and experts attached to the Department of Commerce came to the conclusion that the "little fellow" in all lines of business is far from licked. "In the last analysis," the official word has it, "the independent merchant will maintain his place in proportion to the efficiency with which he performs his functions and renders a real service to the community."

"The neighborhood grocer can introduce those elements of personal attention and service which are much appreciated by the consumer and which cannot so readily be supplied by a vast, impersonal corporation."

Grocer or exhibitor, butcher or baker, the conclusion is sound, infallible and indisputable.

Tidal Waves and Ripples

THE unaffiliated exhibitor has been having a tough time. High rentals, payments on sound equipment, preferred protection for producer-owned first runs and pictures that are bad because one-mind production is battling a problem which no single person alive can conquer—all of these factors and more are digging their sharp and painful prongs into the resisting carcass of the harassed showman.

Yet, we repeat today as we have in the past and will continue to so do that the individual, if he knows his stuff, can and will weather the economic tidal wave which he falsely thinks will engulf him.

The Bromide Again

THE major companies need the revenue that comes from the so-called small and unimportant theatre operator. With foreign markets dwindling before producers' eyes, the independent in this country assumes a more dominant position than ever before. The big companies want to and will sustain the downtrodden exhibitor, not necessarily by choice but by necessity.

The thing for the showman to do is to lose that inferiority complex, square his shoulders, apply them to the grindstone and use his head. He's been kicked well nigh to hell and back again, but he's not yet licked.

Get wise. Get the religion. Get busy.

Gaping Stars Fall For Star Gazing; Get Nize Dope

Hollywood—Despite the unpleasant publicity recently, when several picture "names" were brought into the trial of a mystic, the coast is still going strong for the mediums, soothsayers, palmists, mind readers and crystal gazers.

Business in the conference parlors slumped a little while the recent trial was in progress, but the same old stand-bys of the film colony made their regular trips to find out just what they should do in investments, personal life, etc., and just what prospects they had for early work in pictures.

The recent production slump on the coast—or, rather, the tremendous over-supply of talent through the influx of so many stage personalities; sent thousands of the film colony to the mystics and readers. Then again, many of the stage players—always easy prey for the "reading the future" gag—finally discovered that there were some pretty smart birds among the mediums and "future-lookers" around Hollywood, and they became steady customers.

Scouts Get Busy

When the stage gang got onto the "best readers," the latter found it rather difficult to do much reading for the individual, as the latter was an unknown on the coast and the "professor" had little inside dope available. But when the person came back there was plenty in the files. The reliable scouts had gone out and dug up the past history, business and family background, etc., so that the second and succeeding readings were right on the line.

One palmist that has been getting quite a substantial play from the picture colony has decided to postpone his yearly vacation until his gullible customers stop coming in wholesale numbers.

Only last week, the maid of an actress prominent in the business and social life of the film colony called the Motion Picture News office to tell the professor that her employer "would not be able to get down this morning, but would be in tomorrow sure."

Although informed that she had the wrong number, the maid insisted on explaining in detail whom she wanted to talk to—and why.

There are many stories (undercover, of course) about the prominent personalities in Hollywood who make regular trips to various and sundry mediums, palmists and analyzers. The customers include producing supervisors, directors, actors, writers, players of both sexes, studio execs and lesser lights on the various company payrolls. Some of the names blaze forth in the largest types on the 24 sheets for pictures; and others get smaller size letters on the poster advertising, but they are all willing to put the old dough on the line for a chance look into the future—whether it's on the level or not.

Lawyers, Threatening to Sue For Fees, Taken Care of Without Court Action

Quietly and with nary a tip-off to an industry that didn't know it was happening, Harley L. Clarke, Mid-West public utilities magnate and now part and parcel of the picture business as well, has warded off a barrage of law suits, threatened by lawyers, which might have hampered and retarded the reorganization of the Fox enterprises had they been permitted to reach the courts.

When the struggle for control of the Fox companies had reached its peak, there were as many as twenty-two legal lights in the competitive lists, representing various groups of stockholders and individuals. Exactly what the combined legal fees totaled has never been divulged, but estimates have run the figure up as high as $5,000,000.

After Clarke stepped in and bought the Class B voting stock owned by William Fox and thereby assumed control of the companies, the statements for services from various law firms began to pour in. For a time, it appeared that the tangle of who was to pay whom and how much would end up before judge and jury.

No More "Dirty Linen"

It is understood that Clark appreciated the fact that unless something was done about it, the washing of Fox linen in the public prints might continue without end. He then moved to clear up the situation which by that time was extremely complex until today, it is learned, the slate is practically clean.

Clarke's quick handling of the problem is regarded by the limited few who know the details as an extremely workmanlike job and constitutes the last colorful chapter in washing up the inside organization history of the companies which he now heads.

Philly Hears Janet Is in Town; Police Called

Philadelphia—Word that Janet Gaynor was visiting her father, Frank Gaynor, in Frankford, attracted such a crowd outside the house that a police guard was sent for to prevent disorder. The player paid a flying visit to her father's home, accompanied by her husband, Lydell Peck.

Miss Gaynor was born on Wister Street near Germantown Avenue in Philadelphia 23 years ago.

Lyon's Mother Honored

Hollywood—In a nation-wide contest conducted by the Photographers' Ass'n of America to find "America's Loveliest Mothers"—Mrs. A. W. Lyon of Hollywood was awarded third prize. Mrs. Lyon is the mother of Ben Lyon, featured screen player.

Claims Columbia Welched on Deal; Sues for $450,000

Columbia has 20 days in which to answer action brought in the Supreme Court, New York, by Herbert R. Ebenstein, insurance broker, for $450,000 which he claims is due him in commissions for interesting F. J. Lisman & Co. in financing the producing company.

The action, which Joe Brandt describes as "one of those things," is based on an alleged agreement entered into between Columbia and Ebenstein on Sept. 7, 1928, wherein the latter declares he was to secure finances for Brandt's organization. The complaint avers that Columbia needed such financing sorely at the time.

Ebenstein says he finally interested Lisman in the plan, but that Columbia would not go through with it, switching to Goddard & Co. His attorneys are Abeles and Green.

Suggest'n of Peace Award For Laemmle Hit by Quirk

Agitation to obtain the Nobel Peace Prize for Carl Laemmle, producer of "All Quiet on the Western Front," leads James R. Quirk to make some pertinent remarks in the current issue of Photo Magazine both on the fitness of such a choice and on the relative recognition accorded author and producer.

"Far be it from me to intimate that the jolly idea originated with any one even remotely connected with Uncle Carol's payroll," says Quirk. "But that the idea originated in Hollywood I have no doubt. It is just that kind of an idea—if you know what I mean.

"If I mistake me not, didn't Carl Laemmle's Universal company produce one of those blood-red war pictures that were the box-office fashion in the early days of our participation in the late conflict—the days when 'The Beast of Berlin,' 'To Hell With the Kaiser' and 'On to Berlin' helped send our boys to the enlistment offices yelling for revenge?

"Also, there is not a word among the suggestions about Remarque who actually wrote the book which Director Lewis Milestone translated so faithfully into celluloid."

The Insiders' Outlook

THEY'RE covering it up mighty well. Maybe so well that the yarn won't break—with names—until the internal situation in a certain outfit is straightened away.

But the facts are these for you to read into them what you will:

Unless a radical improvement in quality is evidenced by the production head of this particular organization, the blow-up that now impends will be speedy, devastating, and costly.

Speedy, because something has to be done to keep the producer's allied theatres supplied with real box-office pictures.

Devastating, because it will surprise the business under whose very nose the situation is so rapidly crystallizing.

And costly, because the man involved is well up in the four-figure-a-week class under a contract which runs for several years.

At the New York end, those in whose destinies the future of the company rests are worried and alarmed over the present state of affairs and quite a bit at a loss what to do. You see, there are several hard-headed, practical bankers whose questions will have to be satisfied and that, as usual, won't be such an easy obstacle to hurdle.

He'll Find Out

Hollywood today is the Hollywood of waning song writers, dialogue writers, stage people and patents. With the introduction of sound, the coast was forced to become familiar with all of these. Basic patents sprung up overnight, and there were so many improvements made, and at so fast a rate, no one seemed to know just where things were at.

In this jumble, one smart studio technician took advantage of the fact that separate basic patents on a certain device were held by two different individuals. Although the patents were different and allowable, they achieved practically the same results. The technician has been jumping the two basic patents for several years, figuring that if one of the patent holders checked on him, he would secure a license from the other and claim his process was based on the latter.

But a few months ago, the two patent holders got together and decided that they would join forces. A separate company was formed, in another state, to retain secrecy and now they are checking up on the pirate technician with a view to entering suit for damages. It will run into hundreds of thousands.

Funny part is that the technician's company—one of the big ones—will have to take care of the suit and the damages.

Pinching the Rooster

Lower Broadway is the scene. The principals are several bankers, and their subject, Pathe.

Unconfirmable—as a matter of fact denied and emphatically, too—is the yarn that Harley L. Clarke, who says nothing but does much, is dickering for Pathe's interest in the Du Pont-Pathe Manufacturing Co., marketers of raw stock and an extremely prosperous business enterprise.

Also for Pathe News. Why the latter? Not hard to dope that one out.

Yet, speaking on behalf of Pathe, is the official executive, preferring to remain unnamed, who gives the assurance that this is not to be. Admitting that such a deal was discussed some months ago, this informant ups and declares Pathe is not for sale; that the company is all set to go on its own and looking to the future with a very considerable optimism.

And there, this one rests for the time being.

Virtuous Dowagers

Bob Cochrane, taking his lusty typewriter in hand, postalsystems this:

"So the old Universal is sold down the river again!

"That's what your 'Insiders' Outlook' sees in the offing.

"The fact that there is no truth in the story doesn't matter," he continues. "It's still a good story. It has been a good story for years and years and years. It's one of the best stories the industry has ever had, because it has always been available when there was nothing else to talk about."

Then, in the best Cochranian humor:

"We're perfectly willing to take our turn in being sold out by rumor, but don't you think you should divide the honor with other companies now and then?"

The Insiders* have heard their stuff described in many ways, some of them hardly suitable for publication, but Cochrane transfixes it like this:

"I like to read your 'Insiders' Outlook' because it reminds me for all the world of a virtuous old dowager kittenishly pretending to be naughty —when we all know darned well that she's painfully virtuous—but I must insist that hereafter you refrain from selling Universal more than once a month. It ain't doing right by our Nell."

Jam—Studio Kind

Is Zanuck in or is Zanuck out?

Hollywood both asks and answers its own question in the same breath.

The boulevards out California way are rampant with reports, rumors and whisperings that Darryl, associate producer on the Warner lot, may shortly leave the company.

Story goes he and Jack Warner hit it off in grand style, as has been the case for lo these several years, but that elsewhere in the New York high councils of the organization Zanuck does not sit so fortissimo.

An entirely different slant runs something like this:

That Zanuck has just signed a new two-year contract at $6,000 a week. Which puts the chatter about kissing the Warners good-bye exactly 104 weeks off.

System—1930 Style

A trick of the trade. Call it big business, if you like:

A big timer, well known throughout the industry and particularly in New York, is filling a man's-sized job and filling it well. The company he is running has interests in practically every branch of the amusement field.

Yet, this chap, for some reason which those who know his gag fail to understand in view of his undeniable competence, persists in staging a performance day in and day out for the benefit of his president. This is how he does it:

He pyramids his appointments with various department heads, running the last half of the first into the first half of the second. And so on. As a result, whenever the head of the company calls for this exec, he's usually advised Mr. So-and-So has seven or eight conferences on at once. Or if the big boss should peek in the door, he finds this particular office cluttered with conversation and men.

It's a swell racket for the executive-racketeer, for he has sold his superior the idea he's slaying himself on the altar of the company's progress.

Chains Now Find They Must Lean On "Little Fellow" To Fight Oppression

Showmanship!

How they run theatres in New York City:

One, showing the Oswald cartoon, "Not So Quiet," billed it on the program as "All Is Quiet."

Another reported that his house, now second run, would become first run in the fall, but did not know why.

In another the cats chase rats around the auditorium during the performances, but the audiences pay no attention to them. They're used to it.

And they talk about "the sticks."

Warners Plan To Expand in Texas And in Oklahoma

Oklahoma City — Warners will expand throughout Oklahoma and Texas with opening of the Midwest, scheduled for Aug. 1. The theatre is one of the group of Tom Roland houses recently taken over by the company. The lease on the Shrine Auditorium is to be continued for presentation of roadshows and long runs. The Midwest and Liberty will offer first runs, the Empress and Folly second runs and the Palace, under lease to Sol Teters, will continue vaudeville, musical comedy and pictures.

Harry Zehner to Head 233 Club on the Coast

Hollywood—Harry H. Zehner, assistant general manager of Universal Studios, and one of the most popular production executives in Hollywood, is slated to become president of the 233 Club at the organization's annual election Aug. 20. Zehner was selected for the post by the two nominating committees.

Other candidates for offices in the theatrical Masonic body include: John Le Roy Johnston, executive vice-president; Henry Otto, Charles Crockett, P. A. Be Hannessy, C. E. Toberman and Jean Hersholt, vice-presidents; Otto K. Oleson, treasurer; Morris Resch, Abraham Goldman and Lee King, secretaries; Marco Hellman, W. S. Van Dyke, Edwin Carewe, Samuel Kress, J. J. Franklin, Lloyd Whitlock and Clifford Smith, directors.

Victory Seen

St. Paul—Indicating a victory for exhibitors in their fight to secure one operator in the booth of sound houses and a non-union helper to change discs and needles, operators here have discontinued bannering of houses now running open shop as a result of the controversy with the union.

Personal Contact Factor in Warding Off Adverse Legislative Moves

Value of the independent exhibitor in combating adverse legislation now is being recognized by circuit operators, who find in "the little fellow" a bulwark of protection against oppressive laws.

The independent's personal contact with his local, state and Federal representatives, the big chains are finding, goes a long way in thwarting objectionable measures as they arise. The circuit with its far-removed home office often finds itself at a disadvantage in coping with legislative attacks. This, plus the antagonism against chain operation which is being felt by other lines of business, places the circuit in a dependent position so far as legislative activity is concerned.

Aiding Exhibitor Bodies

To this growing appreciation of the need for the independents' aid can be attributed decision of circuits to become active in regional exhibitor organization activities. The circuits now are lending support to exhibitor bodies, finding the co-operation mutually beneficial. There have been numerous instances where independent exhibitors have saved the day in combatting censorship and obnoxious tax measures, particularly where the solons had evidenced an inclination to "pick on" circuit operators.

South Dakota in Danger of 10% Ticket Tax Levy

Pierre, S. D.—Because exhibitors of this state probably will not present a united front in a campaign against a ten per cent tax measure now pending, and the Northwest exhibitor unit will remain aloof from the fight, there is danger of the bill becoming law. Senator Charles Lee Hyde, who is a local exhibitor, killed the bill in committee at the last session, but this year the situation is different. The Northwest exhibitor unit probably will keep hands off, stating the bill is a matter for Will H. Hays and Charles C. Pettijohn to combat.

Tiffany Artist Dies

Ailing since undergoing an attack of pneumonia some time ago, Walter Hopkins, veteran Tiffany artist, was found dead in his bed at his New York home by John Savage of the company. The latter had called to inquire why Hopkins had not reported at the office.

Klein, Hoffman Abroad

Edward L. Klein and M. H. Hoffman, associated in development of Liberty Prod., are in Europe, having left New York hurriedly late last week.

A Critic's Slant

The tendency on the part of some theatrical circuits to substitute, in part, billboards and street car advertising for paid newspaper space puzzles me.

Whoever heard of a theatregoer walking to the corner and waiting there until a trolley came along that he might determine which show he would attend?

Or of a theatregoer touring the billboards by motor to make a selection?—Chester Bahn in the Syracuse Herald.

Charninsky Firm Takes Over 'Pan' At Kansas City

Kansas City—Marking another step in the breaking up of the Pantages chain which is being reduced to a handful of theatres, the Pantages here has been taken over by the Charno Amusement Co., new firm formed by Louis Charninsky and A. A. Mack.

Charninsky continues as manager of the theatre, which is to play first runs and Fanchon & Marco presentations. Mack is owner of the Twelfth St. theatre. Charninsky completed the deal with the Pantages Theatre Co. of Los Angeles.

Cinema Patents Co. Suit Against Craft Up Aug. 12

Wilmington, Del.—Craft Film Laboratories, Inc., has been cited to appear before Federal Judge John P. Nields, Aug. 12, to defend a motion for a preliminary injunction restraining the use of its developing machines. The citation was obtained by Cinema Patents Company, which filed the action recently, alleging infringement of two patents granted on a application of Leon Gaumont, filed in 1909.

Another Tilt at Columbia; Barsky Out as Producer

Hollywood—After eight months as associate producer at Columbia, Bud Barsky has resigned. William Lord Wright, formerly in charge of serials and shorts at Universal, takes over some of Barsky's duties.

Exhibs on Spot

Minneapolis—Action against a number of exhibitors of the territory, some of them prominent, for alleged copyright violations may be undertaken by distributors. Alleged offenders have been notified of complaints following investigation by the Hays office. Bicycling and holding over of prints are charged.

Warners, First National, to Be Party To Contract if Move Consistent, Legal Companies' Legal Staffs Now Studying Situation, Says Sam E. Morris

Whether Warners and First National will be a party to the new standard license agreement is a matter being determined by the companies' legal staff, in consultation with attorneys of the various other companies.

Sam E. Morris

Sam E. Morris, Warner vice-president in charge of distribution, is authority for the statement, declaring that the companies are eager to become parties to the contract, but "don't know yet whether that can be done."

The arrangement existing between the two companies and Electrical Research Products presents an unique situation, so far as the contract is concerned, and necessitates that Warner films and sound be sold separately. This means that there is to be no change in the two firms' policies respecting score charges.

Will Join if Consistent, Legal

Warners and First National will become parties to the contract if they can consistently and legally do so, Morris says. The legal phase of the matter is raised by the Thacher decision outlawing compulsory arbitration.

At the recent 5-5-5 conferences, which drafted the proposed new standard contract, strong effort was made by exhibitors to bring about elimination of score charges. Distributors, however, took the position that efforts to cut score charges were beyond the province of the conference, and that score charges properly are matters of company policy.

Meanwhile, final details of the proposed new form of agreement are being whipped into shape, preparatory to submission of the proposed new contract to exhibitor groups for ratification.

"U" May Make Its Foreign Talkers in Berlin Studio

Hollywood—Universal is figuring on establishing production headquarters for foreign versions of talkers in Berlin, with present plans calling for making German, Spanish and French talkers in that center for the European market. Paul Kohner may take charge of the plant.

Gets Scandinavia Post

Carl Nielsen has taken over the duties of district manager of Scandinavia for Fox, with headquarters in Stockholm, Sweden, according to an announcement by Clayton P. Sheehan, general foreign manager.

Franklin Discusses Contract

Harold B. Franklin, in New York, on a quick trip from the Coast, came East to discuss his new contract with Harley L. Clarke, president of the Fox companies.

Franklin has some months to go on his existing arrangement, but it is possible the unexpired term may be cancelled in favor of an entirely new agreement to run for five years.

Indie Pow Wow to Assail 5-5-5 is Rembusch's Plan

Minneapolis—Frank J. Rembusch of Indianapolis wants to call a meeting of unaffiliated exhibitors here in the stronghold of W. A. Steffes, one of the Allied leaders, to discuss the proposed new arbitration and rezoning plans and the Thacher decree.

Allied leaders will be openly charged by Rembusch with "leading the independents to slaughter." He will declare that the 2-2-2 and 5-5-5 conferences violate the Thacher decree.

Fox-R-K-O Swap Of Theatres Is Off In Wisconsin

Milwaukee—H. J. Fitzgerald, vice-president and general manager of Fox Midwesco Theatres, has received word from the New York office that the deal between R-K-O and Fox, affecting the latter's Strand in Madison and the former's Palace-Orpheum theatre in this city, has been discontinued.

Due to some last minute change in the plans, the negotiations did not materialize after several months of dickering, it was reported. By means of the plan, Fox was to turn over its Strand in Madison to R-K-O giving that circuit the control of the town, while Fox was to acquire R-K-O's Palace-Orpheum here and provide R-K-O's Riverside theatre in this city with Fox product.

Colman Pleases

Ronald Colman turns in another fine performance in "Raffles." As the gentleman crook trying to turn over a new leaf, but undertaking a gem theft to help save a friend, Colman is excellent. He has fine support, direction and production values.

There isn't the kick that "Bulldog Drummond" had, but "Raffles" is a good picture and one which will please generally.

HYNES

Quota Worse Bar In Germany Than Ex-Patent 'Jam'

Although successful in negotiating a patent peace in Germany, American distributors have run into the snag of the new German "kontingent," which may wreck film relations between the two countries to a greater extent than the patent jam now ended. The 210 limit set on foreign importations will make it virtually impossible for American distributors to operate profitably in Germany.

Will H. Hays is arriving in New York Tuesday, when meetings will start to seek a solution of the new problem. There is a possibility that the American firms will figure that it's just too bad and withdraw entirely from the German market.

World Market Divided

The patent agreement divides the world market between German and American producers of talking picture apparatus as follows:

Germany supplies Germany (including the Danzig, Saar and Memel territory), Austria, Hungary, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Dutch East Indies, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Jugoslavia, Rumania and Bulgaria.

The United States supplies the United States, Canada, Newfoundland, Australia, New Zealand, Straits Settlements, India and Russia. Apparatus required for other countries, notably France and Britain, will be supplied by both German and American factories.

As the agreement also provides for complete interchangeability of German and American pictures and equipments, change in the equipments of both countries will be necessary.

School Heads Acquitted

Hollywood—Tried without jury, Ulysses M. Dailley and Vincent M. Barnett, film actors' school proprietors, were acquitted of charges of grand theft by Superior Judge Hardy. Nearly a score of former students were prosecution witnesses.

Schenck to Coast

Joseph M. Schenck of United Artists left New York for Hollywood Thursday, indicating that he has abandoned his customary trip to Europe this summer.

Will U. S. Protection Case Hold Water In View of Rezoning? Is Coast's Query

Needed: Another Code

Baltimore — Independents here are squawking over the practice of downtown houses advertising that certain films will "not be shown again this season" in local houses. They claim that such copy misleads the public as the term "season" is indefinite, and as a result subsequent run business is hit. The Maryland exhibitor unit is investigating.

Circuit Bucking Cleveland Zoning; Draft New Plan

Cleveland—Obstacles to resumption of the zoning system abandoned a year ago are seen in the opposition of one circuit here, which claims it can secure better arrangements without the plan. Whether this stand will throw a monkey-wrench into the proceedings can not as yet be ascertained.

Meanwhile, exhibitors and distributors are holding conferences on the proposed schedules. Members of the Film Board drafted a tentative plan which has been submitted to the Cleveland exhibitor unit. The plan was in operation several years before being discontinued. Its resumption is said to be desired by exhibitors and distributors generally.

Allied Still Has Hope of National Clearance Board

Washington—Allied States Ass'n has not abandoned its hopes of a national board to consider protection problems. Distributors declined to discuss the Allied proposal during the contract meetings, holding that protection was being worked out by the series of conferences being held on the subject in various keys.

Allied wants local boards in key cities and a national appeal board to arbitrate any disagreements which may arise.

Sullivan to Return to Coast for U. S. Case

With product of three major companies set for the Fox eastern houses and deals under way for the Midwesco and Fox West Coast Circuits, Jack Sullivan, in charge of buying for Fox, is to leave New York soon for the Coast. He is to time his return to Los Angeles to be on hand for trial of the government's protection case on August 15.

Distributors Seen As Having Beat Government to Punch On Issue

Los Angeles—Whether the industry has beaten the government to the punch in handling the protection problem is expected to be demonstrated Aug. 15 when the conspiracy case brought against Fox West Coast Theatres, its officials and several distributors, is slated to go to trial. There is considerable speculation as to the outcome of the case.

The government charges Fox West Coast, its allies and a number of distributors with conspiring to freeze out independent houses, in criminal indictments voted by the Federal Grand Jury here. West Coast, through its president, Harold B. Franklin, has stated that it welcomes the government action in order to settle "once and for all" the legality of clearance.

To Forestall Action?

In what was considered a counter move, distributors have rewritten zoning schedules for southern California, in co-operation with independent and affiliated exhibitors. By the rezoning, it is stated, distributors figured they could remove the cause of government action and ward off its thrusts in the forthcoming conspiracy trial.

The Los Angeles rezoning program now is being used as a model for other territories, distributors declared, figuring that the rezoning of all territories, in cooperation with exhibitors, will forestall any proposed further government action.

Skouras Houses Key Factors in St. Louis Zoning

St. Louis—Re-zoning of this territory is under way. Schedules have been virtually agreed upon for the territory outside St. Louis by a joint committee of the Film Board and eastern Missouri and southern Illinois exhibitor unit. Fred Wehrenberg, president of the exhibitor unit, has called upon all exhibitors of the territory to cooperate by furnishing information as respects the various situations. Appearances of exhibitors before the zoning committee is being solicited.

One of the hardest nuts to crack will be the protection to be given the St. Louis Amusement Co. houses, the Skouras subsequent runs.

In some instances protection of 90 days is asked, whereas the committee members feel that 28 days perhaps would be more equitable. Owners of first run houses also feel that their zone should extend beyond the limits of the city in which they operate, but they may not receive such wide protection.

K. C. Awaits Approval

Kansas City—Verdict of New York sales managers is being awaited on the new zoning schedules drawn up by local exhibitors and distributors. Some time ago, a plan was drafted and submitted to New York, but it was rejected. Dave Palfreyman of the Hays office, sat in on last week's conferences.

Protection Plan In Illinois Skids Into the Discard

Chicago—Hopes of inaugurating a new protection system for downstate Illinois were dwindling this week as criticisms and objections to the so-called Rubens' plan, which J. J. Rubens, Publix-Great States executive, proposed at an early meeting of the rezoning committee here, continued to come in.

C. C. Pettijohn

It is believed now that the entire plan, tentatively agreed on by the downstate committee, will be abandoned within the next week. This plan was based on a proposal to limit protection to one mile for each 1,000 of population of towns of 3,000 and over. It specified a maximum protection limit of 40 miles. In its stead, proposals will be made to cover local situations where existing protection conditions are most unsatisfactory. These local provisions will be directed at sections where large circuits now command protection privileges throughout whole counties, and for excessive periods of six months and more.

Rider Called Illegal

Abandonment of all attempts to change the Chicago protection system in any respect came first. After six weeks of discussions the metropolitan rezoning committee decided to content itself with recommendations governing two-for-one admissions, double featuring and other phases of bargain showmanship, which were to be incorporated in a rider and attached to a contract incorporating the old Chicago protection system. This rider, however, was pronounced illegal as part of a Film Board contract when it was submitted to C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays' office recently. In consequence, it, too, has been abandoned.

The Chicago protection practices of the past will be put into written, legal form to serve for the future. No written document of the kind has existed here before, protection having been dictated by general and well understood principles.

RKO Business Big in Midwest; Bookers Doubled

Chicago—Business increases at mid-west RKO exchanges in recent months have resulted in doubling the booking forces at most of the branch offices, a regional sales meeting of the company, held at the Stevens Hotel here this week, was told. Exchanges that have not already doubled their booking forces will do so in the near future, it was predicted. Short subject bookings, it was said, will be handled by a short subject booker, since the increase in business has made it impossible for the feature bookers to handle both products in most of the mid-west exchanges any longer.

Charles Rosenzweig

Additional booking and sales policies to be introduced in RKO exchanges in this section were described by Charles Rosenzweig, general sales manager; Jerry Saffron, eastern division manager, and Clive Adams, mid-west division manager.

The meetings were attended by all mid-west branch managers, salesmen and bookers.

Musicians Must Stand Trial in Picketing Suit

San Francisco—The Musicians' Union and other organizations and individuals named as defendants in the $300,000 damage and injunction suit brought last month by Nasser Brothers have been given ten days in which to answer. Superior Judge C. P. Vicini, sitting for Judge Edmund P. Morgan, overruled the demurrer of the defendants and ordered them to answer the complaint of the theatre owners. Judge Vicini will listen next week to arguments on the order to show cause why a restraining order to prevent agents of the union from picketing three of the plaintiff's theatres should not be granted. Nat Schmulowitz, representing the plaintiffs, is asking for the order pending a hearing of the case on its merits.

"Phantom" Set for 18 Theatres in England

London—Playing first run at the Dominion, 3,000-seat house, "The Phantom of the Opera," upon which the ban recently was lifted by the British exhibitor association, has been set for 18 theatres in Britain during the next month. "The Phantom" was banned several years ago when the British became incensed over use of soldiers to exploit the film in London.

Some Bargain

Double-featuring is being continued with a vengeance in the Greater New York area, a Motion Picture News check-up shows. Most of the outlying houses are offering the two-picture show and showing the pick of the product on twin bills. As an instance, a Bronx house double-featured Marion Davies in "The Floradora Girl" and Maurice Chevalier in "The Big Pond."

Wood to Direct "The Crisis"

Hollywood—Upon completion of John Gilbert's current talker for M-G-M, "Way for a Sailor," Sam Wood will direct the talker remake of "The Crisis." Al Cohn and Dan Totheroh are preparing the adaptation and dialogue on the latter production.

Allied Unit to Refuse to Pay Score Charges

Chicago—Echo of Allied States's attitude on score charges, growing out of the refusal of Warners and First National to entertain proposals for their elimination, was had here this week when the local Allied unit unofficially advised its members not to pay score charges. The unit is headed by Aaron Saperstein.

Aaron Saperstein

A number of exchanges here have made no particular effort to collect the charges in the past and with the concerted refusal of the independents to pay them, it is believed these exchanges will abandon even their former indifferent efforts at collection. Warners and First National, however, are as emphatic as ever about score payments.

"Refusals to pay them," representatives of the company stated, "will be met with refusals to deliver film."

Buying Strike Until Fall, Idea Of Herrington

Pittsburgh—Buying strike by independent exhibitors of the territory until after the fall meetings, Oct. 20 and 21, of the M.P.T.O.A. of western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, is being advocated by Fred J. Herrington, secretary.

Don't get panicky in the belief that it will be impossible to get pictures next season as they have all been sold to the chains, is the substance of his warning.

"If you will only hold off, and let the salesman know when he calls on you that your play time or playing dates are just as valuable to him as his pictures are to you, it will be to your own advantage," he says.

"Look over your contracts that you have signed in the past, and count the number of pictures and the play dates that you have booked for the future. I believe you will find, in many cases, that you have enough pictures contracted for to run you up into October, and, in a number of cases, as far into the winter as December. Then, too, you must realize that there would be no pleasure in your buying pictures now that you cannot run until you have gone through with your present contracts, and if you will hold off for a couple of months you will be wise.

"Remember that when the market goes hunting the commodity, the price of the commodity will be advanced, but when the commodity seeks the market, the price of the commodity will, of necessity be forced down."

Ind'p't Not Licked By a Long Shot, Gov't Analysis of Business Reveals

South Taxing Theatres

Atlanta—Danger of an admission tax levy in Georgia, Florida and Alabama is expected to result in a militant convention Aug. 11 and 12 of the Southeastern Theatre Owners' Ass'n. It is regarded as a certainty that proposed ticket taxes will be introduced in the three states at the next sessions of their legislatures, and the narrow escapes of the past are expected to result in a strong preparedness campaign this year.

Being Taxed Out of Business

Jackson, Miss.—Exhibitors here are smarting under what they term the oppression of the 10 per cent admission tax levy, which went into effect June 1. A number of theatres of the state are threatened with extinction as a result of the tax, it is said.

Stage Show Boosts Nut, But Not Net At Houston Met

Houston—Close survey of the situation at the Publix Metropolitan since the resumption of stage shows five weeks ago after a four-month period of all-picture policy indicates that the theatre is about "breaking even."

In other words, attendance has increased some with the return of stage shows, and grosses proportionately, but net receipts are about the same. Actual figures are not available for any Houston theatre, but the estimated figures are $10,000 average weekly gross now as against $6,000 during the all-picture policy.

Advantage to the theatre is found in better satisfied customers since the stage shows have returned. There is no talk in Houston of the stage shows being discontinued again, but rather of building them up with better talent.

Local Publix officials declare business is normal and satisfactory, and the stage shows are "going over well." Statements at the time of the return of stage units to the effect that the "public demanded them for light entertainment during the summer months" seem to leave a loop hole allowing the return to all-picture policy if the box-office demanded it.

All theatres admit business is in a depressed condition generally but not more so than in other lines. Theatre attendance always drops here during the summer months because of outdoor amusement competition, including the bayshore points and Galveston beach, but 50 miles away on a paved highway.

Prepare for Stage Shows

Ottawa—New projection and stage equipment has been installed at B. F. Keith's here, which is expected to introduce Publix stage shows at an early date.

Stage Shows Not Proving Bets At Far N. W. Houses

Seattle—Paramount Publix officials and executives in the Pacific Northwest are scratching their heads and wondering again, upon the completion of the first four weeks of operation of the Paramount theatres in Seattle and Portland with the new stage shows.

Although these executives are decidedly adverse to giving out grosses for any of their houses in this territory, it is understood upon very good authority that the average weekly increase in gross business at the Seattle Paramount, at least, has failed to compensate for the greatly added cost of operation since the inauguration of stage units.

There is no denying that the stage shows meet with favor among the audiences, but apparently they have no pulling power of their own, falling into the same classification as short subjects of average character. This has been proved during recent weeks by the fact that a strong feature one week brought big business and a weak feature another week resulted in mediocre business, despite strong advertising and promotion of a stage show of better-than-average calibre.

"Holiday" Gets Run In Carthay Circle

Hollywood—Pathe's "Holiday," with Ann Harding, goes into the Fox Carthay Circle, Los Angeles, for a twice-daily run following current engagement of "So This Is London" with Will Rogers. "Holiday" is the first Pathe production to get a Carthay Circle run since De Mille's "Volga Boatman" several years ago.

Criticism

His Prosperity Depends on Efficiency, Despite the Growth of Mergers

Washington—The independent, unattached, "lone hand" operator in any line of business—and that goes for motion pictures as well as any other—is not licked, despite merger tendencies and the growth of chains. Exactly what degree of prosperity the "little fellow" will enjoy depends entirely upon the efficiency and workmanlike ability with which he functions. So states the Department of Commerce in a foreword to a revised bulletin on "Practical Aids to the Independent Merchant." While no direct reference is made to a specific industry, the statement is designed to cover all fields of commercial endeavor. This is how the government views it:

"In the last analysis the independent merchant will maintain his place in proportion to the efficiency with which he performs his functions and renders a real service to the community. The man who is unwilling or unable to take advantage of new methods or new developments must, of course, risk ultimate failure, just as today the farmer who attempts to cut his grain with a cradle scythe could not hope to compete with the man who uses modern harvesting machinery."

"And so, too, with reference to the much discussed middleman there might well be less talk about eliminating his entire calling and more consideration given to improving his methods and placing his operations upon a better economic basis as related to other distributive processes."

Incompetents Will Go

The foreword continues:

"It is undoubtedly true that there are many individuals engaged in business today who are not fitted by training, experience, or ability to carry on that business successfully.

"Such individuals, whether affiliated with large or small business, always have failed ultimately and always will be eliminated through competition. But the vast majority of independent business men with native ability, with a willingness to work, to utilize new methods, and to take advantage of new conditions, and with a reasonable margin of capital, have as great opportunities for success today as ever before—in fact, a greater opportunity, because of the steady advance in our living standards and buying power.

"For certain types of business the big concern has an undoubted advantage over its smaller competitor. But in those lines of merchandising where success depends mainly on taking advantage of changing trade oportunities, close, watchful contact with market conditions, and expert personal superintendence of operations, the small operator has many advantages over the large establishment.

"The independent merchant who functions intelligently as purchasing agent for his community has a distinct opportunity to render a real social service. The neighborhood grocer can introduce those elements of personal attention and service which are much appreciated by the consumer and which cannot so readily be supplied by a vast, impersonal corporation.

"This implies, of course, no disparagement whatever of the latter. The principal innovation introduced by the large corporation is better management and the recognized value of

Pennsylvania Blue Laws May Change Their Hue, But It'll Take Five Years

Brin Cuts in Milwaukee To Meet Slump

Milwaukee—To meet the summer slump, L. K. Brin has dropped the admission prices at both his Garden and Majestic. It is the first cut here. The Garden now charges 25 cents to 1 P.M., 35 cents from 1 to 5 and 50 cents from 5 to closing. The Majestic's prices are 15, 25 and 50 cents for the same period. All other downtown houses have a top of 60 cents, with the exception of Fox's Wisconsin, whose top is 75 cents.

Brin has also closed his Embassy at Neenah. It has been reported that this house and the Brin at Menasha will be taken over by Warners.

Manager Found Guilty of "Blue" Law Violation

Steubenville, O.—George Dellis, Warner manager here, recently arrested for alleged violation of Ohio blue laws, was found guilty by a jury after twenty minutes' deliberation. Sentence was deferred. Dellis' attorneys will appeal the case. Trial of William Hendricks, Warner manager, arrested on similar charge, has not yet come up.

Meanwhile, theatres are dark here on Sundays, although other places of business are in operation. The sheriff has abandoned his plans to arrest violators of the Sunday closing law unless warrants are sworn out by individuals.

Pinched for Sunday Show

Moberly, Mo.—T. P. Davis, manager of the Grand here, was arrested last Sunday afternoon when he opened his house in violation to a city ordinance, prohibiting Sunday shows. Davis plans to make the matter a subject for another trial case testing the validity of the prohibitive ordinance. The arrest was made without a warrant by the chief of police. The entire theatre staff was included in the arrest.

Mo. Candidates Asked Views Toward Pictures

St. Louis—Close tab on attitude of candidates for the Missouri legislature is to be kept by the eastern Missouri and southern Illinois unit, which is querying them on their views on censorship, Sunday closing and admission taxes.

Rejects British Offer

Sophie Tucker, now in London rehearsing a musical show, has rejected an offer to appear in a British talker, pending run of her new play.

Plans Butte Exchange

Salt Lake City—Fox is considering establishment of an exchange at Butte to handle part of the business now sold out of Salt Lake City.

Florida Capital Peeved at 'Blue' Sunday Campaign

Tallahassee, Fla.—Following an election on Sunday shows in which the "blues" won by 27 votes, effort was made to enforce an old city ordinance that prohibited practically everything on the Sabbath.

The move caused such a protest that the city commissioners this week amended the ordinance so as to permit many businesses to operate on Sunday and told the people that the registration books would be opened and a second special election held on the Sunday film question if petitions, bearing the required number of signatures, were filed.

As the registration books were not opened for the last election it is claimed that many who favored the Sunday shows were unable to vote. Petitions will be circulated at once, it was stated.

Dane-Arthur Complete Six

Hollywood—Karl Dane and George K. Arthur have completed six comedies for Larry Darmour for RKO release. Lewis R. Foster is directing the series from his own originals.

Schulberg Remaining

Hollywood—Just another one of those things and without foundation is the way Jesse L. Lasky sums up report that B. P. Schulberg is to leave Paramount. The general manager of coast production will remain with Paramount for several years at least, Lasky states. Reports have persisted that Schulberg is to leave the company or be transferred to another post. Schulberg declined to comment, stating "rumors of this sort do not deserve even denial."

Move on in Philly, but the Opposition Is Preparing For Sturdy Battle

Philadelphia—It's 136 years since Pennsylvania's "blue laws" went into effect and so it won't make much difference if it should be five more before action is finally taken on repeal of the antiquated statutes which make this state a laughing stock of the nation.

The move is on again—this time apparently more seriously than ever—to do something about statutes enacted in 1794 and still binding upon the millions of this commonwealth in 1930. William J. Roper, famous Princeton football coach, is the prime local mover in the campaign which is understood to carry the endorsement of Mayor Mackey.

The committee named by Philadelphia's City Council to investigate the laws will submit testimony received to the legislature and an attempt will be made to repeal or modify the measures. A petition signed by 14,000 asking for repeal of the "blue laws" city council to investigate the laws will was filed with the committee and representatives of the city council held a joint meeting with Pittsburgh's city council receiving the support of that body which joined the move to make the fight for repeal or modification state-wide.

For Repeal, Poll Shows

Mayor Mackey delivered an address to the blue law committee consisting of 19 typewritten pages covering an investigation of the situation under way for some time. A poll of voters in Philadelphia conducted by The Philadelphia Record indicated that repeal of the laws was approved by a vote of five and one-half to one.

Adolph Hirschberg, president of the Central Labor Union, has appealed to Roper, chairman of the blue law committee, to permit him to testify as to the workingman's opinion of the laws. He stated that, generally speaking, labor is opposed to the "blue laws" because they restrict the workingman's recreation.

All through the ramification of the movement now under way, the picture interests have said nary a word, dodging definite statements in order to avoid criticism from the pulpit and the "blue-noses." It is obvious, of course, that they are for an open Sunday, or at least legislative action which would permit the voters in each city or town determine for themselves whether or not they want a liberal Sabbath.

Some of the more sanguine are of the opinion action will be seen when the General Assembly convenes in January, but the inside indicates the battle will be royal, long and bitter.

Canadian Censor Rule Passing

Toronto—Except on rare occasion the designation of films as of universal or adult appeal, as proscribed in censor regulations, is not being made in newspaper advertisements by exhibitors. The regulations have not worked out satisfactorily and are being practically forgotten.

Tom Thumbs Continue to Sock the B. O.; Gross More Than Million in Los Angeles

Competition

Hollywood — Fox West Coast Theatres recently constructed a de luxe miniature golf layout next to a suburban house, with the theatre manager also taking charge of the putt-putt course.

The speedy manager walked into the circuit executive offices one morning and let everyone know that the golf business wasn't so much.

"Last night my theatre took in more money than the golf course," he said.

"But what about the night before?" inquired one who was in the "know."

"Well, the course beat the theatre that night, but here's why—" and he took ten minutes for the explanation.

The theatre, incidentally, seats about 1,500.

Tom Thumb Golf Bug Spreading Throughout East

The papa of the Tom Thumb golf bug in the form of driving courses where the initiated and the inexperienced alike may improve their shots is spreading himself throughout the East, reports from Motion Picture News correspondents indicate.

Whereas the miniature courses are advertised to improve putting, the expanded idea gives the customer a bucket of gold balls, a caddy to tee them up, plus a driver, for 50 cents and all the strikes the patron can use in order to wallop the pills.

Between New York and Atlantic City there are dozens of these courses in operation during the day and at night alike. In Brooklyn, the vogue is spreading and from other points along the Atlantic Seaboard the story is identical.

Indicative of the manner in which the craze has caught hold, is the reaction of one operator in business between Paterson and Montclair, N. J., who is cleaning up on his initial venture. "Four more like this and a couple of years to go, and I'm through —with enough kale to last me for this life."

Moe Levy's Spurt Sends Mpls. Among Fox Leaders

Minneapolis—Moe Levy's Fox organization here in one week almost trebled its previous best two weeks of sales on the 1930-31 line-up, to go into a tie with Omaha for second place in the new season's sales race. The Dallas branch continues in the lead.

Plans Canadian Offices

Toronto—M. H. Hoffman is arranging for the opening of offices in Canada of Liberty Prod., New York, of which he is president and general manager, for the distribution of Broadway and Victory releases.

"Whoopee Auto Tracks" New Form of Competish; Fox Retaliating

With the West Coast hardest hit and the potential danger greater in that section than in any other, Tom Thumb golf continues to be a source of worry to exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada. The mushroom growth of the tabloid courses is giving impetus to putting courses whoopee automobile tracks and other outdoor diversions of the type.

The tabloid golf courses are grossing $1,080,000 a week in Los Angeles County, a lot of which is being diverted from theatre tills, a prominent circuit operator told Motion Picture News. Added danger is seen in the fact that the Coast offers a year-around climate to keep the golf habit alive, while the sport is only seasonal in other sections of the country.

This operator credits Los Angeles with a total number of 1,600 and Los Angeles County with an additional 1,300 courses. Weekly intake of each course, computed on the basis—this informant believes the figure to be low—of about $57 a night totals about $400 each, or $1,080,000 for the entire string.

Franklin Experimenting

Harold B. Franklin of Fox West Coast considers the situation serious enough to enter the competition himself. Fifteen Tom Thumbs are now operating in the Coast as Fox West Coast experimental enterprises and as many more are opening shortly. Some of the installations cost as much as $15,000 each.

Fox Theatres in the East is experimenting with the miniature courses, planning a number of them in theatres now dark, and others on lots adjoining theatres. In various other sections exhibitors are complaining that the tab courses are shaving box office receipts.

More Wisconsin Houses Dark Than Ever Before

Milwaukee—Theatre closings in Wisconsin this year are reported more numerous than in other years, due to keen competition and general business conditions. Two Milwaukee houses have closed, although it is announced that both are dark temporarily. They include the Violet, operated by H. L. Evans, and the Murray, operated by John Ludwig. Both are neighborhood theatres and equipped with sound.

In the state recent closings include the Shadows at Lodi; the Strand, Melrose, Opera House, Spring Green; Kobes Hall, Lena, and the Embassy at Neenah. The Colonial at Iron Mountain, Mich., has also been closed.

From all appearances the exhibitor in the small towns is the one hardest hit. Not only is it reported that he is buying too far ahead, but also that the high film rental and heavy overhead, coupled with poor business in general, have eaten up any profit which he has made in the past.

All Night Golf

Chicago — Five Tom Thumb golf courses are operating on a 24-hour grind here.

Minneapolis—Miniature golf courses are swinging to a 24-hour schedule here.

Los Angeles—With weather no object in Southern California, some of the local miniature golf courses are understood to be planning day and night schedules, effective shortly.

Academy Sound Theses Are Basis Of New Textbook

Fundamentals of sound recording and reproduction are to be embodied in a book, "Recording Sound for Motion Pictures," to be published in the fall by the McGraw-Hill Book Co. It will be a revised edition of various papers of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences. The papers were prepared by sound directors and engineers, in presenting a recent official course for 900 studio employes.

Among the contributors are: William C. de Mille, president of the Academy; H. G. Knox, vice-president, Electrical Research Products, Inc.; Carl Dreher, director of sound department, RKO Studios; R. H. Townsend, supervising engineer, RCA Photophone West Coast Studios; E. H. Hansen, operating head of Movietone division, Fox Studios; Dr. Donald MacKenzie, technical service engineer, Electrical Research Products, Inc.; A. W. DeSart, technical director of sound, Paramount Publix West Coast Studios; Col. Nugent H. Slaughter, chief engineer in charge of recording for Warner Vitaphone productions; L. E. Clark, director of sound, Pathe Studios; K. F. Morgan, supervising engineer, recording department E.R.P.I.; Douglas Shearer, recording engineer in charge of sound department, M-G-M Studios; J. P. Maxfield, supervisory recording engineer, E.R.P.I.; S. K. Wolf, theatre engineer, E.R.P.I.; John O. Aalberg, reproduction supervisor, RKO Studios; F. L. Hopper, acoustics engineer, E.R.P.I.; Emery Huse, manager motion picture division, Eastman Kodak Co.; A. W. Nye, head of physics department, University of Southern California; Dr. Vern O. Knudsen, assistant professor of physics, University of California, at Los Angeles.

Exhibitor's Son Killed

Akron, O.—Arthur Fish, son of Carl Fish, former proprietor of the Alhambra, was killed when an automobile struck him as he was changing a tire on his own car.

Labor Troubles Brew in Chi.; Kill Economy

Chicago—New labor difficulties appear to be brewing here and are aggravated by the thinning out of box-office receipts during the hot months. Exhibitors here are watching business take the seasonal skid without any compensating reduction in overhead. Anxious to retrench anywhere and everywhere possible, house personnels are getting the closest scrutiny.

The first squawk has been against the local union's insistence on two men for the sound booth. One man, most of the small exhibitors feel, could do the work required, which would result in appreciable savings at plenty of spots where, some managers insist, operators are making more money than the owners. The complaints are coming thicker and faster every week, with members of exhibitors' associations beginning to get insistent over some sort of action on the part of the organizations to which they belong.

Reduction of employees appears to be the only possible economy here, inasmuch as a new wage agreement, effective for several years to come, was reached only this spring.

Restrains Picketing

Hamilton, Ont.—An injunction has been secured by R. T. Stewart, veteran theatre proprietor of Hamilton, restraining representatives of the local operators' union from picketing his theatre because of his alleged employment of a non-union projectionist. Stewart has also entered suit for $5,000 damages against the union men.

RKO Varieties New Name For Shows, Vaude Out

Stage presentations in Radio-Keith-Orpheum theatres hereafter are to be known as "RKO Varieties," with the term vaudeville to be discarded. The company is experimenting with a unit show, which is to play 40 weeks, going across the country intact. The firm is planning to observe August as RKO Progress Month.

"Hell's Angels" at $2.50 Top For Criterion Run

"Hell's Angels" goes into the Criterion Aug. 11 for a run at $2.50 top. Previously, it had been anticipated that "Abraham Lincoln," Griffith's new picture, would be the next attraction at the Criterion. Under terms of its arrangement with Paramount, United Artists has first call on the house after Paramount.

Cantor Under Five-Year Contract to Goldwyn

Eddie Cantor is to return to Hollywood from New York in about three weeks. Following completion of "Whoopee," he signed a five-year contract with Samuel Goldwyn calling for one picture a year.

Largest Vaude House?

San Antonio—The Greater Majestic, recently taken over by R-K-O from the Interstate Circuit, is the largest theatre playing vaudeville, in the opinion of John H. Thoma, its manager. According to Thoma, the house has 4,480 seats. In addition to vaudeville, the Greater Majestic plays Fox films and within a few months will add R-K-O pictures.

"Six-Syllable," Alias Thesaurus, AMPA'S Tutor

AMPAS during the coming 12 months will have to brush up on their vocabularies, for Mike ("Six-Syllable") Simmons is the choice of the nominating committee for president, which is tantamount to election.

Mike Simmons

It may be that it will become necessary to pass out dictionaries at the weekly meetings, once Mike starts a demonstration of form.

"Six Syllable" is a veteran AMPA, and for a long time has been active in organization work. Aside from stumping some of his colleagues with some wisecracks which they did not know the meaning of (and he probably didn't, either) Mike has been somewhat of an asset to the weekly pow-wows. He heads a slate composed of C. W. Barrell, for vice-president; George Bilson, treasurer, and Ed Finney, secretary.

With this set-up, the boys intend to whoop it up during the coming year, according to Marty Starr who calls upon everybody in whose heart there beats a love for AMPA to roll up his sleeves, take a little of his time and help resurrect the organization that not so long ago stood as one of the mighty and indestructible pillars of this ever-changing, restless, madly-advancing business.

10% of Theatres In Iowa Closed; 5% Won't Reopen

Des Moines—About ten per cent of this state's theatres are closed this summer and half of those now dark will not reopen because they cannot make the grade.

The temporary closings are annual affairs, but their number is below other years, due to the fact that the introduction of sound closed out a number at once. Another factor is the steady trend of general business conditions, with Iowa holding up well in practically all lines of business.

Tiffany 5-Year Franchise Key Subject at Meet

Atlanta—Reaction of members to experiences with the Tiffany five-year franchise are to be outlined Aug. 11 and 12 at the annual convention of the Southeastern Theatre Owners' Ass'n. A golf tournament will be held in connection with the event. A number of members have reported favorably on the franchise and Tiffany is bending every effort to co-operate, the association reports.

G. E. Ricker will be re-elected president of the association at the forthcoming meeting, it is understood. Others named by the nominating committee are: O. C. Lam, vice president; Love B. Harrell, secretary-treasurer; and the following directors: E. F. Boyd, W. J. Brackin, Alf Fowler, A. C. Gortatowsky, Mrs. W. M. Kimbro, Roy E. Martin, J. J. Powell, Hugh Manning, R. B. Wilby and N. H. Williams. The following are recommended for the board of directors: Sam Boriskey, Milton Star, Col. Thomas E. Orr, Max Jackson, Mitchell Wilson, M. G. Lee and B. S. Donnan.

Remodeling at Toledo

Toledo—The Rivoli and Palace theatres here, acquired by R-K-O several months ago and now dark, will undergo $350,000 worth of remodeling prior to reopening Labor Day, it is announced by Manager Howard Feigley. The Rivoli, formerly a Pantages vaudeville house, will be operated with vaudeville and pictures policy. The Palace, which adjoins it, will be devoted exclusively to pictures. Remodeling contract has been awarded to the E. H. Voss Co., local contracting firm.

Charnas Aide to Europe

Arnold Van Leer, assistant to Harry L. Charnas, managing director of Warners' Metropolitan theatres, sailed Wednesday for London in a race with time to the bedside of his sister, who is critically ill there. He will be absent from his post in New York for about three weeks.

New Zealand Seeks to Increase Film Tariff

Washington—Prime Minister Forbes of New Zealand, who is also finance minister, has advocated a tariff increase of five per cent on all American films. British films, under the proposal, would be saddled with a ten per cent increase.

Seeks London Houses

London—United Artists is negotiating for two West End houses as company key theatres in Great Britain. The theatres are believed sought principally for showings of "Hell's Angels," "Abraham Lincoln" and "City Lights."

Burton Joins Paramount

David Burton, stage director, has been signed as a director for Paramount.

Production To Trim Sails on Costs To Meet Slack in Overseas Revenue

No Other Way Out Is Seen, In Hollywood—Leaders Are Puzzled

Hollywood—The foreign market, entirely disregarded by producers and distributors when talkers first hit the industry, is now a chief concern and worry of executives and heads of the largest companies in the business and may result in cutting down production costs to meet the drop in grosses emanating from overseas markets.

Some organizations have jumped into production of foreign dialogue talkers, making separate versions in Spanish, German and French but the majority are watching developments closely and figuring to step into the field after someone has solved the problem.

Various production executives have admitted that the foreign situation on talkers is far more serious than is generally realized, even within the industry itself. One pointed out that there is reason to believe that the American countries will lose its grasp of the world market, and American-produced pictures will be limited in distribution to the English-speaking countries. He went further than that, and stated that the entire structure of the industry would have to be radically changed to meet the new conditions.

Production Costs Cut?

One of the first steps, according to this producer, will be the reduction in production costs of pictures—long talked about, but never accomplished. He pointed out that one of his contract stars—with a following of thousands of fans abroad—was being paid a salary of $5,000 weekly because of his popularity in both this country and abroad. But Mr. Star cannot hope to have the producing company pay that figure when he becomes a nonenity in the foreign market, as his salary is partially based on the draw of his pictures abroad.

Production costs of talking pictures today run anywhere from $80,000 to $1,000,000; with most of the 11 major companies spending an average of between $200,000 to $400,000 per picture. These figures are higher than the average during the silent picture era, even though pictures produced in those days secured world-wide distribution.

Foreign Market Troubles

With domestic theatre business now tapering off from the high peak grosses of the past two years, companies are attempting to find ways and means of recovering their lost business in the foreign fields. During the past two years, the general attitude was to take advantage of the big grosses in the domestic field via talkers, re-cut the dialogue pictures into silent form with the insertion of titles and get whatever was possible from abroad.

One observer close to the production situation in this industry, predicts that average costs of talkers for the domestic and English market will reach a level of not more than $250,000 with 18 months; and this cut will be effected through forced economies all through the production end of the business.

When the industry started re-adjusting itself after the sound revolution, some consideration was given to the foreign field, which had shown startling reductions in revenue. First attempts to produce talkers in various languages were exceedingly crude. The regulation talker was taken as a basis, and the dialogue of the foreign language was dubbed in to fit somewhere near the lip action of the players on the screen, with foreign linguists speaking the lines to synchronize somewhat with the lip action. Most of these efforts were unsatisfactory, and received cold receptions when shown in the particular countries.

Erin Go Hollywood

There are thirty Irishmen employed on the Fox lot in Hollywood, the reason, of course, being that Winfield R. Sheehan, the chief of the lot, traces his forebears to "th' Ould Sod."—N. Y. Evening World.

Then producers decided they would make special dialogue versions in German, Spanish and French to provide adequate distribution in those countries, using linguists for both action and dialogue. But then another serious problem presented itself. By combing all of Hollywood and Los Angeles, it was found that there were few good linguists in German, Spanish or French available as players. The Spanish market is claimed to be next in importance to that of English speaking fields, and naturally will receive first attention. There have been Spanish versions made where only one or two of the players spoke the language as it is delivered on the Spanish stage; with all other members of the casts delivering dialects of various sorts and kinds.

Producers soon discovered that a Mexican dialect of Spanish delivered by a player would not go in Spain or South America; and neither would a South American Spanish dialect be accepted in Mexico or Spain. Then again, the regulation Castilian Spanish was considered "pansy" to audiences in Spanish America. This condition had the producers running around in circles, and nearly precipitated the barring of Hollywood-produced Spanish talkers in Mexico, when word got out that producers would no longer use players with a Mexican accent in Spanish talkers.

After much experimenting, producers decided to only make Spanish versions of pictures that contained short casts. Paramount and M-G-M went ahead on that basis. It was felt that, in this manner, capable linguists could be secured for each part so that kick-backs from particular countries would be eliminated.

Language Bars Out Lithuania

Washington—The language bar, menace of American talkers in many European countries, is expected to prove a hurdle which the industry in this country will have difficulty in surmounting. The report of the Department of Commerce on Continental markets for 1929 points this out.

However, America talkers may get over for a limited period of time by virtue of their appeal as a novelty, the report states further. The text, covering Lithuania and Finland:

LITHUANIA

By HUGH S. FULLERTON
American Consul, Kovno

Up until January 27, 1930, no sound pictures were shown in Lithuania, but the German film firm, Tobis of Berlin, entered into a contract with the Odeon theatre of Kovno for the introduction of German sound films.

The exhibition of sound films must be licensed by the police department of the Ministry of the Interior, since foreign languages are used. It appears that license has been obtained for five sound pictures, one of which is in Russian and has not yet been completed.

The apparatus which has been installed in the Odeon was manufactured by the German

Some Favor Making Pictures Abroad — Others Think Coast Is Place

Trying It Out Abroad

Some months ago, Paramount decided to produce various foreign pictures and re-makes of locally-produced talkers in Paris. The Paramount studio there has already turned out several German, Spanish and French pictures and will make the bulk of the product for Paramount's European and foreign distribution. Company executives feel stage players of Germany, Spain, France, Italy and other countries can easily be obtained for work in the Paris studios and that low salaries abroad makes production more attractive and more economical than in Hollywood.

M-G-M has made more foreign versions up to this time than any other company in the business. This organization has turned out a total of five Spanish productions, and has two more preparing. Three German versions have been completed, and two are in preparation. M-G-M has also made three French pictures, and one in Italian. Even with this schedule, and expectations that at least ten versions will be produced in Spanish, German and French during the coming year at the local studios, M-G-M is completing arrangements whereby many adidtional foreign versions will be produced abroad.

Various solutions have been advanced as to the proper procedure in dealing with the foreign talker situation. One proposition is that of production of various language versions abroad, having the foreign studios select from the company's yearly program about fifty per cent of the pictures for re-production, with selection being made on the basis of suitability of stories for the particular country. It is pointed out that the completed English talker can be shipped to the Continental studio, and translation could be made without difficulty. In charging off cost of story on the picture, a certain pro rata of story and scenario expense would be taken up by each foreign version budget.

Costs Cheaper in Europe

The advantages of this system were explained by an executive who has been following the foreign market since the introduction of talkers. He pointed out that a picture produced in Hollywood carries a studio overhead charge of at least 20 per cent, and such a charge would not be necessary against any foreign version produced abroad. Further, the salaries of talent are much less in Europe than in Hollywood, and producers abroad would have the further advantage of getting players who speak the stage language of each tongue, which is difficult in Hollywood.

When questioned about the limited gross possible in each country with a particular picture in that language, the executive admitted that American producers probably would not make money at the start, but this situation would be overcome within a short time, and it is freely reported here that various American companies plan to spend about $15,000,000 on news theatres throughout Continental Europe in order to increase picture intakes.

To show the possibiilties of foreign grosses, this official explained that "Madame Sans Gene" was Paramount's biggest silent grosser in France, playing hundreds of theatres in roll-

Says U. K. Studio Execs' Mentality Below Audiences'

London—Executives of British studios are severely castigated by P. L. Mannock, writing in the London Daily Herald, for their attempt to compete with Hollywood. Noted as one of the foremost authorities on films, Mannock asserts that "the average mental level of those who run British studios is considerably below that of the ordinary intelligent patron of their product." He avers that one American company (M-G-M) contemplates spending £6,000,000, "which will be about 25 times greater than what the entire British producing industry will spend," laughs at the boast of British producers that they will rival Hollywood and begs them to "preserve some sense of proportion when the question of rivaling Hollywood is discussed," adding:

"What chance have we?

"Well, America makes talkies to please Americans. Some of them we regard as dreadful, and there is no reason why we should not, in time, make talkies to please ourselves, in a steady and increasing volume.

"A little more experience and a little more perceptive intelligence on the part of our studio executives, and we can do it, for we have all the other ingredients.

"At the moment the average mental level of those who run British studios is considerably below that of the ordinarily intelligent patron of their product.

"It would be strange if they admitted this.

Broke Directors' Spirit

"The motion-picture was invented by an Englishman, William Friese-Greene (whose son Claude is to-day one of our few really brilliant cameramen). We had the production business in our pockets up to 1912, but a crusted and unprogressive self-satisfaction has gradually swamped our picture 'bosses' and broken the spirit of dozens of directors and players who have since found fame under American creative enterprise.

"It is a thousand pities that the Films Act has entrenched our incompetents instead of displacing them. The talkies have given us a tremendous opportunity to recover, because the British actor's voice has become, in little over a year, one of the most potent factors in the success of American pictures.

"America would welcome British players in talkies made under the supervision of men who have learned what scenarios, casting and cutting really mean.

"In fact, America is soon sending over her own complete production units to make them. It is just the drastic competition we need.

"The public, who really do not care two hoots where a film is made so long as it is good, have no prejudice against British films except that founded on so many mediocre ones. In fact, a really good one, when it happens, is hailed with peculiar pleasure.

"Such a film is usually made in defiance of the studio executives."

Those Trailers

It is now about as rare a thing to see a man sitting in a company boasting at length about what he is going to do, and how good he is going to be, as it is to hear a guest criticize the dinner his host offers him. Among people of taste and culture such things are no longer done at all. All civilized humanity has long ago grown above that sort of vulgarity.

But there is one class of people who are more than a thousand years behind the age in this respect. A talking move movie actor telling of a coming picture in which he figures can scarcely find enough superlatives to describe what a wonderful show he and his fellow-artists have produced—one that will knock them off their seats, curl up their spines, send them into ecstacies and all that sort of stuff. It is worse than childish and foolish—it is tiresome.—Pathfinder.

McNamee Signs as "U's" Newscaster For 3 More Years

Universal has signed Graham McNamee to a new three-year contract. He is the talking reporter of the Universal Newspaper Newsreel, sponsored by 65 daily newspapers throughout the country. The newsreel was started a year ago with Sam B. Jacobson as editor.

Bookings in the last four months have increased 300 per cent, according to Universal, and future sales contracts have multiplied the previous quarter's figures by 480 per cent. The staff of cameramen has been augmented by 67, making a total of 528. Arrangements are being made for increase of the sales force under direction of Richard V. Anderson.

Lifting of Equipment Patents Is Charged

Seattle—Suit for damages of $50,000 has been served upon the Universal High Power Telephone Co. by the Masterphone Sound Corporation, a local company headed by Ed Jensen, manufacturing Masterphone sound apparatus.

According to the suit, the plaintiff for the last year employed the defendant company to make and assemble the Masterphone sound device. Recently, the complaint states, the telephone company made the apparatus and offered it for sale under the name "Wonderphone," stating that it was an improvement upon Masterphone, and that the Masterphone company was no longer in business.

Masterphone officials say that the Wonderphone apparatus is made under rights belonging exclusively to their company, and not only ask $50,000 damages, but seek to prevent the Universal company from continuation of its alleged acts.

Theatre Promoter Who Jumped Bail Nabbed in Texas

Anderson, Ind.—Harry M. Goldberg, Detroit theatre promoter, who jumped a $5,000 recognizance bond here six weeks ago and has been a fugitive from justice since that time, is under arrest at Beaumont, Tex., where he is being held pending the arrival of an officer from here to claim the prisoner. It is not known whether he will fight extradition.

Goldberg is wanted here for alleged conspiracy to defraud Harry Muller, Anderson theatre manager, out of $15,000 in connection with a project for building a new theatre at Meridian and 13th Sts. in 1927. Three companions of Goldberg in the proposed deal, who are under grand jury indictments charging false pretense are Joseph Cosco, Detroit theater manager, and Carl Kreis and Gilbert Harries, members of a construction company at Indianapolis.

Unless the prisoner should consent to return here without extradition papers, it is probable he can not be returned in time for the present term of court, which is to adjourn shortly for a summer vacation. The court reconvenes September 15.

Goldberg is the first of the quartet involved in the Muller case to face trial on a charge of false pretense. He entered a plea of guilty to the charge and on November 9, last year, was sentenced to the Indiana reformatory for one to seven years. On November 25 that plea was set aside in order to give Goldberg another chance to defend himself and he was admitted to bond with the Detroit Bonding and Insurance Co. as surety. He was to have presented himself in court for trial May 21, but failed to appear and his bond was forfeited by the court.

The bonding company then took up the work of finding him. Photographs were broadcast through this country and Canada.

"Hell's Angel" First 2-a-Day Film in N. W.

Seattle—With all the fanfare, lights, color and noise of a Hollywood first night, "Hell's Angels" had its premiere at the Fox here. For the first time in its history, Fox West Coast introduced a two-a-day reserved seat policy in the Northwest, and the picture plays here on that basis under the personal supervision of Sid Grauman. A last-minute decision reduced the top to $1, instead of $1,50, as originally scheduled and advertised.

An air parade of 20 army, navy and civilian planes marked the opening of the film here. Jean Marlowe, feminine lead, with several of the aviators who appeared in the film, were making personal appearances on the Fox stage. Mayor Frank Edwards appeared as master of ceremonies at the opening performance. Following the first show, a hotel staged a "Hollywood Ball" in honor of Miss Marlowe.

A large screen, additional sound apparatus and special effect machines have been installed in the Fox for this showing, by a staff of five Hollywood technicians associated with Grauman and Howard Hughes' production staff.

Pictures Hailed As $2,000,000,000 Business Giant

Motion pictures have grown from a mere idea to a two billion dollar industry in less than thirty-five years, according to a new study of the industry which has just been released by Halsey, Stuart & Co., investment bankers, who have been active in financing the industry.

Weekly attendance at theatres of 115,000,000—almost equal to the population of the United States—an investment in theatres and exhibition equipment of $1,250,000,000, and an expenditure of approximately $125,000,000 annually in the production of pictures, are other figures cited by the review to show the present position of the industry.

Transition from the silent picture to the present sound picture was one of the most rapid moves ever made by an industry, the change, calling for more than $500,000,000 in new capital, being made within the space of a single year.

A Giant of Business

Commenting on the present position of the industry as one of the giants of the modern business world, the study points out the excellent business basis on which this pleasure industry is organized, saying:

"Although still youthful, the industry has shaped itself along the accepted lines of business organization. Since the advent of the big feature programs in 1914, production has been systematized until the making of a picture has become an impressive example of industrial efficiency.

"Accounting and other control devices have been worked out to meet the situations that were peculiar to this industry. The budget system for cost control in film manufacture has proved as dependable in the motion picture business as elsewhere. It is to be remembered that important and expensive films are sold well in advance of delivery. Many of those pictures, in fact, are contracted for before production is begun. Consequently, the film companies know fairly well what the revenue from them is going to be before the filming actually gets under way. Under this plan of operation, production budgets become highly significant, and there is real incentive for cost control.

Practices Being Revised

"Sound inventory methods, balance sheet standards, and contract forms equitable to both buyer and seller were serious problems of the industry in its earlier years. Satisfactory solutions have been found long since, however, and the business methods and practices of the industry are constantly being revised in order to bring them into line with modern conditions.

"One strong feature of motion picture accounting policies is the practice among the leading producers of writing off the entire value of films within twenty-four months after their first release. Approximately 85 per cent of their cost is charged off during the first year. This is done regardless of earnings, or the prospects for continued revenue. When it happens that a film has a long earning life, or proves to have a re-run value later on, the revenues beyond the first two years, aside from distribution costs, are all profit."

Newsreel News

No newsreel is complete, as every fan knows, without such standbys as the launching of a ship, a parade, the King of England opening Parliament, etc., etc. Therefore Terry Ramsaye, editor of Pathe's Audio Review, has filled a long-felt want by issuing a "Perpetual Newsreel," which he terms a "durable standard newsreel guaranteed good without change forever." It is shown in the current Audio Review, and has the following line-up, as explained by Terry:

Terry Ramsaye

"The best brands of outstanding news of all time is herein presented, including: Parade—a march of the order of Whoever must be covered in pictures; a perfect specimen of Launching; Baby Parade at Raspberry Park; Fire! Fire! a hardy newsreel perennial; Parliament, the standard annual foreign event as King does "opening" stuff; Bathing Girl Contest, indigenous to Florida, California and Atlantic City; Naval Hurrah, a very hardy specimen of Battleships at Sea; Baby Item, big human flicker filler; Pike's Peak Climb—see Colorado and motor industry ads; Ski Jump (a Scandinavian necessity for any newsreel); West Point, or how many screen appearances make a cadet a second lieutenant; Easter Parade, Fifth Avenue high hat seasonal; and Ship News, down the gangplank or up the gangplank—who knows?"

Universal Fan Mail Doubled By Sound Films

That prerogative of the theater patron which expresses itself in the tons of fan mail dumped onto the desks of studio executives every week is being exercised as never before, according to Carl Laemmle, Jr., chief executive of the Universal studios. Whether it is the advent of talking pictures that has stimulated the fan's critical impulses or whether the custom is infectious and has spread in the manner of an epidemic, the Universal organization considers less important than the problem of giving proper attention to the phenomenon.

The fact that a sharp increase in fan mail volume has been noted since the arrival of sound pictures indicates to Universal officials that it has been stimulated by the talking film. An average day in 1927 brought to the mail secretaries at Universal between 800 and 900 letters, including those to stars, directors, officials and others. Today this volume runs nearly 1,500 per day. Comparatively few of these are anonymous, and the general tone of the criticisms and comment is more intelligent and sincere than that of two or three years ago, according to Laemmle.

Fitzgibbons Introduced To Canadian Managers

Calgary, Alta.—Introduction of J. J. Fitzgibbons as director of theatre operations of Famous Players Canadian Corp. to practically all managers of the theatre chain in Western Canadian cities from Port Arthur to Vancouver took place at a conference here Wednesday with H. M. Thomas of Winnipeg, Western Division general manager, in the chair. Announcement was made following the meeting that policies of the Canadian company had been discussed.

More than 50 managers, representing 60 Famous Players' houses in the western cities, attended the conference at which John Balaban of Paramount Publix was present. Ten managers were present from Winnipeg, this being the largest representation from any one city, and they included H. M. Thomas, Walter F. Davis, Franklin L. Willis, Charles Weiner, Ray F. Kershaw, W. B. Novak, M. O. Fields, Charles Dilley, Frank Kershaw and Ernest McLeod.

The Calgary conference took the place of the western convention, which was originally scheduled to be held at Banff on August 5, and after the all-day session Fitzgibbons left for the East to attend the meeting of the eastern division at Toronto July 31.

Charges U. S. Is Crushing British Film Industry

London—American distributors are using their powerful hold upon distribution in England to squash the development of the British industry, Geoffrey le Maurier, Liberal member, charged in the House of Commons in introducing an amendment to the film quota act.

The proposed amendment provides that to be called a British production, 75 per cent of a film must be produced on British soil at a cost of not less than $60,000.

"The 1927 bill," he said, "was aimed at establishing the British film industry on a permanent basis. It not only failed of its object but aggravated a still more difficult situation, namely, control of film distribution in Britain by United States firms, who are using their power with the deliberate object of squashing the development of the British film industry by accepting only low grade, low quality British films, thereby giving to such British films as are produced a reputation of being bad and wicked."

Wins First Point In Squabble Over Sharkey Pictures

Philadelphia—Harry W. Eilperin, of New York, won the opening battle in his fight with seven distributors in U. S. District Court here when Federal Judge J. Whitaker Thompson granted a temporary injunction preventing the distributors from showing pictures of the Sharkey-Schmeling fight, for which Eilperin claims to have purchased the rights.

He asks that heavy damages be paid him for alleged infringement of his rights and also that a permanent injunction be granted against the distributors. Attorneys for the defendants claim that Eilperin is entitled to no damages because under the interstate laws he could not have shown the pictures in Pennsylvania himself. Temporary injunctions were granted against the following Philadelphia distributors: Philadelphia Film Exchange, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Louis Korson, Louis W. Kellman, John Hennessey, David Segal and Michael Siegel.

Western Canada Shows Spurt in Theatre Building

Winnipeg—Despite talk of a building lull, there are indications of considerable theatre building activity in Western Canada. Three theatres are under construction in various cities and five in Winnipeg alone are undergoing extensive alterations.

A Winnipeg syndicate is erecting the erected at Saskatoon, Sask., measuring 50 by 130 feet, by the Roxy Theatre Co., of which N. Rothstein of Winnipeg is president.

Famous Players is building a new Rossland Theatre at Rossland, B. C., to seat 700 people.

A Winnipeg syndicate is erecting the Academy, a suburban house, in Winnipeg.

Alterations are under way at the following Winnipeg houses: R-K-O Capitol, Strand, Dominion, Gaiety and Walker. Gordon C. Howden has taken a five-year lease on the Dominion theatre and will reopen it in August after changes are made.

Increased License Fee For Tent Shows Sought

Seattle—Increased license fees for tent and carnival attractions will be levied by the Seattle city council and license division, if a plan recently proposed by a committee of the Allied Amusements of the Northwest is favorably accepted. James M. Hone, secretary of Allied Amusements, is now conferring with the city attorney's office and the license division relative to the matter. It is hoped to raise the fee to a point where the little traveling tent shows will find it unprofitable to open up in the larger centers of the territory.

Wilson Back with Carewe

Hollywood—Harry Wilson, former press agent for Edwin Carewe and United Artists, has returned to the Carewe fold again as personal publicity purveyor for the director.

A Merchandising Opportunity

Hollywood—Radio has something unusual in "Dixiana." It is a combination of the various forms of presentations, having "a little of everything" with which to make a bid for box-office intake. Comedy galore, some fine spectacle, a dash of operetta and melodrama and some pathos to balance it as an all-around entertainment, which probably will be unique.

They've spent dough, plenty of it, in bringing out this new attraction, but the Radio production forces certainly have injected showmanship (and it should be capped) into this new picture. Done against the background of New Orleans, with its colorful Mardi Gras, the picture has manifold angles of selling. Put over right, this picture should be a real box-office bet. After "Rio Rita," Bebe Daniels, Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey are names to conjure with.

ing up the record figure, but that Chevalier's first picture gave Paramount the same gross in the first 16 weeks' run in the company's house in Paris alone. This accomplishment, with up-to-date theatres spotted throughout the various European cities, can easily be repeated on many pictures, and would give American producers greater foreign returns than ever dreamed of previously, he feels.

May Use Special Process

Another method of foreign production advanced—and now reported under serious consideration by several companies—would utilize the "Dunning process," a system which is being used by nearly all coast producers at the present time. Via the Dunning process it would be possible to photograph all the sets, both interiors and exteriors that are constructed for the regulation talker in the local studio and then interpose the Spanish, German, French or other actors into these sets in the foreign studios—with dialogue and sound effects recorded abroad. This method would require only small studio space, a cast duplicating those characters used locally, and the regulation sound equipment for recording the dialogue. According to report, the Dunning process method would allow production of various foreign versions for comparatively little expense per version.

Fox has definitely decided to produce all foreign versions in local studios, and it is understood that company policy is decidedly against any production abroad at this time.

Foreign production on the coast is currently confined to three companies, M-G-M, Paramount and Fox. Complete resume by companies follows:

Paramount has produced three Spanish versions with Spanish players: "Slightly Scarlet," "The Benson Murder Case," and "Grumpy." Spanish version of "The Sea God" is now in preparation. French versions of "Slightly Scarlet" and "The Little Cafe" have been completed. No German or Italian versions have been considered up to this time.

Studios Busy

M-G-M has completed German versions of "Sunkissed," "Monsieur Le Fox," and "Olympia," and is currently preparing similar versions of "Anna Christie" and "Trial of Mary Dugan." This organization has also made French versions of "Unholy Night" and "Monsieur Le Fox"; and Spanish versions of "Free and Easy," "Monsieur Le Foxe" and "Olympia." Buster Keaton is currently working on the Spanish talker of "Forward March," and M-G-M is also preparing Spanish dialoguers of "Mr. Wu," and "Madame X."

Fox's foreign talker activity has so far been confined to Spanish versions of "One Mad Kiss," "Common Clay" and "Friendship," with preparation now under way for versions in French and German.

United Artists has ignored the foreign dialogue angle entirely in various versions. Experiments on German version of "Lummox" was not considered successful, as the picture was admittedly spotty and not a standout. United Artists is covering the foreign market through insertion of titles for dialogue and description, with song numbers retained, and musical synchronization added.

Warners did various experimenting with short reel subjects in German, French and Spanish, and produced a Spanish version of "The Bad Man." All further preparation on foreign dialogue pictures has been suspended pending decisions of company executives in the East. It is expected that Warners will eventually produce foreign versions both locally and abroad.

RKO, aside from making Spanish and German voice-dubbed versions of "Rio Rita" and "The Case of Sergeant Grischa" some months ago, has done nothing further in the foreign version field, and has no definite plans for the immediate future along those lines.

Universal has done much in experimenting with the policy of voice-dubbing and synchronizing German and Spanish versions of talker features. German synchronized versions were made on "Broadway," "Eric the Great" and "Show Boat." Spanish-dubbed versions were turned out on "Broadway" and "Shanghai Lady"; and nine separate foreign versions were made on "King of Jazz," with a special master-of-ceremonies speaking in each version. The nine versions were German, French, Spanish, Portugese, Japanese, Swedish, Italian, Hungarian and Czecho-Slovakian. At present, Universal is preparing a German talking version of "All Quiet on the Western Front" by a special process which utilizes the players in the picture, with voices matched in by dubbing which gives perfect results, according to report.

Pathe Moving Slowly

Pathe has done little actual work in foreign dialoguers. The company is making Spanish versions of four two-reel comedies, and already has produced Spanish voice-dubbed talkers of "Her Private Affair" and "The Grand Parade." Pathe got away from the general procedure in voice-dubbing with these pictures, however, by inserting a prologue that introduced the players who would talk in Spanish for the principal players in the picture. This attitude was taken in order to make certain that the Spanish audiences, when viewing the picture, would not feel they were being fooled deliberately by the voice substitution. Pathe intends to proceed similarly with a Spanish version of "Swing High," with all the regulation songs retained as sung in English.

Tiffany has done nothing with foreign versions locally, although plans have been made for the production of Spanish, French, German and other language versions of "Journey's End" in each country abroad. Details of this production are being handled by Tiffany's affiliation in England that holds a half interest in "Journey's End."

Columbia is another company that has ignored the foreign version proposition, in so far as features are concerned. Nothing has been done so far to definitely outline the company policy of foreign talkers, although a series of Eddie Buzzell short comedies will be made for Spanish and German audiences through the introduction of a master of ceremonies talking a la lecturer throughout the picture.

Independents Not Out, Government Report Reveals

large-scale economies; but big business has no copyright on profitable methods, and mere bulk is by no means necessarily synonymous with efficiency.

Waste Must Be Cut

"Evidence is beginning to accumulate to show that the answer to some of our gravest problems of distribution lines in the curtailment of unnecessary costs in the performance of the retail merchant's functions. Our studies have demonstrated that in many cases the profits in his field, which is the last and often the most crucial stage in our distribtuion process, are being lost through wasteful and unnecessary practices, such as the accumulation of "dead" stock, the soliciting of unprofitable customers, the striving for volume of business without regard to costs, the use of uneconomic credit practices or excessive delivery service.

"These are wasteful practices which, as a rule, the larger operators avoid. There are many examples which show that the independent merchant who will adapt these principles to his own business, retaining at the same time those features which make his store peculiarly a service institution to his neighborhood, does not need to fear competition from any source.

"However, both the manufacturer and the distributor should remember that in the last decade business in this country has changed from a seller's to a buyer's market. The consumer no longer finds it necessary simply to accept the goods which are offered him.

"The successful manufacturer or merchandiser will find it necessary to study the consumer demands and preferences of his particular market if he would succeed in performing his proper function of providing needed commodities and services for his community.

"There is in the maintenance of this type of merchandising a social problem of great importance. Our nation is built upon the individualism of our people—upon their initiative and their service to the community.

"There is a recognized place in the community for the independent business man who conscientiously strives to meet this need, and the services in the Department of Commerce were established to aid him in the attainment of that end."

Chi Box-Offices, Despite Heat, Do Smash Business

Chicago—With the thermometer above 95 on two occasions during the past week, and with Loop competition the strongest it has been in months, box-office grosses here were sensational for the seven-day period. The take in several Loop houses was better than during the best fall and winter periods, and standouts were the rule in these spots almost daily.

The Oriental was the week's surprise. This B. & K. house which, in recent months, has been in the red as often as not, went to a magnificent $60,600 (170%) with "Our Blushing Brides" (M-G-M) as the feature. The house topped its big brother, the Chicago, by $1,000, in spite of a splendid business week at that house. In consequence, B. & K. held "Blushing Brides" for its second week at the Oriental, only the second time in the history of the house a picture has been thus complimented.

"The Big House" (M-G-M), which established a new house record at McVickers two weeks ago, continued at a remarkable pace; finishing its third week at $40,300 (150%), and was held for the fourth. The Chicago, with "So This Is London" (Fox), stepped off a nice box-office tune at $59,400 (135%). Credit is due here, as the absence of any outstanding stage name makes the draw clearly the picture's. The United Artists was in the important money with "Song o' My Heart" (Fox) holding steady at $25,400 in its second week. The picture continues for another week. The Roosevelt, completing the B. & K. Loop quintet, was also a money house in its fourth week of "With Byrd at the South Pole." The gross, considerably stimulated by the presence in the city of Admiral Byrd during the early part of the week, was $20,500 (100%).

Other money spots were the Woods with "Lawful Larceny" (Radio), which grossed $17,200 (150%) in its first week; the Garrick in its third week of "All Quiet on the Western Front" (Univ.) (seventh week in the Loop), which took $10,200 (125%); the Castle in its second week with "Ingagi" (Indie) (eleventh week in the Loop), which took $5,500 (185%).

Two other houses showed improvement over recent weeks in spite of the heat and the strong competition. They were the State-Lake, which grossed $23,800 (90%) with "The Flirting Widow" (F. N.), the feature, and Warner's Orpheum, which did $5,400 (90%) with the second Loop run of "Devil's Holiday" (Paramount).

Omaha—With good stage support, Clara Bow's "Love Among the Millionaires" (Par.) at the World led the town for a 115% week, which counted up to $10,925. Record breaking heat continued.

"Journey's End" (Tiff.) brought the Paramount another 100% week, but the $8,000 was less than the picture could have done under cooler circumstances. "Midnight Mystery" (Radio) and Boyd Senter, former local musician, favored the Orpheum to the extent of $14,500. Just 100%.

State dropped below par for the week. "Dangerous Nan McGrew" (Par.), first three days, netted but $1,890 (90%). Last half, "Captain of the Guard" (Univ.) also dropped to 90% for $2,025.

Baltimore Gets a Real Kick Out of 1st Chaney Talker

Baltimore—Clear, temperate weather during the first four days of the week made business at the big theatres go along very well, but patronage dropped with a thud during the heat of Friday and Saturday. On the last day the thermometer registered 103 degrees.

It appeared that every one wanted to hear Lon Chaney talk, for his first dialogue picture, "The Unholy Three," at Loew's Stanley, went over like an armored tank, cutting about $20,500 from the pocketbooks of Baltimoreans and giving this house a rating of 117% for the week.

This even beat Loew's Century, where "The Bad One," with Edmond Lowe and Dolores Del Rio was the attraction on the same bill with "Steel Blues," the stage unit, featuring Dave Schooler. Here the gross was figured around $19,500, which gives this house a rating of 93%.

Down Lexington Street, two blocks away from Loew's Century, at the New, Edmund Lowe was seen in another picture, "Good Intentions," and gave this 1,500 seater a 55% rating with a gross of $5,500. Many considered "Good Intentions" better than "The Bad One." The first mentioned seemed to fit Lowe better.

The popularity which has met the showing of "The Big House" was evidenced when it was shown during this week at Loew's Valencia, downtown, and at Loew's Parkway, uptown, simultaneously and pulled very big even though it had been shown at Loew's Stanley to big business for one week previously. At the Valencia it did $3,300, or 94%, while at the Parkway it went over the top with $4,700, or 107%.

"Let Us Be Gay" Tops Big Week At Providence

Providence—Remarkable business for such a hot week was experienced by Providence exhibitors, indicating that the public will go for exceptional bills even when the mercury hits 95 and up. Loew's State rung the bell for $23,000, which is about 115%, with "Let Us Be Gay," while the R-K-O Victory with "King of Jazz" also clicked in high for better than $10,000.

Paramount with "Son of the Gods" broke its opening week record with $18,000 in the bag, while the Majestic, showing "Golden Dawn," was strong at $9,000. The grosses are exceptionally large when one considers that the week was one of the hottest on record. Estimated takings:

Byrd Film Shows Strength in Run At Oklahoma City

Oklahoma City—Admiral Byrd's South Pole trip rated plenty attention here and the film record of the journey was given a rousing send-off by "The Oklahoman." The newspaper accorded the picture a rating of five stars, the highest ever given a picture here, and this helped step up the gross of the Criterion to $9,000. How strong the public went for the film is reflected in the fact that nine grand is a rating of 150% for the Criterion, and chalking up such a record in the face of very hot weather is real achievement.

"Ingagi" drew well in its second week at the Empress, while Clara Bow's "Love Among the Millionaires" at the Capitol took in $6,000 for a rating of 110%.

Minneapolis—Most of the Loop houses took it on the chin, with the State going into the cellar on a 65 per cent rating and gross of $15,500 with First National's "The Song of the Flame." Continued heat contributed to the general nosediving.

"Dawn Patrol" Is Portland High Getting $15,400

Portland—Winding its way along a path made golden by unusual exploitation, "The Dawn Patrol" grabbed $15,400 and a rating of 155% at the Paramount. This high mark climaxed an air race from Portland to Seattle, in which a number of leading flyers of this section participated, and a telegraph exploitation stunt in the lobby, whilch had a girl in flying togs handing out teletype messages advertising the picture. The big week was especially gratifying to Manager Holmes, who has just assumed charge at the Paramount.

Greta Garbo's popularity, plus a Fanchon & Marco show, sent "Romance" to a figure of $15,000, or 145%, at the Fox Broadway. With evening baseball starting at 9:30, theatres are advertising complete shows starting at that time.

Box Office Bandit Flees As Cashier Rings Alarm

Rochester, N. Y.—Sounding a foot gong when a gun was poked into her face shortly after the opening of the last performance, Betty Walker, 22, box-office cashier for the Eastman theatre, Publix house, last week routed a gunman and saved a day's receipts.

The robber sauntered up to the box-office and demanded "all you've got."

In reply, Miss Walker stepped on the gong. Frightened, the bandit fled. By the time house attaches reached the scene the man had made his getaway.

A Theatre's a Theatre

Providence—A motion picture house is a real theatre if you believe legal dictum. Samuel Bomes, theatre owner, contended that he did not have to have a six-foot alleyway in the rear of the house, as the law applied to legitimate theatres, but not to film houses. The court, however, ruled that a theatre is a theatre whether it was showing "The King of Jazz" in the can or "East Lynne" with the original legitimate cast.

District Manager Plan to Be Adopted in Canada

Toronto — Grouping of theatres in the Famous Players chain in Canada into compact districts, to be under the supervision of district managers, is being worked out by J. J. Fitzgibbons, formerly of Publix and now director of theatre operations for the Canadian chain of 190 houses. Up to the present time the circuit has been divided into eastern and western divisions under the control, respectively, of Clarence Robson and H. M. Thomas, the latter being stationed at Winnipeg. District managers will also have charge of a key theatre in their own area.

The move is also under way to re-introduce stage shows in many theatres and Publix units will be used for the purpose under the direction of John Arthur, supervisor of presentations, Toronto.

Clara Bow's 200% Des Moines Top; Heat No Damper

Des Moines—After several days of respite from the intense heat, it returned with a bang in midweek but business held up. Night baseball, which draws throngs, does not seem to affect the theatre fans for the nights previous to the return of the heat wave were big nights. With the closing of the Des Moines theatre for several weeks for complete interior changes, additional business was thrown to the Paramount next door. Clara Bow's picture, "Love Among the Millionaires," proved also to be a good drawing card and it grossed 200% for the last four days of the week, with "Swing High" also bringing in way above average with a rating of 150%. The Orpheum reported business above average for this season of the year, although it has no comparison with the business of the winter season. "Not Damaged" won 110% and "Born Reckless." 120%.

Chinese Censors

A Chinese motion picture company which has just completed the film story of the Dowager Empress Tsu Hsi has lost a lot of money because of sensitive nationalist censors in China. The Nationalists have decided that this is no time to present films of imperial days in China, because they want to emphasize the glories of democracy, not of imperialism. For this reason, permission to show the picture has been refused.—Wall St. Journal.

Showman-Mayor Sponsor Of Obscene Film Law

Seattle—Acting upon recommendation of Mayor Frank Edwards, himself a former exhibitor, an ordinance strengthening the ban on immoral pictures, stage acts or plays, giving the Seattle board of theatre censors greater powers, and reducing the personnel of the board from nine to five members, was introduced to the city council this week.

As drawn, the new ordinance makes it unlawful to "display or produce any opera, drama, stage or platform entertainment, or any picture of any kind or character of an obscene, indecent or immoral nature." The ban includes plays or motion pictures "wherein any scene of violence is shown in a gruesome or revolting manner, or in a manner which tends to corrupt morals, or to publish any advertisement thereof, or to permit any obscene song or discourse."

The Seattle public safety committee, a branch of the council, will first consider the measure and then pass it on to the council for their action.

Colony Craves Its Flesh Since Clara Reduced

Los Angeles—They want flesh here in the nation's film capital, it is emphasized by the return of Larry Cebbalos' shows to Warners' Hollywood and Downtown theatres, which led the town last week so far as comparative grosses are concerned. The two theatres have taken a decided turn for the better since resumption of flesh shows, which may be a cue for other houses here to follow.

M-G-M's "The Big House" is showing consistent strength, getting only $400 less on its fourth week than it grabbed off in its third stanza at the Fox Criterion.

It just seems that Clara Bow has lost her grip on local film fans, skidding to $21,000, or a rating of but 84 per cent, at the Paramount. The "It" girl was one of the big cards here some time ago, but since her excursion into front page publicity concerning her affairs of heart, it seems she is slipping. The Garbo showed real pulling power at the State, in her newest, "Romance." Estimates are:

'Patrol,' Shearer Film Beating Old Sol on Broadway

Continued heavy draw of "The Dawn Patrol" at the Winter Garden and the sudden spurt of the Capitol with "Let Us Be Gay," highlighted Broadway's week, showing that strong attractions can command the biz, in spite of weather and other considerations. Columbia's "Hell's Island," doing business at the Globe, will be held over.

The current week is probably the toughest the Main Stem has experienced in years, the mercury going to 97 Monday, and hovering near that mark on Tuesday. Despite this, "The Dawn Patrol" held to an even keel, and probably will come within two grand or so of equalling its last week's record figure of $51,128 at the Winter Garden.

Norma Shearer did some real pinch hitting for the Capitol, which needed a box-office tonic, the picture hoisting the gross at that house to $85,664, which is better than $15,000 above the take of Chaney's "The Unholy Three."

The Rivoli dropped more than 10 grand below the first week of "Holiday," and that film folded in favor of "Manslaughter," which went in Wednesday and gave evidence of box-office strength. "Anybody's War" folded Thursday at the Rialto the film's draw undoubtedly hurt by the preceding Moran and Mack effort. "The Man from Wyoming" took a dive at the Paramount, indicating that the house is not geared to western films. The estimates:

firms Nitsche of Leipzig, and Jova of Kassel. The first sound film produced is the production of the Aafa of Berlin. The cost of the entire installation of apparatus in the Odeon aggregated $4,000.

It has been ascertained that the apparatus being installed in the Odeon requires an alternating current of 70 volts, while the Kovno electrical plant provides a direct current of 220 volts, hence a special transformer costing $140 has been purchased by the Odeon as a supplement to the other installation. It is reported, however, that alternating current will be supplied by the electric light plant in Kovno during 1930.

The largest cinema in Kovno, the Metropolitain, is planning the installation of a sound apparatus, but considerable mystery surrounds this project at the present time, and the director declines to give much information with respect to it. It is known, however, that a prominent film director in Riga has been in negotiation with the Metropolitain for some time, and it is believed that an effort is being made by him to lease this Kovno theatre for a protracted period in connection with a plan to extend the sound-film service now being provided in his theatres in Riga and Tallinn. It is thought that the sound apparatus to be used at first will be temporary. American films are to be given at the Metropolitain, and a well known American sound film is scheduled to appear there in the near future.

Dubious Over Sound

Persons interested in film representation in Lithuania seem somewhat doubtful of the success of sound films because of the ignorance of foreign languages of a considerable part of the Lithuanian audiences. It is estimated that in the neighborhood of 50 per cent of the spectators are Jews who would understand German, but the percentage understanding English is very small, indeed. Should the sound film develop in Russia, it would probably have considerable success here in Lithuania, in view of the fact that the Russian language is understood by most Lithuanians over 20 years of age.

It is the general impression that American sound films will not have much success except as a novelty, and it is perhaps the expectation of the promoters of sound films for the Metropolitain that they will have an immediate vogue with theatregoers who are actuated by curiosity and that by the time this interest dies out, the cost of the experiment will have been more than met. It is not suggested that American companies producing sound films endeavor to compete with present organizations, at least until time has demonstrated the permanent appeal of this type of film with Lithuanian audiences.

The Construction Department of the Lithuanian Ministry of the Interior recently informed a representative of the American consulate at Kovno that 106 permits for theatres have been issued in Lithuania. That figure does not, however, include the Memel, or Klaipeda district, formerly German territory, from which statistics of this character have not been obtained. The following statistics show the permits issued by years in Lithuania from 1921 through 1929:

	Permits
1921	7
1922	6
1923	22
1924	18
1925	10
1926	6
1927	9
1928	16
1929	12

Diagnosed

Arthur Caesar, one of the Babes in the Hollywoods, offers this definition of the western movie colony: "It is a group of illiterates catering to the vast multitude of half-wits."—Walter Winchell in N. Y. Mirror.

It is estimated that there are not more than 20 cinemas in the Memel district, which has a total population of about 150,000. The principal city, Memel, has a population of 35,000, and there are other centers of 3,000 to 16,000.

According to the Construction Department of the Ministry of the Interior, only approximately half of the 106 permits issued have been for permanent establishments.

Kovno, the capital and principal city of Lithuania, which has a population of approximately 100,000, supports seven cinemas of a permanent character and of sufficient importance to warrant consideration by film producers. These are the following: Metropolitain, with 700 seats (built in 1929); Odeon, with 450 seats; Slabada, with 280 seats; Record, with 256 seats; Oaza, with 200 seats; Triumph, with 200 seats; and Palasas, with 138 seats.

Only a few additions have been made, in so far as the Ministry of the Interior is aware, to the various cinemas in Lithuania during the past year. No permits are required for remodeling of a minor character in theatres, and no major change in any of the theatres was reported during 1929.

There is no film production of commercial significance in Lithuania at the present time, and it is understood that none is contemplated.

It has been difficult to ascertain the number of films censored for release in Lithuania during 1929, but it has been estimated at about 500. About 40 per cent of the films on the Lithuanian screens are American, about 50 per cent German, and the rest French or Russian.

Despite a rather unfavorable year for Lithuanian agriculture and industry, the general condition of the theatres was reported to be fairly good.

The establishment of the Metropolitain on the main street of Kovno was a notable event, and although not usually crowded, the establishment appears to be making money.

In general, it may be said that price plays a more important part on the Lithuanian market than quality. The buying power of Lithuania is low, and tastes are different from most other European or American communities.

There is no discrimination against American films on the Lithuanian market. On the contrary, they have an established popularity, despite the accessibility of the market to German producers. The percentage of German films has grown, however, in recent years.

FINLAND

By C. RODERICK MATHESON
Sec'y to Commercial Attache, Helsingfors

Three new cinemas were constructed in Finland during 1929, including one in Tampere, the Tuulensuu, and two in Helsingfors, the Gloria and the Atlantis. The Tuulensuu has a seating capacity of 700, the Gloria 650, and the Atlantis 460.

It is customary that theatres which require repairing or reconstruction be worked upon in the summer months in order to be ready for the winter season, which is usually relatively brisk. During 1929 most of the cinemas underwent major or minor alterations, but their seating capacity of 400 was closed during 1929, and the theatre was moved to what was formerly known as the Bio-Civis, with the same seating capacity. The net additional number of seats in moving picture houses in Helsingfors, therefore, totaled 710 and in all of Finland 1,410.

The Arena (470 seats), Capitol (900), Kino-Palats (800), and the Gloria (650), all in Helsingfors, were equipped with sound devices during the year. The equipment in each case was American.

U. S. Talkers Held Field in Finland Alone During '29

Four feature films were produced in Finland during 1929 by Suomi Filmi, Helsingfors, and three of them shown in the Helsingfors theatres. These films were entitled "Kajastus," "Korkein Voitto," and "Kahden Tanssin Valilla." The fourth will be shown in 1930.

O. Y. Kotka Filmi produced one film, "Juhla Meren Ranalla." Suomi Filmi, which is the only company in Finland producing feature films according to a continuous production program, is not equipped to produce sound films, nor is O. Y. Kotka Filmi; and neither at the present time contemplates the installation of devices for the production of sound pictures.

The only sound films shown in Helsingfors during 1929 were American.

According to the Finnish Board of Censors, 469 American films, aggregating 615,040 meters, were passed by that body in 1929. Other films passed by the board included: Germany, 154 films, 205,980 meters; France, 25, 50,045; Russia, 30, 41,145; England, 23, 37,565; Sweden, 22, 21,275; and Denmark, 5, 10,230 meters.

Thirty Finnish films, principally of an educational nature, were passed; these aggregated 20,875 meters in length.

The censors rejected 26 films of a total length of 49,130 meters during 1929. These originated in the following countries: United States, 9 of a length of 15,260 meters; Germany, 5 of 12,370 meters; France, 1 of 2,130 meters; and Russia, 11 of 19,370 meters.

There is no legislation in effect in Finland inimical to the interest of American films, nor is any anticipated.

During the greater part of the year attendance at picture houses was considered good; during the last six weeks or two months of 1929, however, the depressed conditions in the country appeared to have a material effect on the attendance, and many of the larger cinemas played to very poor houses. While attendance during the Christmas and New Year holiday season is usually rather small, the winter season, as a whole, is normally the cinema season. The 1929-30 winter season is not expected to be as satisfactory as usual for the picture houses.

High and Low On Music Row

WITH the theme song on the wane and the popular tune rapidly coming into its own, it is interesting to learn that in the music files of NBC can be found more than 50,000 songs, many of them favorites of our grandparents and great grandparents. Among them are found the prohibition battles of the seventies, waged with such ballads as "Don't Sell My Father Rum" (1872), "Don't Go to the Bar Room, Father" (1878), "Father, Drink No More" and "Father, Bring Home Your Money Tonight." These songs are now inserted in various NBC programs and are under the supervision of William J. Glassmacker.

Even Chief of Police May See Sunday Shows

Owensboro, Ky.—"What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." Thus, at least, reasons Mayor Logan Meredith, and, by reason of this mental process, local exhibitors have scored a decisive victory in their Sunday closing fight. For the past ten Sundays the favorite sport hereabouts has been to haul managers of the Empress and Bleich theatres up before Hizzoner for flagrant violations of the Sabbath labor laws. The city's high executioner performed his solemn duty in each case, as all good officials should. But he also did a lot of thinking.

This led to a meeting with the city commissioners to discuss the advisability of summoning all other violators, guilty of similar offenses, and thus do away with any discrimination, a step which met with the instant disapproval of the commissioners. Under a compromise agreement, it was decided that rather than have a "Sour Sabbath" in Owensboro by closing all places of business, picture houses should be permitted to run unmolested. The mayor thereupon issued orders to Police Chief R. P. Thornberry, who was responsible for the 10 arrests since May 4, to discontinue any interference with the theatres. Both houses did a very thriving business last Sunday.

Even Chief Thornberry will probably become a regular Sunday patron from now on.

The stock company is said to have had a very successful season. Future of the Grand Opera House still is uncertain.

THE

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

ANOTHER method of computation is possible to solve for the joint resistance of two resistances in parallel, as in figure 23. This method is simpler than the arrangement employing the reciprocals, but unfortunately is limited in its simple state to cases involving only two resistances. Expressed in the form of an equation it is in other words;

$$Rx = \frac{R1 \times R2}{R1 + R2} \qquad (17)$$

The joint resistance of two resistances in parallel is equal to their product divided by their sum.

Substituting into the foregoing formula, when R1 is 10 ohms and R2 is 10 ohms,

$$\frac{10 \times 10}{10 + 10} = 5 \text{ ohms}$$

No doubt the reader wonders about the utility of such combinations of resistances. Have they any practical application? Perhaps the man who is familiar with these elementary details realizes that if two such resistances were to be used, it would be possible to substitute one unit of the proper value and thus avoid all the complications. Such thoughts are quite in order, but the function of this study is not the possible use of two separate resistors instead of one but the solution of circuit net works which contain elements other than absolute resistances. The laws stated in connection with these simple examples are electrical laws and find extensive application when circuit components are resolved into their electrical equivalents in the form of resistances by virtue of the fact that all components function to control current in one form or other.

Hence, we suggest careful analysis of these data and every effort to commit them to memory. These simple laws are useful when emergency repairs are necessary, particularly when the required unit is not at hand and it is necessary to improvise with what is available.

Series-Parallel Circuits

Just as it is possible to combine batteries into series and parallel combinations to achieve an end, just so is it possible to combine resistances. The reason for such combination shall be discussed at a later date. Let us devote our attention to the solution of the network. Such a series-parallel combination of three resistances is illustrated in Figure 24. The solution of such a combination appears more complex than that of a simple parallel system, but only upon the surface. We stated that two or more resistances in parallel can be resolved into a single resistance of equivalent value. An examination of Figure 24 shows a resistance R1 in series with a parallel combination consisting of resistance R2 and resistance R3. If we first attack the parallel combination and ascertain the joint resistance of R2 in parallel with R3, the final figure will be that of a resistance which is in series with R1. For example, by the product and sum method, the joint resistance of $$\text{R2 and R3} = \frac{10 \times 10}{10 + 10} = 5 \text{ ohms}$$

and the circuit now becomes as shown in figure 24A. It now becomes a simple matter to solve for the total resistance in the circuit and for the total current. According to the formula for series resistances

$$Rx = R1 + (\text{R2 and R3 in parallel})$$
$$= 5 + 5$$
$$= 10 \text{ ohms}$$

According to Ohm's Law for current

$$I = \frac{100}{10}$$
$$= 10 \text{ amperes}$$

Suppose that we solve for the voltage drop across the individual resistances. But before so doing we might warn the reader against one possible error. The statement made in Lesson Eight relative current flow in series circuits, that condition obtains only when the two resistances in parallel are resolved into one of equivalent value. When solving for the current flow through the individual R2 and R3 resistances, one cannot calculate upon the assumption that if the current flow through R1 is ten amperes, and that because R2 and R3 are in series with R1, the current through R2 and R3 individually will be ten amperes. The total current is ten amperes, but that value of current divides at the point 0 in Figure 24 and again joins to become the main current at point P in the same figure.

Three Values to Consider

Under the circumstances, we have three values of current to consider. First the total current; second the current through R2 and third, the current through R3. The resistance R1 carries the total current and a voltage drop IR takes place across this resistance. This drop is.

$$10 \times 5 = 50 \text{ volts}$$

What about the voltage across R2 and R3? It is true that the voltage across all branches of a parallel circuit connected between the same two points is the same as that across any one branch. What is the voltage across the parallel combination of R2 and R3? Is it the 100 volts of battery B? Is it the voltage drop across R1? Referring again to Figure 24A, the voltage across any part of a series circuit is the current times the resistance of that part of the circuit. The total voltage in Figure 24A

$$E = IR1 + IR23 = 50 + 50 = 100$$ hence $E'R1 = E - E'R23 = 100 - 50 = 50$

and $E'23 = E - E'R1 = 100 - 50 = 50$

According to the voltage drop across R1, it stands to reason that the drop across the parallel combination will be 50 volts. The current, R2.

$$IR2 = \frac{50}{10} = 5 \text{ amperes}$$

and

$$IR3 = \frac{50}{10} = 5 \text{ amperes}$$

Voltage Dividers

Perhaps one salient fact has become evident during the discussion of resistance networks. Particularly during the discussion of the series circuit. If the voltage drop across any part of a series circuit is equal to the current times the resistance of that part of the circuit, it is possible to produce any division of voltages. Consider the illustration in Figure 24A.

Assume that the resistance R23 is an ordinary resistance in series with R1 and does not represent a parallel combination. According to the circuit, the total voltage across both resistors is 100 volts. It is, however, possible to secure if one so desires, a drop of 50 volts for application to some other part of the system. What this part is shall be left for future discussion. The extent of the lectures does not allow further statements other than to say that the principle to be described is that found in the fader in the projection booth.

Suppose we arrange a circuit such as that shown in Figure 25. A resistance R is connected across a battery B supplying 100 volts (E = 100). The circuit is a series structure and the current I circulates through the resistance R. If the resistance of R is 100 ohms, the current I is equal to one ampere. The voltage across any part of R is according to the IR law, the current times the resistance of that part of the circuit. Suppose that some condition required that 25 volts be secured. According to the diagram 100 volts are available, and the drop across the complete unit R is 100 volts. The value 25 volts is one quarter or 25 per cent of the total available. Since the current is the same in all parts of the resistance, the voltage drop is proportional to the resistance. If we divide the resistance R into four equal divisions, the drop across each division will be 25 per cent of the total. This is simple percentage. The tap at A on

This is Lesson 9 in the Rider series on sound projection

R gives us 25 per cent of R, or 25 ohms is the resistance of R1. Then

$$E' = I \times R1 = 1 \times 25 = 25 \text{ volts}$$

The foregoing shows that the division of voltages in a voltage divider is a matter of resistance ratio. Accordingly, we can say that

$$E1 = I \quad R1 \times = Ex\frac{R1}{R} =$$

$$100 \times \frac{25}{100} = 100 \times .25 = 25 \text{ volts} \quad (18)$$

Such computation is simple, but one is apt to err unless attention is called to a very significant fact. The voltage, E1 is less than the voltage E, hence the divider "steps down"; that is, the system allows for a reduction in voltage. Yet this same reduction in voltage without interfering with the layout may represent a "step up." This is obvious, since for every 25 volts across the points X and XI, it means that the voltage across points Y and Y1 is 100 volts. Not that actual step-up takes place within resistance, but that the apportionment of voltages is such that a 4:1 ratio exists in the system. Knowing the voltage at E' to be 25 volts an dthat the ratio between R and R1 is 4, the voltage E can be determined by

$$E = E' \times \frac{R}{R1} = 25 \times \frac{100}{25} = 100 \text{ volts} \quad (19)$$

Now compare formula No. 18 and formula No. 19. The rearrangemen tot the resistance ratio changes the entire value. Also the significance of the divider. The last mentioned application of the divider is as a means of measuring voltages in excess of the operating range of a device designed to indicate electric potential in circuits. In the first case the ratio R1/R is a dividing factor whereas the ratio R/R1 is a multiplying factor.

So much for simple D.C. electric circuits. It is impossible at this time to enter upon complex networks simply because we have not progressed sufficiently in the study of current flow. This subject with many others will be dealt with later in this series.

Heat in Conductors

While upon the subject of current flow through combinations of resistances, it is necessary to consider one of the important manifestations of electric current. This is the heat generated in the conductor. The flow of electric current through a conductor irrespective of the form of the conductor, whether it is metal, graphite, carbon, etc., will cause the generation of heat. The fact that this action occurs is of importance in electric circuits because it influences the life of the conductor; that is to say, it controls the period during which that conductor may be employed to carry the current and to produce whatever effect is required. As a matter of fact, the generation of heat is of such importance that conductors are selected to conform with the requirements imposed by that phenomenon.

The fact that heat is developed when current flows through the conductor is a matter of energy transformation. Electric current in motion is possessed of kinetic energy, and kinetic energy, in turn, is energy due to motion. A conductor must possess the abiilty of dissipating the electric energy transformed into heat, that is dissipating the heat produced. The reactions due to this heat are quite numerous. First and formost is a change in the molecular structure of the conductor. Sufficient heat will cause the disintegration of the conductor and burn out. As one can readily comprehend, such burnout means interruption of the circuit and, in many cases, possible injury to other parts of the system. Second, is molecular structural change of such nature that the ohmic resistance of the conductor undergoes a change, either an increase or a decrease, depending upon the type of the conductor. Metals and alloys of metals when heated increase in temperature. Carbon, graphite and other similar materials decrease in temperature when heated. Any such change in resistance is likely to interfere with the operation of the circuit containing such a conductor. Third and by far not the least. heat developed in conductors is apt to cause minute disintegration accompanied by minute changes in resistance the two combining to create noise in the conductor.

A rapid summary of the last paragraph would make one wonder about the utility of conductors. The above statements, while true in their entirety, are particularly true and effective towards trouble only when the heat developed is excessive. While it is true that the phenomena stated take place, the magnitude of the action under normal conditions of operation is so little as to be negligible. Such a condition, relative to the conductor, is achieved by the selection of conductors designed and developed to dissipate a definite amount of heat. As a matter of fact, electrical conductors are rated according to their heat dissipating qualities. Recognizing the association between the current flow through the conductor and the heat dissipation rating, one can readily comprehend that the statement pertaining to the selection of a conductor according to its heat dissipating property, is the same as a statement saying that conductors are selected according to their ability to carry electric current within certain limits.

Conductors

All conductors cannot carry infinite amount of current. Neither can they dissipate an infinite amount of heat. While the heating effect is mainly dependent upon

1. Current
2. Cross section of the conductor
3. Material of the conductor
4. Length of the conductor

the current carrying capacity depends upon the items listed as 2, 3 and 4 in the above tabulation. One must, because of utility, add the location of the conductor; whether or not free circulation of air is available. Free circulation of air enable greater dissipation of heat.

The relation between current flow and heat is of great importance. Joule's Law.

$$W = I^2R \times t \quad (20)$$

where W represents electrical energy in Joules, I is current, R is resistance and "t" is time shows a definite condition. (It is possible to convert W into heat by converting energy in joules into heat in calories. The definition of the joule is "The joule is the work done in one second by current of one ampere flowing through a resistance of one ohm".) The condition is that

The quantity of electrical energy converted into heat when a given current flows through a conductor is independent of the direction of the current flow.

Another important law allied with Joule's equation is that

The heat developed in a conductor is proportional to the square of the current irrespective of the direction of the current flow.

Just what is the significance of the above law? Assuming the selection of any one conductor to carry a certain amount of current, doubling the current flow does not increase the heat two times. Instead the heat developed increases four times, as the square of two. If the current flow is increased threefold, the heat developed increases as the square of three, or nine times. If the current flow is decreased to half its original value, the heat developed is not cut to half its original value, but decreases as the square of a half; becomes one quarter of the original value.

Comprehension of the above will explain one important connection between the above and the use of parallel resistances in many circuits. Refer to the circuit shown in Figure 24. The joint resistance of the two resistances R2 and R3 is 5 ohms. Each one is of 10 ohms. The total current flow in that circuit is 10 amperes. Suppose that a resistance of five ohms to carry 10 amperes is not available. Let us say that a ohm resistance is at hand, but its current carrying capacity is only two amperes.

If 10 amperes were to be passed through such a resistance, the heat generated would be 25 times as great as when only two amperes were flowing through the unit. A logical method of solution is the use of two 10 ohm units capable of passing five amperes each, in parallel. Each would then carry its rated current without overloading, the correct resistance would be in the circuit and injury due to excessive current and heat (known as overloading) would be minimized.

It might be well at this time to correct a possible impression. The above statements do not mean to say that all parallel resistance circuits are employed in order to create the above condition. The reasons are more numerous and will be dealt with later. However, the division of current flow is one reason for the use of parallel resistances.

Power Rating of Conductors

We stated that conductors are designed to carry a certain amount of current. Recalling the fact that all conductors possess resistance, the relation between current flow and resistance introduces voltage. Whenever voltage and current are present in an electric circuit, power is present in that circuit. This is true because of Joules equation or law and because Power is the rate at which work is done, or the rate at which energy is converted from one form to another.

Refer once more to Figure 24. The resistance R1 functions to reduce the voltage impressed across the parallel combination of R2 and R3. In other words, a voltage drop takes place across R1. This drop is 50 volts at 10 amperes. Heat is developed in this resistance and the electrical energy in that circuit is converted into heat. Hence the dissipation of a certain amount of energy represented by a current flow of 10 amperes through a resistance of five ohms into heat. The heat is, of course, useless and the energy is wasted, but a certain condition is created, namely a voltage drop is produced. This conversion of electric energy into heat takes place at a certain rate. According to the definition of power, the rate of doing work (the power) would be equal to the work done (the energy converted) divided by the time taken to complete the operation; or

$$P = \frac{W}{t} \quad (21)$$

Since power is the rate at which work is being done, it is possible to express the rate as the energy converted. For example, as previously stated, one joule of energy is converted when one ampere of current flows through a resistance of one ohm for one second. This is the same as stating that one joule of energy is converted when a voltage drop of one volt takes place across a resistance of one ohm, for one second. Also, since

1 joule = 0.24 calorie of heat

0.24 calorie of heat is produced during one second when a voltage drop of one volt is developed across a resistance of one ohm.

Now, the most frequently employed unit of power is the watt and, since it is possible to express the rate of energy conversion as energy converted per second, it may be said that

1 watt = 1 joule per second and by definition of the joule

1 watt = 1 volt × 1 ampere

Some New Definitions

We now have the relation between the heat produced in a resistance when current flows through it and the possible rating of a resistance to express this ability to withstand the conversion of energy from the electrical state into heat. Thus, a resistance of one ohm which is of such structure that it can withstand the generation of 0.24 calorie of heat per second,

Opinions on Pictures

Dixiana

(Radio Pictures—All Talker)

Box-Office

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

FINE music, generous comedy, colorful backgrounds and a melodramatic story combine to make "Dixiana" a good bet for popular appeal. The production is intended as Radio's 1930-1931 successor to "Rio Rita," but fails to equal the all-around qualities of the latter as a box-office attraction. In addition, "Dixiana" will have to buck the public reaction to musicals made in the operetta formula, while "Rio Rita," as one of the first of that formula, found the very fact that it was musical comedy in its favor. However, it is loaded with selling angles.

"Dixiana" contains several tuneful, original song numbers by Harry Tierney. It also has the effective comedy team work of Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, with the pair wandering in and out of the story to provide the laugh situations.

The comedy development is bulwarked by the German dialect of Joe Cawthorne and the semi-serious characterization of the tall and not-so-slender Jobyna Howland.

Bebe Daniels turns in a nice performance in the lead, while Everett Marshall, recruited by Radio from the operatic stage, reveals a fine personable voice in two song renditions. Marshall, in this, is very self-conscious, traceable no doubt to the fact that "Dixiana" is his first picture. Ralph Harolde, as the gambler "menace" to the love interest, hits a high mark with a sterling performance.

Bill Robinson, well known negro tap dancer, stopped the show at the premiere Tuesday night in Los Angeles with a specialty dance number that was all too brief.

Miss Daniels here is a singer and dancer in a New Orleans circus, the story taking place in the nineteenth century. She meets and falls in love with Marshall, son of Cawthorne, who inherits a Louisiana plantation from his mother. Marshall brings his intended bride to the plantation, but the circus girl is disowned by Jobyna Howland and immediately returns to the big top with Marshall following.

The final sequences are laid in the spacious gambling palace of Harolde and the annual Mardi Gras that has made New Orleans famous. After a gambling and dueling encounter with Harolde, Marshall and Miss Daniels are reconciled for the finish.

The story is episodic with comedy sequences interrupting the continuity of the plot. These sequences get plenty of laughs. The singing of Daniels and Marshall, plus the personalities of Wheeler and Woolsey, should give the picture plenty of box-office appeal if——. And the "if" revolves around whether or not full advantage is taken of the picture's many selling angles. It'll be a merchandising proposition all the way, the result to be determined by showmanship.

Rockne Delivers

Pathe's home office executives had their first glance this week at the six one-reel football subjects made under the direction of Knute Rockne, famous Notre Dame coach, and the rooster is crowing again. He has a right to.

Facing the camera in a semi-closeup, Rockne discusses celebrated plays, explaining the mechanics of the maneuvers, and then illustrates them with slow motion shots of his own squad or views taken at big games. The latter include the cheering and playing of the college bands.

The millions of football fans in this country will eat up this series, and the general public will get a thrill out of the expert diagnosis of what happens behind the line of scrimmage. These shorts are natural for the fall and should go big in college towns.

Rockne, who, incidentally, was present at the showing, delivers his lines in professional style.

The Big Shot

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Better-Than-Average Keaton

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

BUSTER KEATON goes overseas to the front line trenches, equipped with many cob-webbed comedy situations and dialogue—nevertheless providing a generous quantity of slapstick laughs and sequences to rate "The Big Shot" above the regular line of Keaton program pictures in entertainment values.

The story is slight, and depends entirely on the thread which carries him into the enlistment office, through training camp, and finally up to the front lines of France. He is the regulation sap that struggles through, going for the laughs on his bungling of things generally. Yarn is a regulation comedy formula fading in and out on various gag sequences without too great a regard for the story development.

Regular Keaton romance is injected, with the girl also going overseas to get into the front lines with Buster at the finish. Cliff Edwards, Victor Potel and Pitzy Katz form Keaton's trio of companions with the highly-touted comedy abilities of Katz somehow lost completely in the shuffle. Edwards naturally has his ukelele along to sing a few tunes.

Standout in the picture is Edward Brophy, as the hard-boiled sergeant. Brophy, former assistant director for many years, laced it into Keaton so roughly that M-G-M placed him under term contract. Director Edward Sedgewick, although unbilled, got into the camera eye as the fat cook in the army camp.

"The Big Shot" rates as better-than-average Keaton comedy that is geared for the key week runs and program houses. There are more laughs and comedy in this one than in Keaton's initial talker released a few months ago.

Musical shorts and novelties will round out the bill here.

Produced and released by M-G-M. Story by Sidney Lazarus and Al Boasberg. Scenario by E. Richard Schayer. Dialogue by Schayer and Boasberg. Directed by Edward Sedgewick. Photography by Leonard Smith. Length, not set. Running time, about 75 minutes. Release date, August 30, 1930.

Big Boy

(Warners—All Talker)

Jolson Clicks

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

JOLSON in blackface.

Al as a comedian without the tear-dripping dramatics of weepy songs.

That's the Al Jolson of "Big Boy," his final talker for Warners.

And Jolson, with his many happy song numbers and wisecracks for laughs, opens up to the limit. The result is one of the best pictures Al has made since his "Jazz Singer" turned the business upside down.

Jolson as "Gus," the colored servant of the Bedford family, essays the role of a wise-cracking, ever-singing trainer of race horses. He spends his time training "Big Boy," the blooded race horse upon which the Bedfords are staking their all, in an effort to win the Kentucky Derby the winning of which will recoup the fortunes of the family, which, while rich in traditions, is poor in funds.

Lloyd Hughes, the son, is framed by two alleged friends and a woman. They force him to pave the way for Jolson's dismissal a short time before the race and substitute a jockey of their own choosing to ride "Big Boy." Jolson, however, exposes the plot and arrives in the nick of time to ride the horse to victory.

The finale, as in the stage play, shows Jolson without makeup. He "fills in" by singing several numbers and gives a "curtain" speech. Unusual, but entertianing.

All through the picture the action is delayed by the placements of wisecracks or songs to carry a weak and obvious story. They are cleverly done, however, and do not stand out in a glaring manner.

When Jolson sings, which is very often, his numbers are short but good. Some of them are undoubtedly potential "hits."

Jolson is on the screen almost constantly, carrying the entire picture himself, and leaving little for the others to do. Johnny Harron and Claudia Dell have a love affair that is woven in very lightly. Lloyd Hughes, Eddie Phillips, Lew Harvey and Louise Glover Hale are capable in their respective roles.

Dramatic shorts and travelogues are needed here.

Hell's Island

(Columbia—All Talker)

Audience Stuff

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

ANOTHER of the Ralph Graves-Jack Holt hoke films and, like its predecessors, one which should grab plenty of coin. It follows the usually well-defined and obvious formula of pictures starring this team, but it packs a kick.

There is an abundance of action, some comedy and a few tense scenes, which make it a worthy successor to "Submarine" and "Flight."

This time the pals are in the French Foreign Legion, soldiering in Africa where the Riffs are on the warpath. They fall for the same girl, and Graves is in the preferred spot. The pals go into action against the rebels hating each other and when Holt is winged by a Riff, Graves carries him to an ambulance. In doing so, however, he disobeys orders and is forced to knock out the sergeant. For this breach of discipline, he gets ten years at Hell's Island. The girl determines to follow him there and marries Holt to accomplish her purpose. At the island, Holt arranges escape for Graves, planning to kill his erstwhile pal, who, he believed, had shot him in the back. In the nick of time, he learns his error, assures Graves' escape with his wife and is killed himself.

Rather a far-fetched yarn, but guaranteed to furnish the audience appeal expected from Holt-Graves films. Direction is good and Dorothy Sebastian furnishes plenty of "it" as the heroine. She gives a consistently good performance. The three principals carry the burden, other members of the cast being subordinated, although all are adequate.

Play this up as an adventure yarn and another in the successful Holt-Graves series. The Foreign Legion and Hell's Island angles offer plenty of exploitation suggestions.

Musical and comedy shorts advisable.

Rain or Shine

(Columbia—All Talker)

For the Mob; Too Long

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

COLUMBIA opened the money bags for "Rain or Shine," first of the outfit's releases for 1930-31 and a very good attraction for the mob.

In story values, the picture is wobbly, depending as it does upon Joe Cook and his particular brand of comedy to put it over. More often than otherwise, Cook comes through, but the job at times becomes too tough for one player to carry. The consequence, as might be expected, is a drop in interest and laughs in many of the sequences. In addition, the picture, when caught by this reviewer, was entirely too long and called for editing in order to make it hold together more adequately.

Cook is Smiley, all-around circus man, who operates the Rainey show for Mary, played averagely by Joan Peers, who did such promising work in "Applause." Dalton, the ringmaster, and Foltz, the lion tamer, are angling for control of the circus and, when Smiley and Mary part as a result of a misunderstanding, get their chance to put the crimp into the proceedings in so far as Mary is concerned. Smiley hears about it, returns in time to rally a few of the faithful together and gives a show. But the audience, incited by Dalton, protest until the riot call is sounded.

The climax is a fire with Mary imprisoned under the big top to be rescued by Smiley as the tent collapses. Mary, in love with Bud, a society boy who had joined the circus as a lark, goes to him as Cook does a Chaplinesque fade-out on the edge of the burning circus tent.

Frank Capra, the director, did a very competent job, in the main. The dramatic end of his task is workmanlike, effective and pictorially there. Cook's own brand of comedy requires considerable footage before it is worked up for laughs. This may explain why practically all of the major sequences are permitted to run as long as they do. In particular, the swanky country club scenes where Smiley disgraces Mary in the presence of the uppity-up society folks grows tedious before it finally fades out and back into the atmosphere of the circus.

Cook, as on the musical comedy stage, reaches out for the belly laughs. Often he gets them. Often he fails. But the picture, as it stands, is a good attraction for picture houses.

Good Action Stuff

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

RIN-TIN-TIN scores again in this production and, ably handled, gives a fine performance. The story itself is packed with action that will appeal to that type of picture fan that glories in danger and daring.

Jobyna Ralston and her father, Edmund Breese, live in a deserted fishing village. A trio of payroll bandits, who had just killed three men and escaped with the loot, seek refuge there, posing as government agents on the trail of rum runners. The chief of the band, Walter Morris, takes a violent dislike to Rin-Tin-Tin, who reciprocates. When Morris plainly shows that he intends to force his attention on Jobyna she sends the dog with a message to her fiance, Lane Chandler, a state policeman. Then follows a long series of battles before right triumphs.

One sequence shows a bicycle plunging from a pier into a powerboat. It is effectively done. Breese and Morris give outstanding performances and the rest of the cast works hard. The picture is fast-tempoed and lacks padding.

With good comedy support will satisfy all action fans.

A Real Draw

Norma Shearer's pulling power at the box office is being attested by her newest picture, "Let Us Be Gay," which is clicking generally throughout the country, it is shown by reports to Motion Picture News. The picture is proving one of the real bets of the current summer, getting consistently high grosses in widely-separated sections of the country in spite of excessive heat. A big factor is the frequency with which Shearer films are being turned out, keeping the star before the public. It is but a few weeks since "The Divorcee" was released.

One Mad Kiss

(Fox—All Talker)

A Weak Sister

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

HERE'S another and convincing argument against the filming of operettas. This one just doesn't get to first base, despite some good acting and sitting. It's a story of a Spanish Robin Hood, who defies the thieving governor who is usurping military authority. Plenty of liberties are taken with plausibility, as is common in operettas. The illogical story just doesn't register.

The title is a misnomer, hardly suggestive of a western musical romance. There are some catchy songs, but the orchestral accompaniment in western scenes certainly seems out of place.

Don Jose Mojica is a capable singer, as is Mona Maris. However, with Antonio Moreno in the cast he is at a decided disadvantage, as the latter could probably make so much more of the hero role, if we except the singing. Moreno puts over the role of heavy, but seems out of place, particularly after his work in "In Old Arizona," and other pictures where he has played roles calling for a Spanish dialect. Tom Patricola contributes some laughs, but he is hopelessly miscast in the role of a Spaniard.

The picture is pretty weak from the box office standpoint, as it lacks selling points. Antonio Moreno is the best money bet, but it's almost a two to one bet that Moreno fans will resent his role in this.

Firebrand Jordan

(Big Four—All Talker)

Trite

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

ANOTHER western that follows the customary formula without a redeeming feature. The cast is composed of old standbys of the western field, and their heroics will no doubt evoke cheers from the kids.

Firebrand Jordan, a ranger, is assisting the sheriff in his search of a counterfeiting outfit, the leader of which decides to put him out of the way. Judd Howe vanishes, leaving his daughters, Joan and Peggy, worried at their ranch home and in need. Hampton, who has plenty of money, pretends that their father owed him a considerable sum and is willing to take Joan's acceptance of his attentions in payment. Firebrand learns that Hampton is the leader of the counterfeiters and restores peace and harmony to the countryside in short order.

Don't make many promises for this one, although it probably will click in houses using westerns.

Use musical shorts and good comedies for balance.

On Your Back

(Fox—All Talker)

Mildly Interesting

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

"ON YOUR BACK" is not the story of an acrobatic team, regardless of the title, but is intended to convey the fact that clothes and styles of women figure mainly in the story.

Without outstanding "draw" names in the cast, the picture is geared to do about average business in the secondary week stands and split week program houses.

The story deals with the rise of Irene Rich to the rank of a Broadway modiste to finally end up as the sole owner of a chic style salon on Fifth Avenue. Her inspiration comes from an only son, Raymond Hackett, and her faith in a worn deck of cards which she use to guide her activities. She struggles, so that her son may graduate from college and get a start in business.

Wheeler Oakman, a friend, suggests a plan whereby she can benefit financially both herself and struggling show girls, by obtaining "conscience" money. This plan works well until one of the show girls, Marion Shilling, who met Hackett in the college town while she was playing there, is thrown into an affair with H. B. Warner, Miss Rich's broker. Hackett, upon finishing college, goes to work in Warner's office. He quits the job when he learns of Warner's affair with his fiancee. In the showdown, Miss Rich is forced to share her love with Hackett's fiancee, and all ends pleasantly.

Miss Rich is capable in the lead. H. B. Warner gives a finished performance, while Hackett is adequate as the son.

Nothing unusual to make this outstanding but able direction by Guthrie McClintic makes it mildly interesting.

Manslaughter

(Paramount—All Talker)

Excellent

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

"MANSLAUGHTER" was announced as one of the "specials" on next season's program by Paramount. The finished picture will stand up under that classification. Whether or not it will hit extended runs over two weeks depends entirely on the selling campaign in each locality. Neither Claudette Colbert nor Frederic March have sufficient drawing power at this particular time to help in carrying the picture, and smart showmen are going to have an opportunity to reap profits on their ability to put the picture over via exploitation and advertising.

The picture itself is sure-fire entertainment for any type of audience. The story is fast-moving and effective; characterizations are nearly perfect; direction is outstanding; and the entire production carries plenty of audience appeal.

"Manslaughter" is certain to enhance the "draw" values of Claudette Colbert for succeeding pictures. Here is a girl with a charming personality, sincere acting abilities and positive starring qualifications. March steps into real prominence in his portrayal of the district attorney who has to prosecute the girl he loves. The rest of the cast is most capable and finely balanced.

The silent picture will be remembered as one of the outstanding hits of its particular year. The talker version, although without "name" personalities, has chances of getting into the same classification.

The story introduces March as the "on-the-level" district attorney who falls in love with Claudette Colbert, wealthy society girl. Latter is responsible for the death of a motorcycle cop due to her speeding proclivities, and stands trial for manslaughter, being convicted through prosecution by March.

The girl goes to the pen, and March resigns his office and gradually goes downhill. Stanley Fields, a yegg, gets March to pull himself together, with March finally getting a job in a law office to stage the come-back. Then the girl, through influence, receives a pardon, and returns home. Discovering March in the law firm, she obtains his dismissal, inviting him to her house to give him the sad news. After getting vindication through showing March what she does to him in order to get back for his sending her to jail, the girl finally gives in and dashes into his arms as March dejectedly leaves the mansion.

Story, fast moving throughout, carries several dramatic punches that keep interest at keen pitch. Individually and collectively, the performances make for balance and sincerity; direction is noteworthy.

Slow McLaglen Comedy

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

THE audience laughed at this one in preview form. Whether they will bother to storm the theatre showing Victor McLaglen's latest effort is a question. This might have been a corking good story. Instead it's rather blah.

The locale is a mythical South American country where an outlaw chief and his band are making merry. Victor McLaglen is Jerry Maxton, who soldiers for the love of it. He is sent to capture the bandit and is accompanied on his excursion by young Tom Standish, played by Humphrey Bogart, with whom he has had several previous encounters, none of them friendly.

Misfortune, due to some dirty work by two Spanish girls apparently smuggling arms for the outlaws, results in both Jerry and Tom finding themselves in a native jail. After their escape, they start out after the bandit and chance to rescue a Spanish girl, whose picture, stolen from a native photographer, Harry has been carrying.

Eventually they arrive at Rosita's hacienda home and a marriage is arranged between her and Jerry. But the girl loves Tom and a battle with the bandits eventually solves this difficulty.

McLaglen is a vital enough figure as Jerry, and there is some of the broad comedy characteristics of his recent pictures. But the whole production seems to slow down. The most memorable fact about it is the portrayal of Tom, by Bogart, who is constantly amused at Jerry and has a rather delightful laugh. Other roles are filled with no particular glory by Mona Maris, Mona Rico, Luana Alcaniz, Michael Vavitch and John St. Polis.

This film will need rather strong support. Musical shorts might be used to advantage.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Irving Cummings. From the novel "Dust and Sun" by Clement Ripley. Screen play and dialogue by Dudley Nichols and Henry M. Johnson. Adaptation by Dudley Nichols and Norman Hall. Photographed by Arthur L. Todd. Length, not set. Release date not set.

The Way of All Men

(First National—All Talker)

Mild Program Fare

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

NEARLY ten years ago Goldwyn produced a silent adaptation of "The Sin Flood" from the play by Hemming Berger. Because of its characterization through dialogue, it was figured to be a "natural" for a talker remake. The new version, however, lacks many of the qualities that would lift it from its present classification of average program calibre.

The story is rather unusual, presenting the reactions of several men and one woman when face to face with death. Preliminary sequences bring together the men and the woman in a river front basement saloon, when a terrific storm stirs the river to overflowing. As the place starts filling with water, the water-tight doors are clamped down and the group locked in to face death from suffocation. There is Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., a broker's clerk; Robert Edeson, a rich broker, Anders Randolf, former employer of Fairbanks, Jr.; Dorothy Revier, Fairbank's girl friend; Noah Beery, owner of the bar; Wade Boteler, the bartender, and several tough and humorous characters.

With death facing them, everyone starts preaching "brotherly love." Animosity is forgotten and a fine spirit prevails. Then the air becomes bad and the doors are opened by Beery to make the expected death quick and painless. But the waters have receded, and pure air pours in.

When the fear of death is removed the pledge of brotherly love is forgotten and arguments, fights and bickerings begin all over again.

Romantic angle is supplied by Fairbanks, Jr., and Dorothy Revier, who perform most capably. Comedy touches by Wade Boteler and Noah Beery are effective.

Broad comedy, musical shorts and cartoons will fit here.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by Frank Lloyd. Story by Hemming Berger. Adaptation and dialogue by Bradley King. Edited by Ray Curtis. Length, 6,032 feet. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date, Sept. 7, 1930.

Unique, Fine Jazz Number

DON AZPIAZU and his Havana Casino Band know their instruments. This Cuban aggregation of jazz band musicians combine their wind and string instruments with a peculiar lilting tempo that makes their music distinctive, infectious and charming.

And, because their stuff is different, this release kicks in as one of the finest jazz band numbers this reviewer has seen in his long, and often painful, experience with sound shorts. Running time, 9 minutes.

Bill it and boost it. Can stand the plug.

NAT CARR and Thelma Hill head the cast in this Campus Comedy, but no students in any college ever looked as dumb and amateurish as those selected for this short. They look more like graduates of a college of soda dispensing. Carr has the role of a tailor in a college town who can't make ends meet and is about to be dispossessed when the boys come to his aid and save the day. Though lacking in punch and ideas, it moves swiftly and will entertain persons not overly-critical about comedy. Directed by Raymond McCarey. Running time, 20 minutes.

Good with musical drama.

TERRY RAMSAYE kids the newsreels in this issue of the Review, making up a "perpetual newsreel" containing the type of "news" seen so often in them. The other units consist of irrigation methods in Egypt and an insight into a home of the Gay Nineties, with a quartette, dressed for the period, singing "Love's Old, Sweet Song." The color effects in the latter are so blurred that the faces of the singers are barely discernible, although semi-closeup. Mildly interesting. Running time, 9 minutes.

Will fit into any type of bill.

Lots of Laughs

ANY time a Krazy Kat cartoon is on the bill, the audience is in for laughs, and this one is no exception. It follows more or less familiar lines, but has a few novel twists. The artist displays some keen imagination and humor and the musical accompaniment is good. A good all-around cartoon subject. Running time, 6 minutes.

Fine for comedy relief.

Snow Time

Good

THIS Aesop Fable is packed with laughs and is especially appealing on a hot day, for the locale is the Alps and the synthetic snow and ice look refreshing. One of the dogs in the cast is overcome by the cold, whereupon the good old St. Bernard, with a cask of liquor a la Swiss, comes galloping to the rescue. He pours the contents into the stiff, who comes to life, turns over on his side and indulges in an alcoholically beautific snooze. The pack then take after the St. Bernard, but he swigs the rest of the booze and escapes. Running time, 8 minutes.

Will help any program.

Desert Thrills

(Vitaphone Varieties, No. 989)

Goofy

IT'S hard to figure out what the producer had in mind when he started this. The locale is a cafe in some desert place, and opens with a sheik singing through his nose to a honeymooning couple who look like high school sophomores. She is thrilled and wants to be abducted by the sheik. Hubby becomes peeved and shines up to a coach dancer. A squad of French soldiers burst into alleged melody, but when the boy and girl take to singing it's time to retire. And the gags were very, very stale. Running time, eight minutes.

May get by if your audiences are not critical.

THE highlight of this issue is a musical prodigy, a 16-year-old pianist-composer who plays his own modern "pieces," at times using his fist and elbow to show his versatility. It's much too long and contains ads for a couple of music teachers. Under the subtitle, "Prehistoric," one is regaled with shots of trees and foliage which might have been shot in Central Park; "Neapolitan Class" shows two marionettes in grand operatic costumes with a dubbed in off-stage duet; and the issue is completed with shots of an Egyptian derby, with camels racing. Running time, 9 minutes.

For balance with a heavy show.

Stories Putrid, Says Critic, and Becoming Worse

Pare Lorentz, picture critic of Judge, takes a sock at screen writers in the current issue of that publication. Their output is becoming worse all the time, he asserts. His editorial follows:

"I don't want to get off another one of those pessimistic bulletins, but if any of you know what to do about this movie situation I'd like to hear from you. The writing in Hollywood is getting worse and worse. They have employed the best actors in the business, but all those bright young writers who were shipped West by the carload either must have died of diabetes or quietly turned on the gas. There was a time when once in a while somebody experimented with the movies. Big business has changed all that.

"The product for the last six months has been standard—putrid is something close to a definition of that standard. I would except the Laurel & Hardy comedies and the Walt Disney animated cartoons. As a matter of fact, the day a theatre owner turns out a program composed only of (1) a good, in the flesh, orchestra, (2) an animated cartoon, (3) a Laurel & Hardy comedy, (4) a newsreel with news, (5) beer and cigarettes, then going to the movies will have become more of a pleasure than a habit."

Shown Up, Must Drop Side Line, But All Is as Is

Since the appearance in Motion Picture News several weeks ago of a story describing the gymnastics by which the publicity director of a circuit here made a good thing of trailer business he operated on the side, the circuit has issued orders to the gentleman in question either to abandon his trailer interest, or else. To all appearances the edict has been complied with. The gentleman is still publicity director for the circuit and a newcomer directs things over at the trailer office. Here's what happened:

A short time ago a certain exchange closed its Chicago office. The former manager, possessing some influential theatre connections, was employed by a local trailer house as salesman. His theatre connections made it possible for him to swing an account formerly handled by the trailer house operated by the circuit's publicity director. The Motion Picture News story appeared just about the time the account was lost, and was followed by the circuit's edict. The publicity director, knowing that the lost account would follow his competitor's new salesman, held out bigger commissions and a change to buy a half interest in the trailer business out of future profits, in order to get the influential boy on his side. Naturally, this meant not only the return of the account which had been lost but a "blind" operator of the trailer business as well. The result is that things are exactly as formerly, except for the presence of a new name on the publicity director's trailer house payroll.

"U" Fears Loop Milking of 'Quiet'; Shubert Yanks It

Failure of the Garrick theatre, Shubert legit and road show house, to obtain a protection clause when it contracted for the second Loop run of "All Quiet on the Western Front" (U.) resulted in the picture being jerked from the Loop spot the moment it was given to the Granada, Marbro and Capitol theatres, outlying houses. The Shubert house aired the war picture after only three weeks, despite the fact that it has had consistently good grosses in the spot and was steady when thrown out. The Garrick had intended to hold it until the reopening of the legit season here, but the day it opened at the three outlying spots the Loop house called it quits.

The Granada and Marbro, north and west side B. & K. houses, play day and date with Warners' new south side acquisition, the Capitol, as a result of the bookings on the war picture.

The Universal exchange feared the picture would be milked dry by a lengthy Loop run, and in the face of increasing demands from exhibitors gave it to the outlying houses, it was explained. "All Quiet" had four good weeks at McVickers prior to its Garrick Theatre run.

Chicago Chain Operators Inaugurate Booking Service; Expect Line-up of 60

Warners Have Eyes on Many Chi Theatres

Chicago—Warner Bros. are continuing their penetration into the Chicago and adjacent theatre field. Negotiations which, when completed, will give the brothers a total of between fifty and sixty houses in this area, are still under way. Most prominent in the dickering are a score of theatres formerly booked by Jimmy Coston, who becomes district theatre manager here for Warners with the new line-up. Negotiations for the Schoenstadt string have not been entirely abandoned, either, according to report. The Symphony, a west side indie house, is also reported ready to pass to Warner ownership.

The deal for the Elkhart at Elkhart, Ind., was closed recently, as was that of the Granada at Milwaukee. Deals are also pending for other houses in northern Indiana and southern Wisconsin.

Juvenile Checker Players in Lobby

Chicago—Publix-B. & K. introduced what has proved to be a popular lobby act here when it signed two 18-year old checker and chess prodigies to play all comers at the Chicago theatre during the current week.

The two youths, Sammy Reshevsky and Nathan Rubin, are proteges of Julius Rosenwald, the Chicago philanthropist. They have attracted international attention by their prowess on the checkered boards. They play ten and twelve opponents at one time and also engage in blindfold games. This is the first time a lobby act of this character has been offered in a Chicago theatre.

Sixteen Essaness Houses Are Backbone of New Combine; Offices Leased

Chicago—An affiliation of Chicago chain theatre owners was completed here this week for the purpose of operating a new booking circuit. Approximately 50 theatres are represented in the initial membership and others are expected to enter the line-up for a total of 60 in the next few weeks.

The Essaness string of 16 will be the largest single group in the buying combine. Other member organizations include Simansky & Miller's six; V. R. Langdon's three; Lou Reinheimer's three; T. V. Lynch's three; Tom Murray's two, and the Tivoli, Downers Grove, Ill. (Floyd Brockell), and the Iris (Powers).

Emil Stern, general manager of Essaness, will head the affiliated buying group. Floyd Brockell, Publix Midwest divisional booker, and Lou Reinheimer will act as buyers.

It was emphatically stated that each member group will retain its individual identity and independence, and that the affiliation implies nothing more than subscription to the buying service.

Publix has an appreciable interest in Essaness Theatres and, likewise, is negotiating for purchase of the three Lynch houses.

Business offices of the new booking circuit will be operated in connection with the Essaness offices in the Standard Oil building, where additional space was leased this week.

Chicago Editor Sells Story to Fox for $7,500

The deal for "Three Girls Lost," a novel by Bob Andrews, editor of the Mid-Week magazine section of the Chicago Daily News, was closed this week for a consideration of $7,500. Andrews' story, which ran serially in his paper, was completed in three weeks, the first installment having appeared in print before the novel was completed. Fox opened negotiations for purchase of the movie rights before publication of the final installment.

Who Barred Tom Thumb Course—Publix or Church?

Chicago—Publix agreed to operate the La Grange theatre at La Grange, Ill., about a year ago on the condition the village authorize Sunday shows. The issue was carried by a narrow margin at a special election but the indignant "antis," in an effort to make the best of things, insisted on a new ordinance which specified that no other form of amusement could be operated within the village limits on Sunday nor could any form of amusement be operated for profit at any time within 200 feet of a church edifice. (The La Grange is directly opposite a church.)

Recently the village issued a permit to operators of a Tom Thumb golf course to be located between the church and theatre. Work was suddenly suspended with the course about half completed. Now the churchmen deny they invoked the 200-foot ordinance and Publix naively asserts it knows "nothing about it."

"Blushing Brides" Second Holdover for Chi Oriental

"Our Blushing Brides" (M-G-M), which grossed an amazing $60,600 (170%) at the Oriental theatre in its first week, was held over for a second in the same house. This is only the second time in the history of the house that the one-week policy has been forgotten in the interests of an exceptional picture show. Its only parallel in B. & K. Loop houses in years was established several weeks ago by two other M-G-M pictures—"Caught Short" and "The Divorcee." The first, after a week at the Chicago theatre, was given a second Loop week at the Roosevelt; while the latter went from the Chicago to a second week at the Oriental.

THE

By John F. Rider

by virtue of a current flow of one ampere per second can be said to bear a power rating of one watt. Expressed differently, a resistance of one ohm of such structure that one volt may be applied to it and a current of one ampere can flow through it bears the power rating of one watt. The expression for power follows as;

$$P = E \times I \quad (22)$$

and

$$P = I^2R \quad (23)$$

The reason for the I^2R is as follows:

The electric charge Q transported from one point to another in an electric circuit by a current I in a period of time "t" is equal to the charge transported in one second multiplied by the time "t" or

$$Q = I \times t \quad (24)$$

Work must be expended in the transportation of this charge between two points having a difference of potential E, and energy is expended as

$$W = QE \quad (25)$$

$$= I \times t \times E$$

However according to Ohm's law

$$E = I \times R$$

hence $W = I \times R \times I \times t$ (26)

and $W = I^2R \times t$ (27)

Since $$P = \frac{W}{t} = \frac{I^2R \times t}{t} \quad (28)$$

$$P = I^2R \quad (29)$$

Thus, the expression watt denotes power consumption and power rating. Our interest at this time is the power rating of resistances. Since the resistance element must carry a certain amount of current at a certain voltage, it is imperative that the element be of the correct wattage capacity. The wattage value of a resistance is of little utility without the resistance specification and the two are always allied with each other. Every specification of wattage is usually accompanied by a specification of resistance. If the device is of such nature that the resistance is of little consequence, the voltage specification replaces the resistance value, because knowledge of the voltage allows determination of the maximum permissible current. Such are the ratings accompanying sockets and switches.

Suppose that we consider a resistance of 1000 ohms capable of passing two amperes. According to the formula for power, the wattage rating of such a unit would be and since 1000 watts = 1 kilowatt the above resistance would be rated at four kilowatts.

Watts $= I^2R = 2^2 \times 1000 = 4000$ watts

Now according to Ohm's Law, the maximum voltage which may be applied to the above resistance to limit the current flow to a maximum of two amperes is and Watts $= E \times I = 2000 \times 2 = 4000$ watts.

$E = IR = 2 \times 1000 = 2000$ volts

Wattage Designates Flow

Thus, the wattage rating designates the maximum current flow through the entire resistance. This is a point which may be elaborated upon. Suppose that we have a resistance of 1000 ohms as aforementioned. The application of a voltage of 2000 volts will cause the flow of two amperes, entirely within the electrical rating. If we maintain the voltage constant and reduce the value of that resistance, to say, 500 ohms, the entire structure is changed. The old resistance prior to the change was rated at 4000 watts. The new resistance no longer bears that rating. Let us see why. The current flow will now be

$$I = \frac{2000}{500} = 4 \text{ amperes}$$

Watts $= I^2R = 4^2 \times 500 = 16 \times 500 = 8000$ watts.

$= E \times I = 2000 \times 4 = 8000$ watts

The power present in that resistance is no longer 4000 watts; instead it has doubled and now is 8000 watts. If the resistance was of such design that the wire or the conductor could carry two amperes, it now is subjected to a current of four amperes, or an overload of 100 per cent. It is true that the size of the conductor governs the current carrying capacity of the conductor, but the wattage rating applied to any one conductor applies to the whole and not to a part. This is so because reduction of the value of resistance increases the current flow through the conductor when the voltage originally controlled by the wattage rating is applied to part of the resistance. An illustration of this state was the foregoing example.

Any part of a resistance may be used if the flow through the resistance is not greater than that denoted by the original wattage rating. Suppose that we have a resistance of 1000 ohms rated at 10 watts. What is the maximum current flow permissible through this resistance?

$W = I^2R$

and $I = \sqrt{W \div R}$ (30)

$= \sqrt{10 \div 1000}$

$= \sqrt{.01}$

$= .1$ ampere

This means that the wire is of such design and diameter that it will allow the passage of .1 ampere or 100 milliamperes without excessive heating. This is then true of any part of that resistance, whether it is 10 feet of that resistance or 100 feet of that resistance. Let us continue. Since the resistance is rated at 1000 ohms and .1 ampere is the maximum current, the maximum voltage that may be applied to the entire resistance of 1000 ohms is

$E = IR = .1 \times 1000 = 100$ volts

Watts $= E \times I = 100 \times .1 = 10$ watts.

We stated that any length of that resistance because of the design of the wire will carry .1 ampere. Suppose that the wire is of such character that it has a resistance of .1 ohm per foot and we cut off five feet of the wire. This makes a total resistance of .5 ohm for the entire length of the wire to be used. This length will carry .1 ampere but its wattage rating is no longer 10 watts.

What is the wattage rating? How much voltage may be applied to this resistance? Since we know the maximum current limit and we know the total resistance, we can determine the wattage rating.

Watts $= I^2R = .1^2 \times .5$

$= .01 \times .5 = .005$ watt

and $E = I \times R$

$= .1 \times .5 = .05$ volt and Watts $= E \times I = .05 \times .1 = .005$ watt.

Important in Sound

Perhaps you wonder why we spend so much time upon the wattage rating of resistances. We have a motive. The design of the modern sound system is such that many parts of the circuit employ resistances to produce a voltage drop. These parts are vulnerable and because of the conditions under which they function are liable to breakdown more rapidly than other parts of the system. As it happens their location is usually stragetic. They control the important points of the system and interruption at one of these resistances invariably results in cessation of operation. Correct replacement is important if frequent repairs are to be avoided. Thorough assimilation of the power rating of resistances and the methods of calculation will lead the selection of replacement parts which will minimize service. Then again comprehension of these details will expedite the location of trouble and the possible discovery of a situation where the unit used is unsuited for the conditions present at the point of operation.

The wattage rating of resistances will be an item of import when we reach the discussion of methods of securing operating potentials from power circuits. The design of the power supply system which operates from the lighting mains and is not of the motor generator type involves the resistance and the selection of all resistances in these devices is controlled by the power rating. One cannot choose a resistance for placement in such eliminators unless the power rating is first calculated and is found suitable for insertion.

"Cleanliness"

THERE is that well-known expression that "Cleanliness Is Next to Godliness," and its application to show business is a mighty important point regardless of whether your theatre is located in the heart of a big city or on the side street of a little town.

Theatre managers have always been looked up to by the average person everywhere and there is nothing that will kill their mental picture quicker than an individual who is not dressed neatly and in keeping with the position he occupies.

We have known managers whose salary was so small that we marvelled at their ability to make both ends meet and yet they always present a fine appearance, both in their manner of dress as well as their person. They are always clean-shaven, hair brushed and finger nails perfect.

And then again, we know some who are earning mighty fine money but looked like ditch-diggers on an off day. Clothes rarely pressed, hair unkempt and fingernails filthy.

How the latter could possibly preach neatness and cleanliness to the members of their staffs is a riddle that would be hard to solve, nevertheless they seemed to be getting by with the numerous bosses whose duties ought to include watching the appearance of the house manager as well as the way the theatre is being run.

There is little difference, both in cost and trouble, between the two types. If a man is neat at heart it is second nature for him to make a fine appearance all the time. If he is untidy by nature, he will find it difficult to look nice regardless of how much trouble or expense he goes to.

And then there is one little point that gets by both types but which ought to be watched better. That is the famous black cigar they keep sticking in their faces all the time regardless of whether the house is open for business, standing in front or around the house as if they are in their private offices.

Not that we ourselves don't indulge in a cigar whenever we get a chance; but when we are talking to somebody we don't slam it in our faces and chew it to bits.

I suppose some of the boys are going to mutter, "What next is this guy "Chick" going to lecture us on?" But, honestly boys, these little chats are not lectures. I am merely trying to point out things here and there that perhaps, in the rush of your many duties, you may be overlooking, but will some day cause you plenty of grief.

We repeat for the particular benefit of showmen; "Cleanliness Is Next to Godliness."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Parkes Engineered A Theatre Census Gag That Clicked

Winter or summer, there's certainly a lot of year round showmanship displayed in Hattiesburg, Miss., by A. Brown Parkes, manager of the Saenger Theatre and since this gag was used in connection with a Summer Jubilee it just fits in nice with our "Helpful Summer Suggestions" crusade.

A theatre census was undertaken in Hattiesburg and numerous surrounding towns. Ladies called at each house—getting the names and addresses, telephone number and kind of picture preferred. The ladies also left at the various homes a calendar for the month of June listing the titles of pictures to be shown at the Saenger during that particular month. The idea of the calendar was to place it near the telephone in order that one might give quick information about the pictures playing at the theatre. To make this stunt more effective, the theatre would call ten to fifteen numbers and ask them, "Can you tell me what is playing at the Saenger Theatre today?" If their answer was given promptly, they were then informed that two tickets awaited them at the box-office.

The front of the theatre had a sign five feet in width and 90 feet in length—across the entire front of the marquee with the following copy, "SAENGER-PUBLIX SUMMER JUBILEE—THE ENTIRE MONTH." The letters on the sign were painted to resemble snow and ice and the front of the theatre was decorated with signal flags of various colors from the top of the theatre down to the marquee.

By the time Parkes was finished tying up all of the local dealers, as well as newspapers and other mediums, everyone in Hattiesburg knew that there was a special feature at the Saenger. With showmanship such as this going on around your section Brown, we hope that you are going to keep us posted so that we can let the rest of the world know what you are doing. And incidentally, we find that we haven't a photo of you in our files. How about remedying the situation by shooting us in one together with a little note about your career?

Heralds That Get Attention Are Used By J. Fred Lovett

As he himself says "I'd like to get on the bandwagon" we can do no more at this time than to extend the glad hand to J. Fred Lovett, manager of the Royal Theatre in Providence and help him up on the wagon. We've heard lots about this popular showman.

Having some of his work on hand we know that Lovett is going to be a very active member of the Club. And just to give you an idea of what he does to sell his shows and how he cashes in on news angles we'd like you to know that he tied in the Sharkey-Schmeling fracas with his picture and managed to draw a great deal of publicity. He made up a special herald on the type of a circus flyer that carried a catchline head on "The Fatal Fourth Round." The copy on the herald was taken from a sportwriter's column in a New York daily. The copy tied in with the showing of the fight pictures and the feature picture at the theatre. As this was the first time this flash had been used in Providence a great deal of attention was called to the film.

Another slant that he used was to print up a number of cards as an advance plug on "Puttin' on the Ritz." The cards carried copy reading: "Everybody Loves CLARA BOW—Now you have a chance to see the one she loves—HARRY RICHMAN (Playdates, etc.)." At first glance it would seem as though Clara Bow and Harry Richman were the stars in the film. The stunt proved to be very effective as a medium for attracting attention and the film received some valuable publicity. These stunts that we have set forth are just a sample or so of what Lovett does to bring them in and we believe that he is going to keep us posted on his work so that we can pass it along to his fellow members. And listen Fred, on your next contribution, include your photo and a little dope about yourself so that we can give you a regular introduction. You know the rest of the boys in the Club like to know what their brother members look like. And we are sure that you want them to know.

It Costs You Nothing to Belong to the

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

And see what marvellous benefits you derive from this organization!

A great many showmen (we know) have been just on the verge of joining the Managers' Round Table Club, but have neglected to do so largely through oversight.

We suggest that YOU get full information about this great army of showmen and then decide once and for all whether you want to join.

The mere fact that so many live-wire showmen already belong to the organization — that they represent the cream of the show-world — every branch of theatre management—that not a single one was induced by a salesman or any other sort of solicitation other than through the actual activities of the Club and the word-of-mouth praise that has spread from one end of the world to the other —but joined after simply reading the facts about what the Club does for its members—all these are indications that it is worth your while at least to get these facts as quickly as possible, and then (if you want to) join and get the benefits that such association with fellow showmen is bound to bring.

IT HAS ALMOST REACHED THE POINT WHERE IT IS NOT A QUESTION OF WHO BELONGS TO THE CLUB—BUT, WHO DOESN'T BELONG TO IT!

Oscar Passes Along A Good Stunt In The Midget Herald

It has been quite some time since we have seen this gag pulled and if we remember rightly we used it in one of the old Mae Murray films, way back, to describe certain scenes which at that time were supposed to be magnificent. Now Earle F. Oscar, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Athens, Alabama, used it to plug his showing of "The Hollywood Revue," one of the first pictures of his newly installed sound and talking policy.

Though the cut does not show the exact size, it will give you a pretty fair idea of what the gag consisted of. On ordinary colored paper, Earle imprinted various midget mats plugging the stars and highlights of the film. These unique circulars were handed out at the theatre and sent through the mailing list. We are unable to state at this time whether Earle inserted a bunch of them at once or sent them out one at a time, but we believe, in view of the fact that it would cut down postage, he sent a number of them out at once. They were all made up in fine style and carried excellent selling copy. As he supplied the printer with the mats, the cost of turning them out was small and we believe that if you have been looking for something new in the way of a novel plug, you can find the answer right in this gag of Earle's. Both sides of the paper were used.

The photo which we are showing below is the display for "Weary River," that he turned out some time ago and a recent street ballyhoo on "Song of the West." The atmospheric front for "Weary River" was built in the days when the house did not have sound, but we are showing it in order that you may see Earle's continuous activity. As this was the first time so novel a front had been seen in Athens, it was the subject for much comment. We need not say much about the street ballyhoo he used for "Song of the West," as it happens to be the same one that G. P. Banniza used and we spoke then of its pulling power; but we do want you to know that no one but Earle himself is standing alongside the horse, so if you'll take a close look you can see what this active showman looks like.

We could go on for a page or so and tell you about the other little stunts that he pulls, all of them box-office builders, but since you, too, have used them at some time or another, and space at the present time is limited, we'll have to hold off until we hear from Earle again and then we feel that we will have one or two more valuable suggestions to pass along.

Nellis Displayed Fine Showmanship For Latest Work

Lining up his house for some publicity that would prove of inestimable value was done by R. L. Nellis, manager of the Von Ritz Theatre in Bedford, Indiana, recently, when he arranged to have a Hindu fakir give an exhibition in the town.

The campaign, as we understand, was laid out by Mr. Vonderschmitt, owner of the house, and Nellis. The fakir was escorted about the town and he performed many feats of magic or whatever it is that fakirs do. But what we want to point out in this story is the ace way that Nellis kept his house before the public. Blindfolded, the Hindu drove about town in a car and it is interesting to note that the dealer who supplied the car was prevailed upon to place an ad in the paper plugging the attraction. The same method was used at the filling station, where the fakir stopped for gas. The theatre's ballyhoo truck was always in evidence.

As he wanted to tie the attraction in with his merchandising of "Ladies of Leisure," Nellis arranged that the ace stunt which the fakir featured be climaxed at the Von Ritz Theatre. The fakir claimed to be endowed with the ability to throw himself into a trance, be buried under six feet of earth and then shake the dust from his feet and appear perfectly normal. He did it.

By looking closely at the photos we are showing you will see the interest that the residents of the town took in the proceedings. They followed every move the man made with interest. No matter where he went there would always be a crowd around. And right alongside the crowd one would find the street ballyhoo for the Von Ritz. You'll even notice the truck at the "grave." The local newspapers gave the stunt a big play and the front pages carried stories on it for a week. Every one of the stories mentioned that when the fakir was "exhumed" the coffin would be transported through the streets to the front of the theatre where it would be opened. In this manner Nellis received some publicity of institutional value as well as for his current shows.

The photo will give you an idea of the crowd that jammed the front of the theatre when the "coffin" was opened. The stunt went over great and the box-office receipts at the Von Ritz for the following weeks proved the strength of Vonderschmidtt's and Nellis' showmanship.

And, by the way, another angle that helps business and goodwill a lot is the special benefit performances that the theatre features a great deal. Every organization in the town is invited to arrange for a benefit show at any time of the year, and from the number of firms, schools, clubs, and other organizations that take advantage of it, we draw the conclusion that it is also a great publicity help to Nellis, due to the fact that the organization running the benefit would most always distribute special heralds around the town, which gave Nellis a break on the theatre and the attraction.

We have shown many examples of "R. L.'s" work in the past and we know that the future will also be productive of many new showman slants. Let's hear some more from you, "R. L.," so that we can tell what else you are doing to put your house over.

LouisLammFollows Brother's Example And Joins The Club

Following closely in his brother's footsteps, Louis Lamm, manager of the Mirth Theatre in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, hastens to send in his application for membership in the Round Table Club; and from the interest he is showing it seems that he is going to give his brother Julius, who manages the Fox Theatre in Sheboygan, a run for his money, to see who can be most active in the club.

As his first contribution, Lamm gives us a copy of his house organ and we notice that he keeps his program cost low by selling space to the local merchants. From the number of merchants listed in it, we believe that it must have tremendous pulling power and be read by every one entering the theatre. The programs are printed in black and white on good stock paper.

His years in the show game have fitted Lamm to turn out some good work. He formerly managed the Roosevelt Theatre in Kenosha and prior to that operated his own house in Chicago for a number of years. We are glad to welcome this showman into our organization and we hope that he will prove very active.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

AN EXHIBITOR IN HOLLYWOOD

Catching a Preview

Continuing where I left off in last week's issue, we motored down to San Bernardino (just a mere 80 miles or so) to catch a preview of Buster Keaton's latest, "Forward March" and seeing this picture just a night after "Hell's Angels" gave us quite a kick. In one the war is a hell of a serious business and in the other it's a riot. (After the cutting and editing room crews get finished this ought to be a darned good audience picture.)

The preview was held in the Fox Theatre, and although we were anxious to say hello to Charlie Wuerz, he was gone before we were able to look for him. However, we'll be getting back to that town before we head north again.

And what a house. Typical of all the Fox West Coast houses, it is kept in tip-top condition from front to back. Everything and everybody formed a background of perfect theatre operation. The more I see of the Franklin houses the less I think of some of the "dumps" back east. But anyway the point I wanted to stress about this theatre is the clever arrangement of a miniature golf course in the entrance facade Despite numerous steps, Charlie rigged up a clever contraption and the steps really make it all the more sporty.

Lots of showmen the country over would do well to write Charlie and ask him where he had the various parts of the course built. Possibly it is a home-made affair; even that is not impossible. But, nevertheless, if you have a spot somewhere in or outside of your theatre, why not fix yourself up a little golf course and meet the competition from that source right in your own back yard?

The Stars Meet Here

After returning from the preview, we "snook" into the "Brown Derby," a well-known hangout for the stars (so help me Hannah) and before we were through the front door we spotted Junior Laemmle looking for his name in one of the dailies. We can remember when we led Junior around by the hand in the dim and distant past. That was in the days of the IMP and later the Jungle Film Co., when yours truly was helping make a state-right proposition out of "Paul Rainey's African Hunt" (Joe Engle please note). But why go into old history when so many modern things are happening all the time?

Next morning we devoted to answering some of the mail that had accumulated along the line on our way out. We hope the delay was not held against us. After all, boys, I'm out for a good time and writing letters rarely ever comes under that heading. Oak?

Hold Everything for Whitbeck

Hopped down before noon to see the one and only Frank Whitbeck. Sort of bearded the lion (no lie either) in his den, but just the same we want to tell the world, cock-eyed or otherwise, that if there ever was a duplicate of Frank Whitbeck he never pushed his nose above water. Far be it from me to get all excited and rave over anybody, particularly a cuss who can't talk five words without using the choicest sort of profanity, but this son-of-a-gun makes you like him even when he's swearing like a trouper. And talk about work—wow—this bird's an oogle-eyed wonder. How he ever accomplishes everything will forever remain a mystery to the outside world, but not to me, 'cause Frank spilled the beans. No, I'm not going to tell you the formula, but I'll remember it for future use.

Of course it was only natural that we should make the acquaintance of Eddy Eckles and lots of the other boys in Frank's office, and ditto Les Fountain, district manager of the San Diego sector. Great layout they have at the West Coast office and no small part of it is under Whitbeck's supervision, including art departments, etc. No wonder they function so well.

Meeting Jack Bachmann

After some lunch with them and the short, but nevertheless educational visit, I had to pull out to keep an appointment with Jack Bachmann, Associate Producer at the Paramount Studios. Seems to me that all the "real" big shots out here are the one who make the least amount of noise and Bachmann is one regular as far as I am concerned. Had a mighty pleasant visit and was invited to spend a day at the lot next week. Then stopped off in the studio publicity office to make the acquaintance of Arch Reeves and again I must take my hat off to a real regular. We chatted about many things, not forgetting Russell Holman, the advertising head back at the Paramount Home Office. This studio is certainly a beauty in many respects and the layout is typical of the entire outfit. I'm going to enjoy the Paramount studio and everyone in it. Caugh a glimpse of none other than comical Harry Green all made up as a tough guy and whooping it up in "The Spoilers."

Decided to make this evening a rest proposition and since Whitbeck promised to stop in after dinner, we hung around like an extra looking for a job. Did he show up? Like hell he did! We're wondering what the alibi will be—bet it's a good one.

Warner Theatre Chiefs

Up this morning bright and early and then off to see Moe Silver, chief of the Warner West Coast Theatre. Doggoned fine chap, this Moe, and he was one of the most interesting chaps we have talked with since we arrived out here on the coast. He has the theatre situation doped out about right, according to what we have had a chance to observe. Warner's houses should prosper under Silver's direction without a doubt. Then along came Max Shagrin, district manager for Hollywood Warner houses. Max comes from the middle west and seems to be mighty happy out here. A keen showman with a sense of show values and an unusual background to fit him for the important post he occupies. We'll be telling you more about him before we leave Hollywood.

After these brief visits of getting acquainted we headed for Universal City where we first had lunch; and who did we bump into but an old friend, Harry Caulfield. Our recollection of Harry goes way back to the old days of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company down at 111 East 14th Street in New York and when we say "goes back," we mean many years. Let's see, if our memory serves us right it was about 1910 or 1911. How's that for a long stretch of years; almost makes me feel like an old man, but believe it or not it's not that long ago.

Also caught a glimpse of "Hoot" Gibson chatting with Director Edward Laemmle. However, the flying trip to Universal City found nobody around that we came to see so we called it off and stopped at First National's Studio in Burbank with the same success; but these stops are scheduled for early next week so we will then make sure that the boys we want to meet are appraised that we are coming.

Warner Studio Is Busy

Dropped off at Warner's to say hello to George Thomas, studio publicity chief, and here again we spent a mighty pleasant time talking about things in general. Before leaving we stuck our heads into several of the stages to see what was going on. Results: Hobart Bosworth on a ship set, Mary Astor on a dining-room set, James Hall and Lew Cody doing a close-up. Then, while trying to sneak into Bill Koenig's office to meet this erstwhile theatre man, we spotted Joe E. Brown all dolled up like nobody's business. This man Koenig's office can teach the circuit crowd back east cards and spades. From all indications you can't sneeze out of turn without an O. K. from his office. And surprising as it may seem, the rule is carried out to the letter. Everything pertaining to studio activities must pass through Koenig and his efficient crew before it is permitted.

But talking about studios reminds me that if you are a lover of mystery and detective stories you will get your fill just going the rounds. All sorts of mysterious doors, automatic door-openers that work only on a given signal, cops, special cops, or what have you. And out in First National, we are rather afraid, we will have to get an O. K. from Will Hays if we ever expect to get by the inner guards. And this is not jest; after you pass through the administration building, which in most cases gets you onto the lot, you find a fence and gate where you must pass a cop whose job apparently hangs in the balance. However, we hope to get in despite all of the gates, fences and cops. Who can tell?

Previews and Reviewers

Another preview last night at Warner's Forum Theatre, a gorgeous atmospheric sort of theatre which reminds us of the house in the colored section of Chicago. The picture was George Arliss in "Old English" and it is—but wait, we are not here to review pictures so we'll leave that for Walter Greene, who covered the preview, and incidentally boys, your respect for the previewing service of Motion Picture News would go up a thousand per cent if you but knew the trouble and expense they go to in order that this service should be a valuable one for the readers of this publication. Distance means nothing, as even in the short time I've been out here our reviewers have jumped to San Diego, San Bernardino and even as far as Fresno to catch studio previews. Just imagine what this service must mean to those showmen who need to know as far in advance as possible something about their coming pictures.

Well, this ends our second dispatch about "An Exhibitor in Hollywood."

His Merchandising Has Made Tucker One Of City's Best

You can always tell when Stewart Tucker, manager of the Byrd Theatre in Richmond, Va., has engineered a campaign in the city for almost every store window is plugging his attractions. As an example take the time he played "Show Girl in Hollywood."

He arranged with every sporting goods and department store in town to tie-up with him and plug the star of his film wearing a bathing suit. Several tie-ups were made with jewelry stores and music stores. He also contacted a special tie-up with an exclusive women's wearing apparel store to feature a special Alice White frock. Almost every window of value in the city plugged the show at the Byrd, and you can bank on it that he certainly sold the picture. The same plan was followed out on his merchandising of "Journey's End."

In addition to securing windows, special tie-ups, etc., for the film, he persuaded the RCA corporation to send him a portable sound outfit which was placed on display in the window of the largest department store. As this was the first time a stunt of this sort had been seen in Richmond the interest it created was tremendous and since Stewart was alert enough to put in plenty of selling copy on "Journey's End," the picture came in for a valuable plug. Through a tie-up with the Postal Telegraph company, he was enabled to have the messengers put signs on their bicycles, and in addition secured displays in the company's windows. The Yellow Cabs were pressed into service and Stewart placed carboard strips on the car car bumpers which read, "Let us take you to see 'Journey's End' at the Byrd."

Along with this story we are showing a few photos of the Fashion and Flower show (with local talent as fashion models) that Stewart pulled not so long ago. This was on one of the most complete campaigns he ever engineered and the people who jammed the theatre from morning till night more than proved his worth to the title of showman. The other photo shows a common scene at the Byrd. A crowd of people lined up at the opening of the theatre. And when they do that so early in the day, is it any wonder that Stewart is always wearing out the "Standing Room Only" sign and reporting record breaking weeks very often?

As we number him as one of our very active members, we are sure that we will have lots more accounts of his work to pass along for your perusal and use. So keep your eye on the Club pages and learn what else this showman is doing to keep them coming up to his box-office.

Frank Costa Had A "Cabaret Night" Added Attraction

To keep his box office humming in the town of Ridgetown, N. J., Frank Costa, manager of the Playhouse Theatre, one of "Skip" Weshner's houses, pulled a "Cabaret Night" that proved a howling success. Just read the following and satisfy yourself.

As his first move, he promoted a local orchestra called the Paroquet Club Orchestra. He then went after the best local dancing school and persuaded the teacher to turn over her entire group of dancers to him. They were more than glad to tie up since the publicity would prove of mutual benefit to theatre and school.

Costa then called up a few of his vaudeville friends and the hoofers expressed a willingness to break in a couple of new steps as a personal favor. With all this talent on hand he was enabled to turn out a show the equal of anything that the big houses were offering at advanced rates, and this was further aided by the fact that there was local talent in the revue. The newspapers picked up the local talent and gave them a big plug in their columns, with the theatre coming in for plenty of publicity from this angle.

As we stated before, the whole affair went over with a bang and from the comments Costa heard as the audience left the theatre at the conclusion of the performance, he knew that his move had been a showmanlike one. We would like to hear more about what this showman is doing and we hope he will keep us posted on his work. How about it, Frank? And while you're about it why not shoot us in a photo and some dope about yourself?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Levin Makes Use Of Fellow-Member's Ideas In Africa

Making use of A. D. Resnick's gag which appeared on the back of one of his house organs, D. Levin, manager of the Empire Theatre in Brakpan, South Africa, was enabled to make up an excellent herald that carried a personal appeal.

When he found that he had a show which would appeal to the children especially, he made up the herald we are reproducing here. As you will note, it carried in it all of the pictures to be shown on the special Saturday matinee. We want also to point out the way he reached the children through the parents by the heading: "Parents, send your children to see this show," etc. This move proved to be one of the best that could be made in connection with his merchandising to reach the children and the vast amount of kids who appeared at the special show more than bore out the selling power of the copy.

Being located in a town of ten thousand persons, Levin feels that he can pull some good stunts down there. And, he tells us, that at times he has. But unfortunately he meets with opposition from the local police and civic heads; and then, to top it all off, there are times when not even twenty-five people can be found on the streets, due, of course, to the heat. "Still," he remarks philosophically, "we manage to pull some gags that bring them in, just the same."

One of his best mediums is the direct mailing list. And, more than anything else, this helps him put his pictures across. His trailers are also a valuable medium, as is his house organ, which is a sort of condensed amusement and advertising guide. His only newspaper medium is a sheet that is published weekly. We are very glad to note that he manages to do as well as he does, considering local conditions, and we hope that he is going to keep us posted on his future work because we know the rest of the Club, too, are mightily interested in knowing what he does.

Egan Is Receiving Congratulations; Read This And See

According to Dave Borland, Pete Egan had his hand all tied up not so long ago, as a result of receiving so many congratulations on the arrival of a new addition to the family. Pete's latest to feed is a girl and from what Dave tells us, she's sure something to be proud of. Though we have already offered our congratulations to Pete we now offer them through the Club pages, taking this medium to do so, since we are going to say a word or two about how Pete tied up with a local school and arranged for the students to compete in an essay contest.

The essay contest went over with a bang and as the subject was on the talkies, it wasn't surprising to learn that Pete's young son won it. And he didn't receive any help from his father either. The winning essay was published in the school house organ along with other contributions. While we are talking about Pete's work we'd like him to know that he certainly turned out a novel ad on "Temple Tower."

One of the novel features of the lay-out was a cut of a telephone, which carried the theatre number and had its receiver wire worked around a box headed "Information." These few novelties which Pete injects into his work are a great aid towards selling the film and we know that they are certainly appreciated by the readers.

We want to thank Dave Borland for his kindness in letting us know about Pete's new addition so that we could break the news in these pages at the first opportunity.

RULES—RULES—RULES!!!

We happened across a set of rules used by a theatre circuit back east and the thought came to us that in reading it over some of the members of the Club might find something among these rules that would improve their own method of handling themselves. It won't do you any harm to read them through, so here goes:

1. Every morning 'phone to the Main Office your receipts of the previous day, giving first the matinee receipts and then the total for the day. Your call must be in by 9:30 A. M.
2. Be at your desk not later than 11 A. M.
3. Deposit of the previous day's receipts should be made immediately after you arrive in the morning, and duplicate deposit slip should accompany tally sheet. Any man whose deposit is not made by noon is lax in his duties.
4. Your theatre is to be opened to the public daily on signal from the manager who is expected first to make an inspection of the theatre and make sure that his house is in readiness to receive the public.

The opening must be punctual and as per the time advertised, so that your patrons will not be inconvenienced.

Maintenance man, where one is employed, must be at his post thirty minutes before start of show.

Operators are to be in booth at least one hour before start of show.

House attaches, such as cashier, doormen and ushers, to be at theatre in sufficient time before doors open to enable you to see that they are properly dressed and equipped for the day's business.

5. You must see to it that your show gets off on schedule and that the schedule is maintained throughout the day. On change days review the first show.
6. After the matinee has started and you are satisfied it is running smoothly, is the time to repair to your office (leaving your assistant on the floor) to attend to the clerical details in connection with your job.
7. If you find it necessary to leave your theatre to make exploitation tie-ups, check billboards, etc., arrange to do these things in the afternoon, leaving your assistant on the floor, and be satisfied that your show is going to run smoothly in your absence.
8. On busy days, such as Saturday, Sunday and Holidays, it is advisable that you and your house help take their supper in the neighborhood and get back to the theatre in the shortest possible time and not later than 6:00 P. M.
9. Days off for your help and yourself should be scheduled by you in such a manner as to least interfere with the smoothness of the operation of your house. Employees should understand that when their day off falls on a holiday, they must give it up for a later date which you may give them at your convenience. No days off should be scheduled for Saturday or Sunday.
10. In theatres that do not run continuous, the opening for the evening show should be handled as was the matinee, and manager and assistant should be on the floor continuously watching carefully that house attaches show patrons every courtesy; that sound and projection are all that they should be.
11. Try to cultivate the friendship of as many patrons as you can, and above all smile and have your house staff do likewise. A sour countenance belongs at a funeral but has no place in a theatre.
12. At the end of the show and while patrons are leaving the theatre, manager and assistant should take prominent places at the main exit doors and bid patrons a pleasant good-night, at the same time listening for comments on the performance. Necessary attaches and particularly the matron must be at the theatre until closing.
13. Manager or assistant manager should be the last one to leave the theatre after the end of the show, and make sure that the house is properly vacated and closed. Where a night watchman is employed, turn the house over to him after making a final inspection.

We think there are some mighty fine points for you to start following in the above group. Why not accept them in the spirit of open suggestions and make your work more systematic? Possibly, it may be one way of showing your various bosses that you are always on the job to improve your methods.

Wedding at Capitol Biggest Stage Event In Steubenville

Inspired by the summery moon, shedding its full-orbed golden radiance upon them as they viewed its magnificence with bated breath the song-writers and poets have for years been fashioning song and verse dedicated to the moon and June. They gave us "Moonlight and Roses," "June Night and You" and the many other numbers patterned to transmit the beauty of the summer night. That's all fine; but what the dickens has all the trash ahead of this paragraph got to do with the double stage wedding that William L. Hendricks, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Steubenville, Ohio, engineered just a couple of weeks ago?

"Well, we'll tell you. Being a crackerjack showman, it was only natural for "W. L." to feel that a theme song should be written especially for the occasion he was shortly to celebrate; and if he hadn't been humming songs every so often he might not have thought of it. But then—after seeing a few hundred talking pictures and listening to a couple of million theme songs is it any wonder that he wanted one for his show? He got it. "I'm on the Highway to Your Heart," written by a local, made its debut in Steubenville. We don't know yet whether the couples or the theme songs caused "W. L." more concern, but since he's got the theme song set, let's get ahead with the rest of the arrangements.

It was no easy matter to secure a bride and groom (or perhaps brides and grooms would be better) even with the promise of all the free merchandise that the local dealers would donate. The offer was tempting, though, so the couples capitulated and agreed that perhaps a stage wedding would be a wonderful thing. (Would be? We'll say so. When a showman puts it on it's gonna be.) And that's that.

Next came the local dealers. Would they assist Hendricks? Would they—you couldn't hold them back! They had been in on some of his stunts before and they felt that they were going to be in on one of the biggest now. The first move was the windows. Harts started it by displaying their jewelry gifts to the couples about to be married. Then came McCausen's with their floral pieces, closely followed by Cribbs, whose furniture display, attractively arranged, is still causing comment. Reiner's plugged the gowns, and then every one started to dress up their windows. A day or so after Hendricks had completed arrangements a visitor would have imagined that the town was celebrating a national holiday. The word "Capitol" was on every one's lips, as was the stage wedding. And as if that wasn't enough, the dealers all got together and broke in the newspaper with the double truck ad that we are showing. In all of their displays, co-operative cards, plugging the event, theatre and merchandise were featured.

The theme song and the dealers safely sewed up, Hendricks then turned his attention to the staging of the attraction. His years of showmanship were brought into play. Early in the morning and late at night he could be found in the dark recesses of the theatre auditorium directing the placing of the scenery. He blended colors, changed drops; colored them and directed their hanging. The staff was more than anxious to help. They, too, felt that Steubenville was in for one of the finest treats it had ever witnessed. Ushers were drilled until they knew exactly what was expected of them and their preparedness was more than necessary as was easily seen in the mobs that were to storm the doors in a few nights. Finally the stage arrangements were completed.

With most of his work done, it remained now for Hendricks to connect up the show and run through it in order that there would be no hitch on the night of the proceedings proper. The organist knew her part well; the stage hands theirs; the ushers ditto; and the local band, one of the most popular in the state, reported "All's Well." Satisfied, Hendricks made his last move before the dress rehearsal and final show. Heralds, in the form of wedding invitations, were sent to every one for miles around. The invitations carried a list of the merchants who were participating as well as the time and other data on the occasion. Every one able to read perused it.

At six o'clock on the night of the double wedding, the lines started to form and by the time the box-office opened they were three blocks long. What a mob. With no seats reserved, they fought like wildcats to get in. The house was jammed in less than 45 minutes. The doors had to be closed and it looked for a time as though the local police would be unable to cope with the crowd. But they succeeded without the aid of the reserves and managed to inform the hundreds of other disappointed people that the house was overflowing. They couldn't have squeezed any more in—even with a shoehorn.

Before going ahead with the account of the wedding we'd like to point out another showman angle that Hendricks' years of experience taught him. The local radio company had been making announcements every night concerning the wedding, but had not announced that it would broadcast the proceeding. Hendricks had requested that the announcements be conducted in this manner in order to insure himself a good house. When the house was jammed and a hold-out was imminent he informed the rest of the people that the proceeding would be broadcast and this in a measure mitigated their injured feelings, and placated somewhat, they hastened home to listen.

The picture faded out at 8:30 and the announcement was made of the wedding about to take place. After the announcement an organ prelude followed; then, as the organist went into the impressive strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, the bridal procession, which had been assembling on the mezzanine floor, appeared at the head of the center aisle and proceeded down to the stage.

The creamy, ivory of the brides' costumes formed a perfect picture against the wide-opened mouths and astonished eyes of the spectators. It seemed a scene from fairyland. Blushing prettily until their cheeks threatened to rival the sanguine beauty of the roses they carried in their arms, the brides, preceded by their beautifully-garbed attendants and pages, walked slowly down the red-carpeted aisle to the stairs leading to the stage.

As they reached the stage, the curtains parted, revealing the work that had kept Hendricks up both night and day. Never had Steubenville witnessed such scenic display, and the beauty and impressiveness of the occasion only seemed to enhance it. The wedding party took their places on the stage and the brides and grooms stepped out to take their parts in the Game of Life. Small wonder that tears glistened in their eyes as well as in the eyes of a good many matronly ladies of the audience. With heads held high, the young people listened to Mayor Oliver Conley as he solemnly read the marriage service. The sweet strain of "O Promise Me," wafted over the crowded auditorium, by the local orchestra assembled on the stage, seemed to portend an everlasting happiness for them.

All was silent as Mayor Conley asked the one question which would bind them forever.

"Do you, Helen Tordinello, take this man for your lawfully wedded husband?"

The bride looked for a second at Erasmus Cacavelle and with a trusting and loving smile, replied firmly, "I do."

Conley put the same question to the other couple, who also answered in the affirmative. Another moment and it was over. The band and the organ swept into the stirring music of the theme song and the audience clapped and clapped and clapped. Never had the auditorium resounded with such applause. And standing in the wings stood the man responsible for the success of the affair, William L. Hendricks. As he listened, he, too, was very happy, not because he had succeeded far beyond his expectations; not because the house had once more broken a record for attendance; not because they were now applauding for him; but because he knew that he had given four people one of the finest starts they could ever hope for. He had given them something to battle with life on. He knew. They did not. He had already gone through a lot of the tough breaks of life the newlyweds were bound to encounter. Only he had not had the start that they did. Hidden in the wings he stole one more glance at the couple, before beating a hasty retreat; for he knew that in a moment or so a bunch of grateful relatives would be over to shower him with thanks. He wanted to get back to his office and plan for his next campaign. Bill Hendricks was the showman; they didn't want to thank him—they wanted to thank William L. Hendricks—the man who had made their wedding a glorious occasion. Hendricks was happy and he wanted to stay that way; he didn't want people crowding around him telling him what a whiz he was; but as he walked swiftly up the last aisle and saw the smiles that his audience and his service staff bestowed upon him, he knew what they wanted to say. Yes, Bill Hendricks was happy. But, having put plenty of time and energy into the affair to make it a financial as well as good-will success, Bill Hendricks was also mighty tired.

Harry J. Mulqueen Used Gun Display To Sell Picture

Being acquainted with every one in town has its advantages for every showman, as Harry J. Mulqueen, manager of the City Opera House in Waterville, Me., found out when he was enabled to procure collection of some fifty guns from a local citizen to be placed on display as a plug for his showing of a recent picture, and the residents were invited to participate in a contest run in conjunction with it.

The exhibit of 50 guns was on display in one of the prominent stores on the main business street; the collection being loaned by a local citizen.

Twenty-five of the guns were tagged, one of which was an exact duplicate of the gun carried by Gary Cooper in the picture.

The idea of the contest was to guess which gun was like the one Gary Cooper carried in the picture. To the first five persons guessing correctly the right pistol, a pair of tickets was awarded.

As it so happened, out of the 150 guesses submitted, only five persons guessed the right pistol.

In addition to the interest manifested in the contest, the display in itself plus art cards, stills, etc., proved a potent factor in popularizing the picture.

As this is Mulqueen's first contribution, we feel sure that his next one is going to be just as good, if not better, and we hope that now he is enrolled along with the rest of the New England live-wires he will send us in a photo of himself.

Vacation Time

Another of the series of prgoram readers used by J. J. Dempsey at the Strand Theatre in Dorchester, Mass. Maybe you can use something along these lines yourself.

The dominating thought in most minds at the present time is "where will I spend my vacation." Some of us have planned to visit the seashore. To others the high cool air of the mountain appeals, and again to others travel calls.

The majority of people, however, do not have the opportunity to spend a few weeks in the summer either lolling on the beaches or sitting on the verandas of the different mountain hotels. To these the Publix Strand offers a different Vacationland.

Each week you will have the opportunity of coming here and relaxing in our cool and comfortable temperature while your thoughts are transported to new lands, where you live new lives and romances to the utter forgetfulness of the hot and humid night outside.

This season, we are more fortified than ever with a wealth of entertainment for your theatre enjoyment during the summer. Never before have we had such a choice array of top-grade pictures to offer.

With the combined resources of Paramount Pictures as producers and Publix Theatres in the proper presentation of your screen entertainment you will surely receive the BEST in brains and genius of the world's largest entertainment merchants can provide.

The Paramount-Publix Refrigerated Strand is your Vacationland!

Blackface Ushers Warble Tunes In Glover's Theatre

Down in Shreveport, La., H. S. Glover has a set of ushers that not only execute their jobs well, but also possess voices of better than ordinary ability.

To give "Mammy" advance publicity at the Majestic Theatre, Glover had five of these ushers in black face, black wigs and a "Mammy" sign stretched across their well tailored usher's uniforms.

For a week in advance, these boys presented themselves on the stage at the beginning of each show and rendered a number of selections from the picture; always accompanied with the announcement that these songs could be heard in Al Jolson's latest contribution to the screen "Mammy" coming to the theatre next week.

The boys made a decided hit and aided in no small way in popularizing the latest Jolson picture. Which leads us to remark: "Here's something for the rest of the boys to shoot at." Look, all you other live-wire showmen (or whatever other names you want to call yourselves or each other), how about giving the cash customers something to talk about? And maybe your usher staff will reveal some talented young men. You can never tell, but that is of minor importance. Take a crack at this gag of Glover's and see how you can cash in on it.

SEVENTY-FIVE DEGREES INSIDE

We dropped into one of New York's most popular deluxers the other night. And after we dropped in we almost dropped out. Not from fright (even though we were instantly seated) but from cold. That house should have been playing the Byrd film and they would have had a natural atmospheric setting. Though Clara Bow was the screen attraction, and she was billed as "The Fiery Red-head," it didn't mean a thing. By the time we had shivered through two reels, we went to nudge our companion to ask whether she wanted to leave and when we looked around we found a vacant seat. The poor girl had gone out to get a hot chocolate.

After rubbing our numbed hands for a few minutes we finally thawed out enough to rise, and as we walked up the aisle and listened to some of the most awful coughs we had ever heard we decided that it was little things like this that make this well known circuit drop business in the summer time and hand it to a bunch of medicos.

Reaching the foyer we found our fair companion busily engaged in dispensing soup, from a Sterno, to a number of pleading, half frozen New Yorkers, who had unwittingly been deceived by the signs outside which proclaimed that the house was exactly 75 degrees inside. AND THE JOKE OF THE WHOLE AFFAIR IS THE FACT THAT IF WE TOLD THE GANG WHO RUN THE HOUSE WHAT WE THOUGHT THE TEMPERATURE WAS ON THE NIGHT OF OUR VISIT THEY'D PRESENT A COUPLE OF SIGNED AFFIDAVITS TO THE EFFECT THAT THE HOUSE WAS ONLY 75 DEGREES!

PROFIT BY OUR EXPERIENCE AND MAKE SURE THAT YOUR HOUSE IS NEVER TOO COLD. WE KNOW THAT YOU CAN'T PLEASE EVERYBODY BUT THE TEMPERATURE IN THAT HOUSE WOULD HAVE BROUGHT CHUCKLES OF GLEE TO EVERY UNDERTAKER AND DOCTOR! P. S. WE'RE WRITING THIS BETWEEN SNIFFLES, TOO.

Bride And Groom Were Featured By Mahoney In Stunt

With talk centering about the June brides, W. H. Mahoney, manager of the Strand Theatre in New Orleans, La., felt that he could get a lot of publicity for his house on "One Romantic Night," so to that end he stepped around town and tied up almost everything in sight.

Perhaps one of the outstanding stunts was a tie-up with the Chevrolet Sales Agency whereby they furnished six cars carrying banners about picture, theatre and playdates; the cars being used in an auto parade through the main business streets. Occupying a seat in the first car of the parade was a young man and lady dressed as a groom and bride. Banners on sides of this car carried copy relative to the picture and theatre while other signs read, "Just Married."

A tie-up with a jewelry store resulted in that store having a co-operative window display as well as giving a special still photo of Miss Gish to every purchaser throughout the week. The Happiness Candy Co. placed 2,000 inserts in wrapped packages of candy and other merchandise during run of picture; copy on inserts referring to pictures, theatre and playdates.

With "W. H." being represented often on our pages we know that the future will bring a lot more accounts of his work. Are we right "W. H."?

Accorsini's Tie-Up With Car Company Fine Showmanship

Pulling one that Lynchburg, Va. had never seen before, Olinto Accorsini crashed through again with a load of publicity and grabbed himself a lot of extra b.o. dough for the Academy Theatre.

If you'll recall a short time ago we showed you how Anna Bell Ward tied up the local traction company and secured the use of one of their cars to advertise the picture she was selling. Well anyway, Olinto decided that the gag would work in Lynchburg too, providing, of course, he could get the traction company to agree to his plan. So he set out to devise a scheme that would be of mutual benefit. The photo shows the results.

The copy on the car was one of the means used to secure the trolley. The copy read in part "We are going to the smartest party in town." "Solve Your Parking Worries, Ride the Street Cars!" The manager of the car company liked the idea so well that he consented almost immediately and when he saw the finished product he insisted that he have photos like the one we are showing here. The photos were published in the circuit organ. The special trolly car covered the entire rail system of Lynchburg, a distance of more than 27 miles and passed through the main street seven times.

In order to draw still more attention to the car, Olinto arranged to have a band sit inside and play tunes as the trolley went along, and for two and a half hours the band played. Whenever the car went, whether suburban or interurban, it drew plenty of attention and comment, so is it any wonder that the picture opened to one of the biggest days the theatre ever had? It is also interesting to note that the traction company will not permit any form of advertising on the front and rear of their cars other than their own slogans and messages, but Olinto's showmanship enabled him to get this space at no cost to the house. The company organized a baseball team and the team plays home games every Saturday, so Olinto arranged to plug their games in the theatre and for this he received the space on the cars of the company. And since every showman knows the value of a tie-up of this sort, all we have to say is that "Fair exchange is no robbery." What do you think about it, Olinto? Let's have some more about what you're doing.
